United States: Mr. Roy W. Howard, of Scripps-Howard Newspapers, former Chairman of United Press Associations, states that he views with the utmost sympathy the proposal to convene a committee of press experts, and that he is prepared to co-operate in its work. He goes on to suggest certain points, which, in his opinion, might be considered by the committee: the application of a uniform system for the reduction of charges for telephonic conversations and of telegraph rates; a uniform "urgent" tariff for telegrams on very important events; copyright of press communications; copyright of, and legislation on, wireless telegraphic press messages; the question of certain extra-territorial rights for journalists (international correspondents); the liberty of international correspondents and complete equality as regards the circulation of official information; the establishment in each country of a committee of journalists to examine all cases of offences committed by foreign correspondents before any steps are taken to expel them; an examination of the measures calculated to encourage the establishment of freely competing agencies.

Henry Wood, the Geneva correspondent of the United Press, also presents certain suggestions on the committee's program of work. He proposes, for example, that the question should be examined of establishing an official system analogous to that in force in the case of diplomatic and consular agents for professional international journalists. The system in question would provide for passport facilities, special rates on railways and exemption from taxation in the country of residence whenever such taxation involves double taxation.

Germany: The Reichsverband der Deutschen Presse of Berlin and the Verein Deutscher Zeitungsverleger state their willingness to co-operate with the committee of press experts as proposed in the assembly resolution.

Costa Rica: As the result of a meeting held by the directors of the most important newspapers and certain other persons in touch with the press, the journalists of Costa Rica state that they are in favor of the convening of a committee of press experts.

Cuba: The Cuban Ministry for Foreign Affairs states that it entirely approves the idea of convening a committee of press experts.

Spain: The Madrid Press Association announces its adherence in principle to the idea of convening a committee of press experts.

Finland: The Ministry for Foreign Affairs states that the Finnish Press Association are of opinion that the League of Nations, through its organizations and in co-operation with the Governments of the various countries, could achieve practical results in matters affecting the press. Among the questions to be examined, the Finnish Associations mention: the improvement of arrangements for the exchange of news and information between the different countries, the reduction of charges for press telegrams and traveling facilities for journalists.

France: The General Committee of French Press Associations, together with the Union of French Journalists, express themselves in favor of the convening of a committee of press experts. The secretary of the Union of Journalists states that an International Conference convened for the purpose of laying the foundations of an International Federation of Professional Journalists' Associations will meet in Paris next spring.

Great Britain: The Executive Committee of the National Union of Journalists in London considers that it is of the greatest importance to establish closer contact between the press of the various countries and to improve in every way the transmission of news and the traveling facilities accorded to journalists. It is, therefore, in favor of the convening of a committee of press experts.

Further, a special committee composed of representatives of all the press organizations in Great Britain has stated that it is in favor of the convening of a committee of press experts under the auspices of the League of Nations.

Guatemala: M. Virgilio Rodriguez Beteta, who was formerly President of the Press Congress of the World, states that the Guatemalan Press is in favor of convening a Committee of Press experts.

Hungary: The Press Bureau of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs at Budapest states that it is convinced that the idea of convening a committee of experts would be favorably received by Hungarian journalists.

Latvia: The Latvian Ministry of Foreign Affairs states that the Latvian Association of Authors and Journalists warmly approves of the resolution of the Sixth Assembly concerning the convening of a committee of press experts.

Netherlands: The Press Associations (journalists and directors of newspapers) have stated that they cordially support the convening at Geneva of a committee of press experts. They propose that this committee should examine certain questions: lower telegraph and telephone rates for press news; meetings of the leading journalists of different countries; constitution of an international press organization with congresses; creation of a permanent organization or a conciliation committee which would draw attention to articles harmful to the preservation of friendly international relations.

Poland: The Warsaw Association of Journalists states that it is willing to assist in every way it can in solving the problem of the co-operation of the press in organizing peace.

Switzerland: The Association of the Swiss Press and the Swiss Association of Newspaper Publishers, in joint committee, have studied the proposal of the Sixth Assembly and have sent a report containing proposals to be submitted to the committee of experts. These proposals concern the transmission of news and professional questions.

Czechoslovakia: The Press Bureau of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs at Prague has sent an additional reply drawn up in agreement with the Association of Czechoslovakia Journalists. This document contains a number of definite suggestions regarding the program of the committee of press experts: improvement of international telegraph and telephone lines; facilities to be granted to journalists in the exercise of their profession; exchange of newspapers; customs duties on paper; postal rates, conditions of carriage and delivery of newspapers, etc.; creation of an international press organization similar to the International Labor Organization, etc.

The Committee of the International Association of Journalists accredited to the League of Nations has communicated to the Secretary-General the results of an inquiry which it has conducted among the members of the Association who regularly follow the work of the League.

The report which the Committee has sent to the Secretary-General shows that the association is favorable in principle to the idea of convening a committee of press experts. The Association lays special emphasis on the fact that the press must preserve absolutely its entire independence of judgment and that journalists should on no account be transformed into propaganda agents for the League.

Among the practical suggestions which the association submits as suitable for examination by the committee, with a view to safeguarding the interests of international journalism, mention should be made of certain measures likely to facilitate the task of journalists accredited to the League of Nations: the improvement of telegraphic and telephonic press facilities by ensuring greater speed and less onerous rates; certain passport and transport facilities to be accorded to journalists, and measures calculated to prevent the double taxation of salaries of journalists residing abroad.

Ads to Flash on Night Skies

Grindell Mathews, discoverer of the alleged "death ray," claims the invention of a projector which he says is capable of utilizing the sky at night as an immense screen for advertising purposes. The apparatus closely resembles in shape a trench mortar. The Mathews invention consists of a secret contrivance which allows the operator to arrest all rays of light simultaneously at any given distance, generally 2,000 feet, when the letters or figures are visible from the sidewalks as about three feet high.

WILD DAYS AT GENEVA TOLD FROM INSIDE

How More Than 300 Newspaper Correspondents Sought to Unravel Diplomatic Snarl at Recent League Meeting Reported by One Who Was There

By GUY HICKOK

(Written Exclusively for EDITOR & PUBLISHER*)*

THE American public's mirrors at Geneva may have reflected recently what appeared to the readers as a riot in an international madhouse. There is no doubt that accounts were conflicting. Nothing true at six o'clock was ever true at seven. But much of the apparent confusion in the minds of the correspondents was due to an equal or greater confusion in the minds of the diplomats, and to the difficult conditions under which the correspondents did their work.

The American newspaper men had no delegation of their own to which to go for news. Chamberlain saw the British, Briand saw the French, and on through the list, each group of newspaper men going to its own national delegation. The Americans were admitted to one of Briand's press conferences, to two or three of Stresemann's and to none of the others.

On the other hand, in the free-for-all scramble for news outside the press conferences, the fact that the Americans had no private axe to grind was perhaps slightly to their advantage.

The news broke in a string of buildings extending for more than a mile around the end of Lake Geneva. They were the Palace of Nations, (League Headquarters) where the council sat sometimes in public and sometimes in secret sessions, the Hotel Beaurivage where the British delegation lived, the Hotel des Bergues where the French were housed, the Metrope containing the Germans and the Japanese, and the Hotel Victoria adjoining the Assembly Hall. Nearly all press messages were filed in the telegraph and wireless rooms of the latter hotel. Cabs were scarce. One could depend only on his legs. Speed was urgent. Of all the delegations the Germans were the most accessible. A reporter climbing the steps of the Metropole could nearly always find somebody about the foyer or lounge, generally Doctor Kiep, the German press officer.

The French and British, with the news constinually breaking against them, were naturally more retiring. One might catch them hurrying in or out, for a brief and often misleading word. But most of the time they kept out of sight and out of reach of telephone or visiting card, covering up with all their energy.

Two out of scores of episodes in the hectic week will serve as examples.

Chamberlain had announced at his evening talk to the British that the Swedish delegate, Dr. Osten Unden, had vetoed the creation of other permanent seats before that for Germany. Chamberlain had been frank and blunt in saying what he thought of Dr. Unden, and most of the British filed the criticism for their papers.

At about eight o'clock Unden's private secretary heard Chamberlain's version from one of the correspondents. He felt the injust. He explained that Sweden knew that if once the big powers began enlarging the Council, numerous national ambitions would be around, and that a hectic intrigue would follow with the big powers trying to pack the council with their respective friends until nothing of the original intention of the Council would be left. He also said that Chamberlain had used what the young Welsh secretary called, after some hesitation "violent language." He said that in his entire political experience Dr. Unden had never been subjected to anything like it.

Told by the first correspondent, the secretary came to the Hotel Victoria where the story was repeated to as many newspaper men as were at the time working out their evening dispatches. These passed the story on to later comers. And as it went from mouth to mouth it grew. At ten-thirty a dozen very much excited British reporters, most of whom had heard the story at second or third hand, were in the Marconi room of the Victoria frantically telephoning the Beaurivage. They got a secretary named

League of Nations in session, press correspondents in gallery.

Stuart who never seemed to know anything of what was going on. A moment later Stuart came back to telephone from the room in which Chamberlain was still dining.

"Sir Austen authorizes me to deny absolutely that he ever menaced or bullied Dr. Unden," said Stuart. Reuter's (the British Official Agency) man had the phone.

"Yes. I understand. Nothing whatever to the story. Quite right sir, a flat denial. . . ." he was saying. The Manchester Guardian was less easily satisfied. He snatched the phone.

"It is not a question of a word" he said. "Denying the words 'menaced' and 'bullied' are mere confirmations of our story. We know that there was a serious disagreement, in fact a row, and we want the British explanation of it. Otherwise the Swedish story will go without comment."

The conversation was full of interruptions. Much of it was incoherent. At one moment Stuart was full of interruptions. Much of it was incoherent. At one moment Stuart said that another secretary had had Dr. Unden on the wire and that Dr. Unden also denied that he had been bullied or menaced.

A Daily Herald correspondent informed Stuart that unless the British newspapermen had a direct explanation from Sir Arthur there would probably be a first class political crisis in London the next morning over the Foreign Minister's treatment of the man who was doing what everybody in England felt should be the work of Sir Arthur. Stuart did not want to interrupt Sir Arthur's dinner a second time.

As the conversation dragged on, becoming more and more incoherent, and the dead-line grew nearer, the newspaper man cut it short by announcing that they were on their way to the Beaurivage, that Sir Arthur must, simply must, see them.

When they got there Sir Arthur almost wept. He pleaded and scolded for more than an hour, so long in fact that one of his collaborators had to remind him that unless he stopped, it would be too late for the newspaper men to get his point of view to London in time for the presses.

Sir Arthur also committed the supreme blunder of instructing 10 Downing street to deny officially that he had ever "menaced or bullied" Dr. Unden. The story of the row burst in London the following morning in all its glory.

Tuesday, March 16, marked the climax of the effort to force Senhor Mello Franco of Brazil to withdraw his veto. Briand feeling that no change was possible, had arranged during the morning with Stressemann that an identical communiqué should be given out by the French, British and Germans declaring that though they were for the moment blocked Locarno would survive and that the affair was only temporarily adjourned.

One or two men learned of this decision at eleven in the morning and cabled it. The Germans had the communiqué printed first, and without handing it out, told its substance to many newspaper men shortly after noon.

At 4:30 the members of the council mounted the stairs to Sir Eric Drummond's office at League Headquarters for a final effort to bring the stubborn Brazilian around. Mello Franco went up as if on his way to a torture chamber. The lobby below was in an uproar from the chatter of 300 newspaper men of all nations.

At six o'clock a telephone message came to the Victoria that Stuart, Sir Arthur's secretary, had come down saying that he was authorized to say for Chamberlain that an agreement had been reached, and that Germany would be admitted. The communiqué was ordered withheld. Naturally the word went on the wire. (One result was that a German paper reached Geneva 24 hours later with a full description of the German delegates' entry into the Assembly Hall.)

Newspaper men at the Victoria immediately taxied to the Palace of Nations for confirmation. They found the uproar greater than ever. Stuart was hurrying from group to group explaining "what he really had said" which was that he had been authorized to say for Sir Austen "that there was still no adjournment" a vastly different story than the first. Unhappily many of those who had heard the first story had gone to the wire-head, and Stuart was explaining to the wrong man.

At 7:30 the Council members came down stairs, forcing their way with difficulty through the mob of men who blocked their passage. All were glum. Most refused to say a word. Some said "no change." Some said "No adjournment." Stuart got a brief word with his chief, and in a corner stammered to a group who pursued him that there was "No change and yet no adjournment."

It was evident that both Mello Franco and Sir Austen were hanging on until the last moment, Chamberlain apparently hoping for a last minute victory.

Later in the evening the communiqué was issued with an "if" in it, which left a loop-hole should Mello Franco still change his mind or receive new instructions from Rio Janiero during the night.

The American morning paper men filed their stories shortly before midnight and then sat up until 6:30 A. M. Swiss time (half an hour after midnight New York time), ready to kill and re-write their stories in case the Brazilian should change.

After two hours' sleep they were up again. The Assembly was called for ten. At nine they heard that Stuart had been to the Metropole to tell the Germans that Sir Austen wanted them to "hold themselves ready for any eventuality." Quite naturally they assumed that either Mello Franco had changed his mind, or that there were signs that he would.

When all of the delegates except those of the Council members had been in the hall for half an hour; and Briand and Chamberlain and Mello Franco were still absent, all nerves were on edge. The wildest rumors were afloat.

At 10:30 the Assembly was called to order. Chamberlain declared that he would defer his remarks until the Brazilian delegate had made a statement. Bets were exchanged in the press gallery as to what the statement would be. Chamberlain sat looking as if he defied Mello Franco to maintain his stand. It was common knowledge that instructions had been issued by Franco and Britain to all their smaller henchmen to denounce Brazil in nasty speeches, loading the responsibility for the failure of the show on Mello Franco. Would he dare hold out.

He did.

And one after another a dozen diplomats obediently climbed up and declared that "after all other obstacles," had been eliminated, this one botched the show, though everybody knew well that had Mello Franco given way numerous others were waiting to make more trouble.

Students of University of Colorado Work on This Trick Paper —Practicality Marks Teaching Methods—Class Told to Crusade Constantly—82 Training for Journalism

By RALPH L. CROSMAN

Director, Department of Journalism, University of Colorado

PRACTICAL working conditions like those of every newspaper office with beats to cover, telegraph copy to handle, heads to write, make-up to plan, policy to determine, crusades to conduct, a force of reporters to direct, editorials to write, five newspapers to compete with, an owner to please, are provided for students "employed" on the Colorado Sun, the practice newspaper of the Department of Journalism of the University of Colorado at Boulder.

"Jobs" on the Sun are the culmination of the technical courses offered by the department, providing a sort of final polishing off and acid test before the embryo newspaper men and women take the plunge into the business. They are as difficult to hold as any newspaper job, which will be attested by three young men who were summarily "fired" by the owner last fall from the positions of managing editor, head of the copy desk, and city editor, and who have not since been able to rise from the ranks of reporters.

Every Tuesday the city room of the Sun, a daily newspaper written and edited once a week and published once each year is a lively place as executives give orders, reporters come and go, telephones ring, typewriters sing their songs. For five hours the grind goes on, while every news channel in the city of Boulder is covered, while telegraph copy is prepared, heads are written, news evaluated, make-up planned, until the final feverish spurt during the last ten minutes before the gong that announces that the presses are about to start.

Students fill all executive and subordinate positions and have complete charge of the Sun. They do what they please without interference until after the Sun is "out," when they then must submit to the criticism, approval or disapproval of the owner, a role filled by the head of the department.

The Sun is put in actual competition with the newspapers of the city of Boulder and with those of Denver. The city editor, with his staff of reporters, is required to cover the entire city of Boulder, and through the courtesy of the Associated Press and the United Press the telegraph editor is able to cover the state, nation and world. Telegraph copy comes from Denver by hand via an interburban electric line and this is supplemented by a fifteen minute telephone call from each of the press associations mentioned, which is taken by a student in the office of the Sun.

The Sun is made up by use of a dummy of standard newspaper size on which are pasted duplicates of heads shown in the style sheet to indicate position and the play to be given the different stories on page one. Under each head the make-up man writes the catch line of the story he intends to run in that position. In this way the class and the instructor can visualize the news judgment that has been used and the typography of the page.

The Sun goes to press at 5:30 in the afternoon by having the dummy of its front page hung on the wall where it is compared by the owner with the front pages of the two Boulder newspapers and of the three Denver newspapers. Besides its front page the Sun also makes up a sport page and a financial page. The Sun is never allowed to go to press without carrying a crusade of some kind. Its slogan is "The Sun Shines That the People May See."

Following the publication, Assistant Professor A. Gayle Waldrop, who spends the afternoon in the city room with the class, takes the copy, the heads and the dummies, and carefully marks them, noting beats by rival papers and those by the Sun, correcting newswriting and head-writing, and compiling a record of the volume of work of each student. The head of the department then takes this material and adds to it his criticism, and the next afternoon the class meets for an hour to be scolded or praised by the owner, depending upon the character of their work on the day preceding.

This practice work on the Sun continues throughout the senior year.

During the spring quarter the class in Newspaper Production, which produces the Sun, and the class in Reporting, are organized into two newspaper staffs, one of which takes the Boulder News-Herald under Professor Waldrop, and the other the Boulder Camera under the head of the department, taking complete charge of the news and editorial departments for one day. Following this test these two classes go to Denver and handle the news and editorial departments of the Rocky Mountain News for one day and night.

The same practicality marks the methods used in teaching News and News Writing, Reporting, Copy Reading, Editorials and Editorial Writing, and Special Feature Articles, subjects that are handled by Professor Waldrop. In these courses there is one lecture a week and two laboratory periods of three hours each, in which practical work is done.

For the purpose of giving students actual practice in crusading as well as a theoretical understanding of the duties and responsibilities of newspapers constantly to fight for the improvement of their communities and for the protection of the people in them, a course in Current Newspaper Problems was introduced this year. The class in this course meets for one and a half hours once a week. It seeks to discover practical problems that need attention at the hands of newspapers, locally, in the state, or in the nation. Having found such a problem, the members of the class are assigned various tasks of investigation until as many of the essential facts as possible have been unearthed. These facts are presented to the class in the form of written reports and when all have been presented the class discusses the situation and then works out a program which it thinks a newspaper should follow. An attack against the charter of the city of Boulder, a study of the treatment by the leading newspapers of the last convention of the American Federation of Labor for the purpose of testing the complaint of organized labor that it does not receive fair treatment in the newspapers, the transportation monopolies in the national parks of the United States, the establishment of an industry near the university where needy students could find employment, are some of the problems that have been handled by this class this year.

Members of the class in News Writing are appointed by the department as correspondents for the daily newspapers of the state and send university news which is strictly of interest in the local communities out to the newspapers assigned to them. During the session of the legislature in 1925, as the result of a suggestion of T. H. Walker, then head of the Denver office, the Associated Press took five thousand men from the department for one week each to help cover the session of the Colorado legislature.

Besides the courses mentioned, students majoring in Journalism are required to take courses in the Newspaper and the Law, History and Ethics, and Community Newspaper Management.

Recognizing that a broad general education is vitally essential to newspaper men and women, care is taken to prevent the overemphasis of the technical phases of Journalism. This is accomplished by rigidly prescribing a course of study for four years instead of using the major and minor system. To earn the degree Bachelor of Arts in journalism a student must take, besides his technical courses, English Language, Mathematics, Science, Latin, Greek; one modern language, Modern European History, Psychology, United States History or American Government, English Literature, Principles of Economics, General Philosophy, Interpretation of Literature and Art.

Graduates during the last two years are now filling important positions on Colorado papers. Eighty-two students are this year training for newspaper careers.

(The above is the 14th article in a series obtained by EDITOR & PUBLISHER interpreting the work of journalism schools to editors of the nation.)

VIRGINIA'S STATE MACHINERY HUMS WITH PUBLISHER-GOVERNOR AT HELM

Harry F. Byrd, Owner of Winchester Star, Wins Approval of Press and Public for Intelligent Leadership—Backing Many Reforms

By GRAHAM ROSENBERGER

EXCEPTING Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York, it can be confidently stated that no other state governor has such a masterful grip on the problems of his state and such amazing popular support as Harry Flood Byrd, the new 38-year old Governor of Virginia. Governor Byrd has owned and edited the Winchester (Va.) Evening Star for 20 years. He also controls the Harrisonburg (Va.) Daily News Record. The short ballot and businesslike administration, striven for in New York since 1913, are considered fait accompli in Virginia after six weeks of Byrd's administration. Almost every newspaper in the state is delightfully hailing "The New Era in the Old Dominion."

Gov. HARRY F. BYRD

Says the Richmond Times-Despatch editorially:

"Such revolutionary measures as the above would have been laughed to death at any previous session of the Legislature, but today they are being passed almost without debate.

"It is hardly an exaggeration to say that Byrd has accomplished in the first ten days of his term of office more than any other Governor has accomplished in four years * * * The Delegates and Senators seem happy to be taking part in the great progressive movement launched by the Governor."

Like Senator Carter Glass, publisher of the Lynchburg (Va.) News, author of the Federal Reserve Bill, and Secretary of the Treasury under President Wilson, Harry Byrd is by training primarily a newspaperman. Glass began his career as a "printer's devil." Harry Byrd himself, a staunch supporter of Glass in the Madison Square Garden convention, began to earn his own living at the age of 15 as manager of the Winchester Star.

After five years, he started the Journal in the adjoining town of Martinsburg, W. Va. He put this on a prosperous basis in three years and then sold it, thereafter centering his attention on his Winchester paper, his apple growing, and politics.

Governor Byrd's friends always speak of his charm of manner. But his proven ability in modern business is perhaps the deeper cause for his extraordinary position of leadership.

Just now, he and his papers are pushing a campaign by which Virginians are buying by popular subscription 600 square miles of virgin forest in the Blue Ridge mountains which will be turned over to the Department of the Interior and become Shenandoah National Park. This picturesque and historic spot is only 8 hours from New York and is within 10 hours by automobile from 40,000,000 of our population.

For ten years Mr. Byrd was president of the company which owned the famous old Valley Turnpike, of Sheridan's Ride and Stonewall Jackson fame. In 1908 the wheels of motor traffic had worn holes in its limestone bed. In 1918 he turned it over to the state as the finest stretch of road in Virginia. As state senator, he ceaselessly fought the battle of good roads, and today, a continuous improved highway circles Virginia, joined by two latitudinal and two longitudinal through trunk lines.

Mr. Byrd was sued for $100,000 in 1923 by the Virginia Highway Contractors Association for criticising its activities. The Court held that the criticism was entirely legal and dismissed the suit, imposing all costs upon the Association. The Highway Contractors Association then gave up their charter and dissolved the corporation.

The Byrd family is one of the oldest and most famous in Virginia, a state well stocked with great families. The new Governor and Lt. Commdr. Richard Evelyn Byrd, arctic explorer, are brothers. Another brother, Thomas B. Byrd, constitutes the third of what is known as the famous "Tom, Dick and Harry" trio. Their ancestor, William Byrd II, was author of "The Westover Manuscripts," the most delightful journalistic record of early colonial Virginia extant. The old mansion, Westover, is still standing near Richmond on the James river.

Even for Virginia, Harry Byrd's political career has been unusual. He entered the State Senate of 1915 at the age of 27 without meeting opposition in either the primary or in the election.

Early in 1922, Mr. Byrd was unanimously elected chairman of the State Democratic Committee to succeed his uncle, the late H. D. Flood. He at once started to aid in the organizing of the Ninth, C. Bascom Slemp's own District. In that year, the Ninth elected a Democratic Congressman for the first time in 20 years. The Democratic majority in the Ninth was increased in the last election and the Ninth elected a Democrat in Presidential year for the first time in 25 years. In the Seventh, Byrd's own District, the Democratic majority was increased from 458 in 1920 to 5,500 in 1924.

On March 13, six weeks after his inauguration as Governor, following a session of harmonious action between Assembly and Governor, the Richmond News Leader, said editorially:

"A complete reorganization of the tax system of the state has been undertaken * * * A beginning has been made for the constitutional amendments that will give Virginia a short ballot. Many superfluous commissioners of revenue have been displaced. A score of important administrative reforms have been made. The financing of the state highway system has been simplified.

"The executive leadership displayed in the formulation of this program has been exhibited throughout the session * * *

"Virginia's young governor has used more skill in his dealings with the General Assembly and has been more consistently a leader than any of his predecessors in nearly half a century. Mr. Byrd may not have known he was doing so, but he has most accurately met the requirements of executive leadership that Woodrow Wilson laid in his Congressional Government and in his notable later utterances on the subject."

In this connection, the writer recalls having seen, a few days before the inauguration, a copy of one of Wilson's books half buried in the papers on Mr. Byrd's newspaper office desk.

Apple growing is the Governor's main interest outside of his newspapers and politics. He has 60,000 trees in his Valley orchards which, in 1913, produced 500 carloads of apples. He organized a company and built a cold storage for 2,000 carloads of apples at Winchester. Today, 50 per cent. of the barreled apples exported from the United States are shipped by Virginia growers, the greater part of them coming from the Shenandoah Valley.

Every Spring around the first of May, the people of "the Valley," as Virginians call it, gather in old Winchester and stage an Apple Blossom Festival. The date is not announced until a few days before the buds are seen to be opening. Then, with great pomp, in a perfumed realm 20 miles wide and 40 miles long, a young lady is crowned Queen of all the pink and white Apple Blossoms.

Governor Byrd will undoubtedly be in his home town this year for the event. And "Johnny" Hoover, city editor of the Winchester Star, will be sure to mention the arrival of "His Excellency Our Harry," on page 1.

The Drug Store of Cincinnati and Great Advertiser

Cora Dow was the first retail druggist in Cincinnati to use newspaper advertising in a big way and as a regular fixed element in the business. From the obscure 'pothecary shop in which she began her remarkable career she developed a chain of modern stores, dominating "downtown Cincinnati" and controlling the most favored neighborhood locations in the residence sections and the suburbs of the city. For years she had little or no advertising competition.

One day an enterprising newspaper solicitor, with many misgivings outlined to her a proposed advertising campaign to be conducted by a group of some twenty of her competitors and to use newspaper space on a schedule almost as great as her own.

"Fine," cried Cora Dow. "The more drug store advertising we have the more drug store merchandise will be sold and the more money we shall all make."

Cora Dow was right about it. Today the life of the drug store business in Cincinnati is newspaper advertising and manufacturers of drug store merchandise have proved the truth of Miss Dow's prophecy.

In common with all other classifications of merchandise in which it is possible to check sales against the bills for white space drug store merchandise, medicines and proprietaries are advertised in the Times-Star more extensively and more profitably than in any other medium.

This lineage in the Times-Star is one-third greater than in the second afternoon paper (Cincinnati is an afternoon newspaper city) and it is more than double the combined lineage of both morning papers, including their Sunday editions.

BARRON WARNS OF WORLD RUSH FOR PROSPERITY

Tells How Freight Business Has Been Transformed for Benefit of Public

DEFINES HIS VIEW OF TRUE PROGRESS

Noted Financial Editor Tells How "Hogging" Freight Cars Was Stopped in Florida

By C. W. BARRON
Editor Wall Street Journal and Other Financial Publications

MIAMI, March 4—The main freight transportation business of the United States has been reorganized the past two years, and the public knows practically nothing of it, although this reorganization has vitally affected every part of the country, every man and every investment, as well as the prices of goods and the rate for money

It is known, in a general way, that there is an American Railway Association formed by the executives of our transportation system, but very little else is known about it.

It has a car service division under which the country is divided into 12 districts. In these districts advisory boards have been organized with representatives from the chambers of commerce, boards of trade, all the shipping and trade organizations, and the public.

Trade demand for future freight equipment can be always known and tabulated and the legitimate need of every freight user is recorded under such a broad organization.

In case of shortage of equipment, the advisory board, associated with and representing all interests, is able to promptly and equitably allot cars to every individual shipper.

Without such supervision the tendency is for every shipper to double his demand upon the railroad and to hold his cars as long as he can.

Every Man Got Needs

Two years ago there would have been a riot for cars in the northwest to enable the shippers to take advantage of $2 wheat but for the Advisory Board of the Car Service Division It allotted every man his legitimate needs, and an enormous export of wheat went through the port of Duluth without a hitch

All the California fruit shipments now take place on the cars allotments under the Advisory Board. Any speculative demand for equipment is quickly spotted and quickly checked Complaints of farmers and shippers of injustice or lack of equipment have absolutely ceased.

What was done to beat the embargo and really accentuated it may be illustrated by the case of a "smart aleck" who shipped in a carload of lumber to Key West to get around the embargo and had it come up over the Florida East Coast to Miami, where it occupied 60 cars of track room or nearly 10 per cent of the 700-car terminal yard room

This was really "boot-leg" lumber that was to be held on the track and sold therefrom But when discovered the car service division men took hold of the matter and this fellow's lumber was taken to Hialeah and dumped

It is this well organized car service division of the American Railway Association, operating through 12 regional advisory boards that has arrested not only car congestion but all business congestion in the United States

It has cleared the tracks and emptied the warehouses It has enabled the factories to ship with regularity that no large stocks of goods are now carried as formerly by merchants and distributors. They can order at will and be sure of prompt receipt of goods

Regulates Prices

This has regulated and reduced the price of merchandise, unlocked stores of money, created our 70 and 80 per cent bank reserves, and enables the United States to be of financial assistance to the whole world.

If such advisory regulation could be applied to all business there would be an enormous saving to the whole country Let another illustration tell the value of co-operation.

When the Florida East Coast Railway was struggling with the problems of double-tracking and maintaining safe transportation, it shipped in from South Carolina two trainloads of Negroes for its construction work. In two days the building contractors had taken every one of them at higher wages. Of course the same building contractors then continued to howl against the railroad because they could not get their shipments promptly through.

But the world was not built in a day. Progress in business organization and the mutuality of service is the work not of days, but of years and generations

Henry Ford would like to see every farmer in the United States with a Ford tractor, a Ford truck and one or two Ford motorcars for the family. He would like to harness all the water power in the country, and he would like to raise everybody's wages. Like so many others, he does not stop to think that financial progress is more important than prosperity

The trouble with Florida today, and it will be the future trouble of many of its $100,000,000 land development propositions, is the failure to recognize the forces of conservation and of real progress.

Freakish Type Styles Wane in San Francisco

By a Staff Correspondent

San Francisco, March 1

"STREAMER" headlines, so familiar in San Francisco journalism, are losing in popularity, according to indications. One leading daily has given the column and two-column captions a six months' trial to the exclusion of longer headlines, and the trial apparently has been satisfactory.

Another leading daily now announces many typographical changes, "to conform to the practice in the best newspapers in this country," because it has been "found that readers prefer balance to freakish stress in type styles," says an announcement. "Absence of startling headlines and lighter, more readable, type are two of the changes effected."

RELIGIOUS SECTS SEEK FREEDOM IN RUMANIA

Organizations May Be Given Status of Clubs—King Is Petitioned

By Cable from Monitor Bureau

LONDON, March 4—The draft of the Rumanian law relegating the churches of the Baptists, Unitarians, and other important religious communities to the status of ordinary clubs and associations came before the Rumanian Senate on March 1, and is expected to be voted on by the end of the current week, according to information received in Baptist circles here. It is understood that the law will then be immediately considered in the Chamber of Deputies, with the view of being passed before next month's general election.

Since these elections are expected to result in the overthrow of the present Rumanian Cabinet, the Baptists have been urging the postponement of the measure in the hope that its successors would be more conciliatory In the meanwhile, a petition has been sent to the King, outlining the disabilities under which the Baptists suffer, and imploring the King "to help them obtain their rights, which were guaranteed them under the former laws"

The petition points out that the majority of Rumanian Baptists, who number 135,000, including children, live in Transylvania

Rights Previously Enjoyed

Under the Austro-Hungarian régime they enjoyed

1. Full liberty of interior and exterior cultural manifestations
2. Full liberty to own movable and immovable property used for the purposes of their cultus, and to build churches and houses of prayer
3. Freedom from taxation on houses of prayer as well as church buildings.
4. Free postage on all official correspondence
5. Freedom from military service for preachers and leaders of their people.
6. The enjoyment of all rights without restriction in public life.
7. Church communities enjoyed the right to be considered "juridical persons."

The Bessarabian Baptists enjoyed similar rights under the Russian Tsar. But after the reunion of these provinces with Rumania, the Baptists have been subjected to a long series of oppressions, the petition continues

List of Disabilities

Among these are "the holding of baptismal services which have been forbidden; churches have been closed, some remaining closed to this day; members have been hindered by the

Boy Scout "Good Turns" Will Win Help Toward College Education

Harmon Foundation Will Give $100 Annual Scholarship in Every Scout Region to the Boy Rendering the Greatest Service to His Community

Special from Monitor Bureau

NEW YORK, March 4—A helping hand toward the higher education of outstanding Eagle Boy Scouts is being extended by the Harmon Foundation, which has established four scholarships of $100 each to be awarded annually in every Boy Scout region in the country. Daily good turns are being accurately recorded by the 24,000 scout masters of the country. The award will go to Eagle Scouts who have most conspicuously served their communities during the year.

No single act of service or heroism, however meritorious, will entitle an Eagle Scout to the award, according to conditions which the by the national council certifying to these facts and attested by scout officials conversant with the facts.

In case a Scout who has received a Harmon Foundation award shall find it impossible to go to college or to follow some course of specialized training in his chosen profession or trade which might be regarded as the equivalent in intent of this provision prior to his attaining the age of 21 years, the entire sum of $100, with accrued interest, shall, on his attaining such age, be forwarded to such Scout, to be used by him in such way as in his judgment will best serve his future advancement in life.

Many Ways to Gain Award

An Eagle Scout may show his deserving qualities in a number of ways according to the same an-

and with public hangars and other facilities, corresponding in turn to docks, warehouses, and piers

A Center of Transport

"Chicago, which by reason of its natural location, its waterway and rail transportation facilities and its commercial, manufacturing and financial power, has a reasonable claim to become the air transport center of the United States, finds itself left behind by such cities as Minneapolis and St. Paul, Milwaukee, Boston, Hartford, Cleveland, Buffalo, Detroit, St. Louis, Springfield and Peoria, Ill.; LaCrosse, Wis.; Moline, Ill.; St. Joseph and Kansas City, Mo.; Oklahoma City, Okla., Fort Worth and Dallas, Tex., Salt Lake City, Utah; Los Angeles, Calif., and Seattle, Wash."

It was revealed that by the time that this company begins flying on the Chicago-Dallas route, 1000 miles in length and said to be the second longest private commercial line in the world, there will have been interested in flying and ground equipment on this route alone between $600,000 and $750,000 It will cost in "out-of-pocket" expense alone $1000 a day to fly this route, this expense being in addition to the general overhead, it was declared.

WATERWAYS' AID WINS FAVOR OF RAILWAY CHIEF

Interdependence of Transport Methods Outlined at Trenton Conference

TRENTON, N. J., March 4 (Special)—Railroad advocacy of deeper waterways and inland ship canals was voiced by C. S. Sims, vice-president of the Delaware & Hudson Company, before the Atlantic Deepet Waterways Association. In urging a deep water canal across New Jersey between the Delaware River and Raritan Bay, he said:

"With deep water ways, cheaper rates can be made than are possible by rail Given favorable conditions, these water rates can be vastly lower. The railway will not suffer, but, rather, will participate in the prosperity which such a development

Chairman Jewett added that the sentiment expressed at the meeting of the executive committee was that the War Department ought not to feel that it had a right to decide the question of compulsory military education, that, apart from all the merits of the case, it was the civil governments not the military, that should determine what the policy of the country should be. President Coolidge was commended for his position discouraging a military attitude and for reminding the army that it is the servant of the people

The correspondence with the War Department grew out of the report on "Military Training in Schools and Colleges of the United States" made by Winthrop D. Lane.

CHAMBER ADOPTS FINANCE AMENDMENT

PARIS, March 4 (AP)—The Chamber of Deputies, by a vote of 302 to 126, today adopted the left Cartel's amendment to the finance bill, extending the obligatory declaration of incomes to a larger number of taxpayers. The amendment was opposed by the Finance Minister, Paul Doumer who, however, did not pose the question of confidence.

Both M. Doumer and M. Lamoureux, reporter of the finance committee, exhorted the Chamber to speed up its deliberation on the finance bill, the former saying, "Dangerous days are approaching. The danger is increasing daily, and you will see what the country thinks about it."

NEW YORK STATE ENFORCEMENT BILL FINDS STRONG SUPPORT

Many Organizations Send Advocates to Legislative Hearings on Wales-Jenks Dry Measure

ALBANY, N. Y., March 4 (Special)—The moral obligation of New York State to pass a state enforcement act comprised the main argument of the dry forces who assembled in full strength at the hearing before the Joint Senate and Assembly Codes committees late yesterday afternoon to urge a favorable report on the proposed Wales-Jenks state prohibition bill. Senator Caleb H. Baumes (R.) of Newburgh, committee chairman, presided.

Hundreds of representatives of the dry forces thronged the Assembly chamber, far outnumbering the wets. The dry attack was led by Mrs Ella A Boole, state leader of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; Orville S. Poland, counsel for the Anti-Saloon League; Arthur H. Davis, state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League; Mrs. John Moorhead, representative of the New York branch of the American Association of University Women, Mrs. Chauncey J Hamlin, representative of the Erie County League of Women Voters, and Samuel M. Cavert, representing the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America Mrs Samuel J. Beno acted as chairman of the delegation.

Assemblyman Jenks asserted that the purpose of the proposed state prohibition act was to place New York State among the loyal states of the Union. "It is the moral obligation of the State to provide legislation backing up the constitutional amendment which it has ratified," he said. "New York State must be put shoulder to shoulder with the Federal Government in enforcing prohibition"

President Ends His First Year With Added Prestige

Needs Political Strength In Corn-Belt and Irrigation Areas, Strong Elsewhere

By FREDERIC WILLIAM WILE

WASHINGTON, March 4—Calvin Coolidge has been President a year in his own right, and, by common admission, remains unusually strong in public esteem

The observation most frequently encountered, and one that sums up the situation, is that if there were a Presidential election tomorrow, and Coolidge were a candidate, there is probably not a man in the country—Republican or Democrat—who could stand against him.

As the second half of the President's first full term approaches, conviction grows that Mr. Coolidge will be a candidate to succeed himself in 1928. Given present conditions, there's not a politician in the United States whose judgment is worth while, who does not frankly

Democrats have been about as ineffective in blowing up the so-called "Coolidge myth," as the Norris insurgent vendetta

"Economy," the star ballad in the Coolidge repertoire, has been sung during his "first year" with increasing effectiveness by the President These ides of March find tax reduction in effect, under his direction, as the country at large believes.

The farmers, who with few exceptions, don't pay federal taxes, like Coolidge economy because it is setting an example in economical government to states and counties, to which farmers do pay taxes, and are paying burdensomely

Ruins of Old Rome Fast Disappearing

By the Associated Press

Chicago, March 4

COMMERCIAL enterprises and the elements are destroying the ruins of imperial Rome so fast that within a short time its buildings will be but a memory, Miss Esther B. Van Deman, associate of the Carnegie Institute, told a University of Chicago audience here.

"Archeologists should be trained," she said, "to visit Rome and make interpretations of the structures now standing, because within 50 years there will be few records available. The famous aqueducts built by Roman emperors which have stood for centuries will have entirely disappeared in half a century."

OIL COMPANY'S EARNINGS CLIMB

Standard of Indiana's Net Profit Exceeds $50,000,000 —Huge Storage Revealed

Special from Monitor Bureau

CHICAGO, March 4—Net earnings for 1925 on invested capital of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana after all charges, including federal income taxes had been deducted were $52,332,648 15, or 14 37 per cent as compared with $40,788,368.95 for 1924 or 12.27 per cent, it was announced at noon today by Robert W. Stewart, chairman of the board, at the annual meeting of stockholders

The balance sheet as of Dec. 31 1925, compared with Dec. 31, 1924 shows an improving condition and optimism for the future permeates the organization. Vast stocks of supplies are recorded as valued at $66,039,704 89 as compared with $50 660,382 12 the previous year, showing a gain of $15,429,322.77 in value of stocks on hand and merchandise It is stated that the company has been storing up products and that there is a greater quantity of every type of the company's products now on hand than has previously been stored

Computation of earnings and price of Standard Oil of Indiana stock shows an earning of $5 85 per share as compared with $4 56 a share last year

Real estate holdings have increased during the year to $32 557 - 541.69 from a value last year of $29 - 401,932 22, a gain of $3,155,609 47, the balance sheet shows.

Gain of $12,605,985.64 in value of the plant not including depreciation charges, brings this figure to $152 - 245,727.50, the report reveals. Investments in other companies were increased to $129 762,222 01 from a figure of $126 170,968 42 last year Cash on hand now is $35,133,394 27 compared with $21 288,275 43 a year ago a gain of $13,845 108 84

For many years the Standard Oil Company of Indiana did not even publish a balance sheet. Last year one was issued, but it did not reveal the net earnings, and it was necessary for the stockholders to figure them out through their own efforts This year the company indicated further progress in relations with stockholders by revealing the net earnings on the balance sheet, comparing them with the previous year

CHAMBERLAIN DENIES PLEDGE GIVEN TO FRANCE

Foreign Secretary Says He Sought to Learn M. Briand's Viewpoint

GERMANY'S ENTRANCE TO BE UNIMPEDED

It Is Pointed Out That England Had Supported Spain's Claim

LONDON, March 4 (AP)—Speaking warily and admitting "the delicacy of the occasion," Sir Austen Chamberlain, the Foreign Secretary, told the House of Commons this afternoon that England would not oppose a unanimous agreement of the other members of the League of Nations Council to award a permanent seat to some nation besides Germany

In his promised outline of British policy regarding enlargement of the Council, Sir Austen declared that British representatives at the coming Geneva meetings would be guided by the principle of doing nothing to jeopardize the results of Locarno. They must be parties, he avowed, to nothing "which would make it impossible for Germany at the last moment to enter the League when she presented herself at its doors"

Replying to a question by the former Premier, Mr Lloyd eGorge, Sir Austen made the most explicit statement that has yet been given concerning the interview he had in January with the French Premier, Aristide Briand. He admitted that he sought at that time to learn the views of the French Government and the reasons for which they held them, but he said his first words to M. Briand were that he could give no pledge as to the attitude of the British Government until he had consulted his own Government

International Controversy

Sir Austen said he had watched the progress of the international controversy regarding the Council of the League with grave anxiety, and that if the more extreme forms of the controversy represented the minds of the nations, one might take a gloomy view of the situation However, he was encouraged to hope for better things from the moderation of the statements of representatives of the nations most closely concerned, whether German, French Belgian or Polish. He declared that the British Government shared the widely felt regret that these issues had arisen now, but he would not say it was the fault of anybody It was, perhaps, inevitable, he added

Under no circumstances, he continued, would Great Britain be a party to trying to recreate in the Council of the League the camps of opposing forces which were the curse of Europe before the Great War He emphasized the futility of any such attempt

Sir Austen declared it was essential that the rule of unanimity should be preserved if for no other reason than to prevent that kind of intrigue and to prevent the Council being denatured in order to obtain a particular decision He said that he and the Government shared the widely felt regret that large issues regarding the composition of the Council should arise on this occasion Great Britain he said did not raise the issues, nor instigate anyone to raise them at this time

Accepted German Proposal

Since he had been attending meetings of the League, Sir Austen avowed, he had sought, as far as was in his power to postpone these larger issues until a later date He had accepted a German proposal that representatives of the Reich hold discussions with him and the representatives of other interested nations before the Council meeting opened at Geneva

At the same time he went on, it would not be assumed that the original form of the Council should never be varied Its constitution was a matter for common discussion Great Britain's object was that the membership of the Council should be kept within manageable bounds, so that for practical working purposes it would be an effective instrument

On the other hand it was equally important that it should be sufficiently numerous to make it fairly representative of the whole body of states in the League and to give it authority Any increase in the number of permanent seats must be examined with very particular scrutiny Sir Austen said Great Britain he declared had not taken the view that there should be no additional permanent seats except on the entry of Germany, the United States or Russia

Spain's Claim Supported

Discussions on that point had occurred before he asserted Four years ago Great Britain supported the claim of Spain, and he saw nothing that would make the British Government change its attitude now toward the claim "in principle" although he was not now dealing with the time of granting such a claim

Sir Austen said there were some states not qualified to hold permanent seats, but whom it might be desirable to have in the Council. He said Great Britain's "guiding principles" were to do nothing to jeopardize the results of Locarno or that gave any power the right to say it had been unfairly treated or placed in a position with consequences it did not understand, that additions to the Council must be closely watched and that they could only occur if the whole Council were unanimous in their support

If, however, the whole Council

RIGHT OF NEWSPAPERS TO COPYRIGHT NEWS ITEMS STILL IN DOUBT

Maze of Technicalities Involved Has Often Confused the Courts, Writer Shows—Chicago Tribune-A. P. Case Cited

By LOUIS F. JORDAN

ARE news items copyrightable?

The answer to this question is shrouded in some doubt.

With all the books and magazine articles pertaining to the subject of the United States Copyright Law, a loophole such as that suggested by the foregoing title, invariably comes to light.

Under the Federal Constitution, Congress is empowered "To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive right to their respective Writings and Discoveries." And, in order to determine an author's right to copyright, it must first be determined whether a given writing promotes the progress of science and the useful arts.

Is a news item such a writing that it comes within the protection of the Constitutional provision?

In the Chicago Tribune Company v. Associated Press, 116 Federal, 126, it is said: "The term Science cannot, with any propriety be applied to a work of so fluctuating and fugitive a form as that of a newspaper or price current, the subject matter of which is daily changing, and is of mere temporary use."

The Court in the Chicago Tribune case, based its decision on the interpretation of the word Science in the Constitution. And, other courts have held that: "There can be no copyright, as an entirety, of an ordinary newspaper which is composed in large part of matter not entitled to copyright protection," and that, "a mere news item is not copyrightable." But, under the present copyright law, newspapers are copyrightable as books. The question which concerns this analysis is: Does the present law allowing newspapers to be copyrighted as books, bring news items within the protection of the Constitution?

The Tribune case is of sufficient interest, it is believed, to bear further quotation and a statement of facts. "The Chicago Tribune," states the opinion of the Court, "attempted to copyright, under contract, some special telegraphic matter of the London Times, by depositing in the Chicago Post Office, on the evening before publication, the general title of the newspaper, with serial number and date, and by like deposit, immediately upon publication, of copies of the newspaper, each addressed to the Librarian of Congress."

Judge Seaman, who delivered the opinion of the Court declared that it is questionable whether a copyright can thus be secured by a newspaper; but as the defendant, the Associated Press, "Did not copy from the Tribune, but directly from the London Times after its publication in England, and as the matter published by the Times and Tribune was not identical, there was no infringement, nor was any copyright thus obtained."

The case of Associated Press v. International News Service, 245 Fed. 244, is conspicious for its apparently just ruling and its broad significance to the newspaper profession. In this case, the Court decided that an injunction would lie against copying news from published editions of newspapers until its commercial value as news has passed away.

"Assuming now the existence at some time," declared the Court in sustaining this view, "of some property right in plaintiff and to its news, the qualities producing exchangeable value may be noted. Regularity and reliability, the fruit of organization and expenditure, are, of course, necessary, but all this is vain unless the news is fresh, early, and, if not always first in point of time, as prompt as any. Time is of the essence; and the basic question on this branch of the discussion is how long does the property quality endure in news. The true line of decision is indicated by the conclusion of the court in the Critic case—that 'the information will not become public property until the plaintiff has gained his reward'."

And yet, other courts have decided that the property right in news items does not preclude another person "from making an independent collection of the same facts or information and using it as his own."

The courts have been puzzled by the Constitutional clause declaring, "Writings which promote Science and the useful Arts are entitled to copyright protection." The majority of decisions protecting news items from infringement, have not been based on the copyright law, but rather on the ground of protecting property against impairment of its value.

"In the case of news items, market quotations, and the like," states an authority, "while the courts have struggled to protect them on principles of common law literary property, and have invoked in aid of the effort the doctrines of breach of contract or breach of trust, the true view has finally been recognized to be, that such news service is property, and is to be protected as property against any act impairing its value as such; but that it is not literary property, and hence is not destroyed and dedicated to the world by mere publication."

But, notwithstanding the above statement, which is certainly a just statement of the cause of the modern newspaper and the modern agencies of news gathering, our courts have been confused between the rule of unfair trade on the one hand, and the Constitution on the other; and, in the maze of the technicalities of the law governing the two diverse principles of construction, have ofttimes decided, as in the Chicago Tribune case, that news items do not promote science and the useful arts.

Carpenter Named Chairman of Drive Committee Which Meets Saturday

Announcing that John W. Carpenter, vice-president of the Texas Power and Light Company, has been named chairman of the "Advertising Texas" committee to raise $500,000 to advertise the state nationally, James P. Simpson of Dallas, president, Tenth District, Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, has called his directors to meet Saturday in Waco.

Besides hearing a report on plans for the state-wide advertising fund campaign, the directors will discuss an All-Texas train to the Philadelphia A. A. C. W. convention in June.

Tablet To Star's Founder

Incidental to the celebration last week of the 50th anniversary of the Long Island City (N. How IOWA Pigs are running calamity howlers out of gas–

LAST fall when Iowa harvested more corn than ever before in history, the cash price dropped and there were great cries of distress throughout the land.

But what the crepe hangers seemed to forget was the trusty Iowa pig.

In fact, very little of Iowa's corn is sold at the cash price. About eighty per cent of it is marketed "on the hoof."

High priced cattle and hogs are eating up the low priced corn, and adding greatly to the buying power of Iowa.

Conservative estimates state that this corn crop is worth 100 million dollars more than that of a year ago—when we consider what proportion of it goes to market in the form of pork and beef.

And so it goes.

Year after year, Iowa's prosperity advances. Not only in agriculture. The output of her factories in 1925 was estimated at $775,000,000.00—greater than the value of her field production.

Iowa people are about the most stable, the most typically American in the nation.

Iowa has smallest percentage of illiteracy.

Iowa is among the very highest states in per capita wealth. There are approximately two bank accounts for every family.

This consistent, permanently prosperous market should now be doubly interesting to you, because of our "Iowa plan."

Systematic, uniform cooperation in marketing your goods—in every section of the state—is provided by this association of 28 leading Iowa daily newspapers.

The circulation thoroughly covers the state. Our cooperation will thoroughly cover your problem.

Let us help you.

BAD PRACTICES IN SEVERAL BUSINESS FIELDS "CLEANED-UP" BY B. B. B.

Managing Director Greene Cites Year's Progress in Improving Advertising Standards at Annual Meeting of Directors in New York This Week

SUBSTANTIAL strides have been made during the past year by the National Better Business Bureau, Inc., of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, Edward L. Greene, managing director, reported to the bureau's board of directors at a meeting held March 31 at the Union League Club, New York.

Florida's financial shysters, who used the boom period to unload worthless bogus securities and land, have been driven from that state, he said, as a result of the bureau's activities. Improved advertising standards, suggested by the trade relations department of the bureau, have been adopted by the outboard motor and battery industries. An unhealthy condition in the radio advertising field has also been corrected, he claimed.

Mr. Greene's review of the year follows:

"We want particularly to stress the group work done in various industries through our newly organized trade relations department.

"Outstanding instances of that work during the last 15 months have been the series of conferences held in the outboard motor and battery industries. Both have been in the nature of tests and results have justified the basic reasons which prompted the original institution of this operation. In many ways the two fields were analogous. There was much to criticize in the advertising of both. In each industry keen competition had bred a disregard for accurate statement which left its effect on sales and advertising power through the consequent public doubt and suspicion. Meetings of manufacturers' representatives of the trades were held and out of these meetings grew sets of advertising standards to which the conferring parties have adhered with praiseworthy tenacity. This action on the part of legitimate business has driven the 'gyps' in either field into the open and made it necessary for them to do one of two things: to clean up or get out of business.

"The success which has attended this program has stimulated a decision to carry it further into other industries. At the moment it is proposed to operate in the same fashion in the bedding and electrical housekeeping appliance industries.

"Throughout, a standard form of procedure has developed. The first step taken by the National Bureau is to make a survey of all the advertising and selling practices which exist in a given field; second, if the findings uncovered point to the necessity for a revision of these practices and advertising claims, the bureau approaches the leaders in the industries concerned and enlists their aid and endorsement. If any advertising and selling code has previously been adopted, the code is examined, its sound clauses kept, and the ineffective parts dropped.

"A program of operation is then laid out and placed before the representatives of the trade with the aid of a contact committee selected from the manufacturers and distributors involved. The bureau is then ready to go ahead and embark on its plan of operation.

"The operating procedure is divided into several parts; one essential is the cooperation of the industry as a whole in forwarding information on various advertising copy as it appears. It is also necessary to take up specific cases which arise out of reports emanating from this same source. The bulletin and publicity schedules are planned and timed so as to form a valuable adjunct to this work. For those who ignore or violate the code, there are the drastic remedies of publicity and prosecution. For those who observe it, there is the added protection which they get from the elimination of the faker and 'gyp.'

"The work in the furniture field, which has had for its latest culmination the Federal Trade Commission's endorsement of the National Better Business Bureaus 'Name the Woods' standards, has reached this point through the methods outlined above. So, too, has the bureau functioned in the field of radio advertising and selling.

"In the financial field," Mr. Greene continued, "the work has advanced materially over that done on previous years. The Florida land boom and recent stock market activity have naturally brought in their wake the financial shyster who used the boom period as an opportune time to unload his own worthless and bogus securities and land. The November, 1925, the National Bureau and the 40 odd local Better Business Bureaus have maintained an investigational staff in Florida which kept the whole movement informed of the operations of real estate tricksters in the South. At this time it is closely following their exodus to such northern fields as Long Island and Cape Cod.

"Both in the field of trade relations and financial work, the National Bureau has carried on a steadfast policy of publicity without which the work would be ineffective.

"Among the contact points now reached are more than 1,000 newspapers all over the country, women's clubs in every state, government farm extension workers in the rural districts, and instructors in many schools and colleges.

"The classified advertising service rendered to some 1,200 American and Canadian newspapers has stimulated the demand for such information. At the meeting of Eastern Better Business Bureau Managers this week, measures were discussed which will make this service eminently more valuable to the newspaper publisher who wants to keep his columns clean. The schedule maintained in this service since September in 1925 has called for the issuance of 15 bulletins a week. Hundreds of letters from newspapers in all parts of North America present conclusive evidence that this service was needed and has been effectively rendered."

PROGRESSIVE METHODS AID RETAIL STORES

Southern Merchants Find Constructive Advertising Better Than Defensive Publicity Against Canvassers, Says H. W. Davie

A report as interesting to newspaper business managers as to retail merchants was made last week by H. W. Davie, of the Hunter Manufacturing and Commission Company, who returned last week to New York from a business trip through the South and Southwest, during which he was in close contact with conditions in the dry goods and allied trades. In addition to finding a general note of optimism, he declared merchants had discovered that constructive advertising was better than defensive publicity aimed against the door-to-door canvasser.

"I could not fail to notice certain very marked contrasts in the attitude of the trade toward the leading problems of the day," he said, "nor could I fail to feel a certain fundamental strength in the situation as it exists today in the dry goods business.

"Just about a year ago, I visited the same territory. At that time there was a general feeling of pessimism toward things in general. Hand-to-mouth buying was worrying everybody, the canvasser was making the retailer nervous, and things generally were more or less perturbed. Today a definite note of optimism is found.

"Last year we were told on every hand, 'The canvasser is ruining the dry goods business.' Many defensive measures were being taken. Legislation was being sought to repress his activities, and campaigns asking the public to buy from the retailer were being sponsored by local merchants. Everybody seemed to be seeking to hold the canvasser in check, main with a flood of words.

"In a year a striking change has cor about. The consensus of opinion no seems to be that the canvasser h helped the retailer more than he h hindered, for the reason that he has ga vanized the dry goods business into mo effective selling and merchandisin Manufacturer, wholesaler and retail have all become more aggressive. R tailers tell me that legislation and d fensive publicity measures soon prov ineffectual. It was only when they b gan to tell the public in a constructi way about the values they offered a the services they rendered that real pro ress began. Once again the attack prov to be the best defense.

"Another singular thing is happenin Retailers tell me that, before buying fro the canvasser, women are now comi to the store to compare values. The r sult is generally in favor of the sto The canvasser is leaven in this situ tion. He helps stir up trade. There a I find, definite indications that the 'direc from-the-factory-to-you' argument h lost its appeal. The level of prosperi is high. People are enjoying the highe real wages of all times, and the tone retail business is good."

NEWS MEN WIELD GREAT POWER FOR PEACE, FRENCH AMBASSADOR SAYS

Henry Berenger Tells Correspondents of Duty to Discredit False and Exaggerated News at Foreign Writers Annual Dinner

By HAROLD BUTCHER

"WE work together, journalists and ambassadors, in the interest of peace and civilization," said Senator Henry Berenger, French Ambassador at Washington, principal guest at the eighth annual dinner of the Association of Foreign Press Correspondents held on Wednesday evening in the Hotel McAlpin, New York. On this occasion Dr. A. M. Nawench, of Czas, Poland, was installed as president succeeding Mr. A. Arbib-Costa, of La Tribuna, Rome.

"I adore journalism," said Ambassador Berenger, himself a journalist. "I do not know a higher vocation in the world. I should say willingly as another Frenchman, René de Chateaubriand, ambassador, peer of France, academician, who, when asked by a tribunal what his profession was, answered the judges proudly, 'Journalism.'

"News from you can make fortunes, and empires rise or fall," the Ambassador told the correspondents, "but different news from you may encourage men and resuscitate nations. Therefore, one may ask what would become of the world if, knowing the full extent of your powers, you did not also know the full extent of your responsibilities? Thank God, you are animated by the spirit of peace which today moves on the surface of the world and inspires chancellories.

"As journalists and ambassadors we must do nothing inconsiderately. Before telegraphing news or even a rumor, we must weigh the effect which our dispatch may have upon those who receive it. We must remember that premature or exaggerated information is capable of bringing on not only a conflict but even a war. In giving information we seek to increase the knowledge of those whom we address without exciting their passions.

"There are many things which journalists must say which would not be well for me to say. An ambassador who plays the role of a journalist only increases the difficulties among continents and peoples without adding to his personal prestige or that of the government which he represents. A diplomat should above all keep shut the mouth which the journalist should open for the benefit of the crowd. More diplomacy is often required to open this mouth than to keep it shut. In this respect I know journalists who are past masters.

"In the present relations between America and the other continents many occasions of misunderstanding or bitterness have arisen or are arising. The responsibility of dispelling these clouds and sweetening this bitterness is ours as journalists and diplomats. The United States has become the vital centre of this planet. In New York beats the great business heart of the world. And the Capitol at Washington is that of 48 states, several of which are greater than certain countries of old Europe. A civilization has been born that surpasses many others in its power and vitality. One of the greatest chapters in the story of humanity is being written today on these shores."

The Ambassador was introduced by Professor Charles A. Downer, of the College of the City of New York, who said that in the settlement of the French debt some recognition should be made of France's tremendous sacrifices during the war; and by Mr. P. W. Wilson, who in the course of his speech also drew attention to the fact that Mr. Percy S. Bullen has now completed twenty-one years as New York correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph.

Dr. A. M. Nawench greeted Ambassador Berenger in French, and they then kissed in French fashion.

Leon Rothier, French tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, sang the "Marseillaise."

The officers appointed to serve with President Nawench are:—Vice-presidents, F. Douglas Williams, Reuters, Ltd., London; and E. K. Moy, Peking Daily News; secretary and treasurer, Sydney J. Clarke, London Daily Telegraph; assistant secretary, Harold Butcher, Liverpool Echo; committee, A. Algara, El Universal, Mexico; A. Arbib-Costa, La Tribuna, Rome; Mrs. Albert Boni, Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant, Holland; Percy S. Bullen, London Daily Telegraph; W. W. Davies, La Nacion, Buenos Aires; Leonce Levy, Le Matin; P. W. Wilson, special correspondent, Great Britain.

BAN ON LIBERTY LIFTED

Magazine Was Excluded Because of Articles About Queen Alexandria

Liberty, weekly magazine published by the owners of the Chicago Tribune and the New York Daily News, has been removed from the list of publications barred from Canada, it was announced March 26, by the Department of Customs and Excise in Ottawa.

It was banned six weeks ago after it had published articles about the late Queen Mother Alexandria, which the department considered libelous.

NEWSPRINT GLUT FEARED

Canadian Firms Apprehensive of Rapid Increase in Production

That Canadian newsprint manufacturers are becoming concerned over the rapid way in which the industry is expanding and feel that some steps should be taken to control expansion is indicated by the Montreal Star, which reports that a get-together meeting of manufacturers was held in Montreal last week to discuss the situation.

"It is no secret in the industry," says the Star, "that the rapid increase in the introduction of new machines for making newsprint by various companies and consideration of such steps by others, has been causing some of the most prominent people concerned a good deal of anxiety over the possible effects of the rapid expansion.

"It is evidently feared that this may be carried on indefinitely and create a difficult problem unless a better understanding can be arranged by the different companies. Some of the leaders have been willing for some time to reach an understanding but some executives have been slow in displaying a tendency to co-operate. . . .

"The price of newsprint fell from $70 last year to $65 this year, largely as a result of overproduction, and if this goes on unrestrained, still further unsettlement is feared unless some measure of success attends efforts to regulate the situation."

Gas Companies Urged to Advertise

A co-operative advertising campaign by all gas manufacturing companies in New England to increase consumption of their products in that territory was advocated by Maj. Patrick F. O'Keefe, president of the P. F. O'Keefe Advertising Agency, Inc., of Boston, before a meeting of the New England Association of Commercial Gas Managers in that city, March 26. In explaining the benefits of such a campaign, Major O'Keefe advised that it be linked up with the advertising programs of the individual gas companies and with the appliance concerns.

DAILY CHOOSES CARRIERS WITH SALES ABILITY TO ADD NEW READERS

Careful Selection of Boys For Routes Eliminates Complaints and Builds Sales, Lancaster Circulator Declares

By MURRAY C. BECK
Circulation Manager, Lancaster (Pa.) New Era

JUST as a successful farmer selects his seed to insure a good crop, provided other elements are in his favor, so do we select our boys for our routes and as the farmer selects his seed before planting we select our boys before we have a job to offer them as a carrier for our papers. The fact just stated may seem ridiculous for surely all circulators select their boys, but do they all select them with the idea of developing them into salesmen of their papers?

The only way to determine whether a boy will make the good salesman is to observe how he sells himself. First of all I will explain by the process of elimination and there are two boys who never get their names on my list of applicants; they are the fellows who bring one of their parents to do the talking and the fellow who wears his hat while at my desk, for the one has no sales talk and the other has poor manners. Those whom I do select for my routes must be neat and clean, they must answer my questions promptly and have reached a grade in school in proportion to their ages. A boy also must be of good character, and I can tell that fairly accurately after I see his face and talk with him for five minutes. I do not want references or recommendations, for I can tell more about a boy by using my eyes for ten minutes than all the recommendations he can carry. We do not have a great turnover in our carrier department. Some boys have been carrying our papers as long as five years on the same route, while as many as five boys have been on one route in a year. This, however, is the exception for our changes are less than one a week among our force of 113 carriers.

We file the names of our applicants according to the routes they live on rather than alphabetically or according to street and number, because when we place a new boy on the route we select one from our file who lives on or near the route in question. Then we have a representative on that route who knows the people whom he is serving and also knows all the streets and numbers. And, another important feature, he is usually dealing with his kind of people.

So much for the selection and placement of boys on our routes, and I maintain that they are the most important elements.

We use a carrier as a salesman because he lives near the people on his route and most of them are usually his friends. When he approaches them with his sales talk they are ready to listen to him and feel kindly toward him and are more liable to subscribe from him than from a stranger. Then, too, these subscribers obtained by the boy will go to him with their complaints, if any, rather than reporting him to the office. If he is the proper kind of a boy he will remedy these complaints. These friends of his, with whom he has had business transactions, will usually take the paper as long as he is on the route.

In soliciting business we allow our boys to offer the same premiums as are offered by the regular solicitors. That method is quite an asset to them. We also use contests to induce the boys to get new business, offering prizes for the winners. A large percentage of the boys will become active and turn in a large number of starts.

We give the boys but little individual training in salesmanship. In fact we merely tell them their duties and impress on their minds that they are cogs in our great machine and that we will be greatly benefitted by an increase in circulation; that they can get us part of this circulation, as one of their duties, and that they would not be working for our interests unless they tried to get us as many new starts as possible.

Another method of training is by short snappy and interesting talks, followed by an entertainment of some sort. Another method of training is through a little house organ, published for the interests of our carriers.

SOUTHERN EDITOR DIES

A. M. Carpenter of Fayetteville (N. C.) Observer

Albert M. Carpenter, 54, editor of the Fayetteville (N. C.) Observer, died March 24, after an illness of three weeks' duration.

Mr. Carpenter came to Fayetteville last October from Spartanburg, S. C., where he had been editor of the Daily Sun for eight years.

Mr. Carpenter's work in South Carolina brought him much recognition. He was once described by the late Ben Tillman as the best newspaper man in the state.

Mr. Carpenter was born August 1, 1872, in Anderson, S. C. His first work was with the Anderson Journal. Later he was editor of the Greenwood Index and the Anderson Daily Mail. While in Anderson he was also secretary of the Chamber of Commerce and started the movement for the establishment of the Anderson college for Women, a Baptist institution, raising $100,000 for this purpose.

In the summer of 1907 he went to Europe as secretary to the National Immigration commission. In 1911 he accepted an appointment as librarian of the library of Congress, in which office he spent nearly seven years. During the World War he spent sixteen months in Camp Wadsworth as special correspondent for many metropolitan papers.

Optometrists Urge Larger Type

By using a little larger type in news columns, editors can do more daily than any other body of laymen to save people's eyesight and delay the need for glasses, declared S. D. Baker, president of the convention of New England optometrists held in Boston this week. His assertion was made in a telegram to the editor of the New York Times. He noted with approval the use of larger type by that newspaper.

FOR advertising and job composition—
The Ludlow system of matrix composition provides new, clear-cut printing faces on slugs for every job. Its speed, versatility, 6 to 60 point range in a wide variety of quality typefaces, including bold and extended, ranks it first for display and job work. Because you set matrices, not type, you secure your slug lines immediately, never running short of sorts for any job.

BETTER WORLD SERVICE

IT is gratifying to learn that the proposed assembly of press experts from most of the nations of the world, under the auspices of the League of Nations, is an assured project for the year. The agenda will doubtless be prepared during May and June, expert foreign correspondents as well as newspaper proprietors advising the representatives of the League.

This will be the first international assembly of press technicians in history. No matter what agenda shall be prepared for it the conference will respond to this keynote: The ideals of international progress depend for realization upon an informed public opinion which is only possible through a free and efficient world press.

Any technical device that facilitates the free flow of authentic news deserves the encouragement of progressive governments. All the devices of governments that inhibit free press reporting or prevent discussion of public affairs, particularly censorship, are evils to be met and disposed of through organized effort. No conference of journalists that is subject to controls of the League of Nations, or any nation, or any organized governmental policy, can effect desirable objects, nor will it be acceptable to the free press. On the basis of complete freedom of action, the Geneva conference can accomplish rich results for the press and for the public it serves. That is the League of Nations' proposal, as we understand it. The League merely acts to assemble a representative conference of journalists who come voluntarily to discuss measures intended to make news transmission more responsible and more economical in both cost and delivery. Popular governments and worthy causes would be the natural beneficiaries.

The suspicion in some quarters that the press conference at Geneva is a move to organize a semi-official press for the League's own propaganda is, in our opinion, wholly false. The subject has been clearly and openly discussed and that the autonomy and independence of the press are of first importance has been expressly stated. This is not only manifest, but in the nature of things must be the attitude of as penetrating a body of men as those who sit for the governments at Geneva, for no international body of press experts can be assembled, much less work out a program, without satisfactory guaranty of independence. This then, is the feat that seems to have been accomplished. Great are the possibilities for benefits for the world press and its public.

Estimated 40,000 local retail grocers fail annually; all admire chain store methods, but just try to get them into a co-operative advertising campaign.

BUSINESS COPY WRITERS

IT is not so much the principle of advertising that perplexes the average local merchant, as it is to prepare selling copy. Expert merchants often are utterly bewildered when it comes to writing a selling appeal. The best they can do is to employ a copy writer or assign some clerk and expensively experiment with his efforts.

The day is coming in American newspaper work when every publisher will train young writing talent for local advertising preparation and consider this department as important as any other feature of the business. There are many problems involved, of course, but the principle is there, plain to see: it is not only poor business for the newspaper to permit local merchants to waste space on unscientific appeals but opportunity is lost to strengthen the ties that bind a newspaper to the trading community.

Copy service is valuable and should be charged for. It need not make the newspaper assume unnatural advertising risks. The simple proposition that a newspaper is prepared to furnish to an advertiser the services of a skilled copy writer is all that is wanted in the average office to cover the present absurd condition that occasional logical prospects do not take space because they do not know how to make it pay.

Cheapest commodity in the entire commercial circuit—newspaper advertising, because it gives the biggest return on the smallest investment.

He Is Risen!

And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, He said, Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, He gave up the ghost.

And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jesus.

And it came to pass, as they were much perplexed thereabout, two men stood by them in shining garments:

And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye the living among the dead?

He is not here, but is risen:—St. Luke, XXIII; 46—XXIV; 3, 4, 5, 6.

A BOLD PROPOSAL

ANYTHING to beat legitimate advertising costs! Here's the latest: The advertising agent of the Caterpillar Traction Company has sent circular letters to newspaper and magazine writers offering to "honor any writer's invoice for any reasonable amount covering preparation of articles featuring 'Caterpillar Tractors' in text or illustration—regardless of compensation received by the writer from the publisher."

All a writer needs do is find a story about a caterpillar tractor doing any sort of work, get it printed in news columns and then send in his bill for any reasonable amount.

This novel means of tempting an employe of a publication to be disloyal to his publisher in the interest of an advertiser who hopes to evade legitimate display advertising expense, is being put out on the letterhead of the K. L. Hamman Advertising Company, of Oakland, Calif.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER suggests that publishers closely watch their columns and if a picture or a story of a caterpillar tractor appears trace the authorship—might turn up a crooked writer, selling editorial space to an advertiser.

Bureaucratic secrecy may mean weakness or corruption or both.

PROFESSIONALISM

PROPONENTS of the Illinois Press Association plan for certifying "professional" journalists draw an analogy between journalism and the professions of law and medicine. They say that if a professional status has been desirable for lawyers and doctors, it should be a good thing for newspaper men.

In EDITOR & PUBLISHER's view a closer analogy lies between journalism and the fine arts and crafts, where feeling and natural talent may count for so much more than academic knowledge. Painters, musicians, writers have no difficulty in establishing professional status, through their art.

Old idea getting into action in big cities—branch printing plants to escape traffic congestion.

MORE STATIC

TABLOID editor says EDITOR & PUBLISHER has static on its instrument when it declares the public is interested in reading in newspapers the speeches that are making a hit in radio-broadcasting but are neglected by editors on the theory that "no one reads speeches."

Well, who said that tabloids should print speeches? We hope they won't spoil themselves that way and we hope standard size newspapers will not spoil themselves by using tabloid stuff, but even as a page of posed pictures of Mamie Hoosis belongs in the tabloid the serious speech belongs in the standard paper, and we object when the radio scoops on this interest. Tune in some Sunday night on the Boston Ford Hall public forum and see if you get anything for your mind to bite on, and don't fail to observe how the Boston papers cover the story on Monday.

Newspapers and elephants might be dangerous if they knew their strength.

SPACE DRAWING POWER

THE advertising manager of a department store recently put the following question to Guy Hubbart, of the retail advertising research department of Dry Goods Economist:

"Has space any definite drawing power? We notice that 30 inches one day sells ten times the amount it sells another day. Is this merely chance or is there a tangible value on a certain number of inches?"

To which Mr. Hubbart replied, and we note it for the interest of newspaper men:

"The drawing power of ten inches or any other amount depends on what is advertised in the ten inches, what is advertised in the other 100 inches, if the total ad has in it 110 inches, the size of the population, extent of newspaper circulation, the type of goods advertised and the season of the year."

High standards of material well-being are the soundest guarantees of general prosperity.

NOBLESSE OBLIGE

WHEN a New York Times reporter asked Ivy L. Lee why he was agitating United States recognition of Soviet Russia the noted "public relations adviser" replied that he was acting without retainer, being only personally interested to see just and honorable trade relationships between the Communist government and our own country.

But the Times reporter wove into the story a Paris report that the Standard Oil Company was in the market to buy Russian oil. In view of Mr. Lee's assertion of altruistic motives this was not nice of the Times reporter. We are not sure that another ethic has not been stepped on.

True, in slippery "big business" press agentry, Esau usually dictates in private while Jacob hands out the dope, but when a man of Ivy L. Lee's pretentions says he is seeking to do such slight service for the benefit of humanity, however repugnant Communism may be to him, the Times should take him at his word. Whatever else may be sacrificed, gentlemen, shall we not conserve good taste?

More American dollars will be spent on resort advertising this year than ever before.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES, II, editor of the Palm Beach (Fla.) Times, is the son of the late John Temple Graves whose ability as a writer and orator made his name prominent for 30 years.

JOHN T. GRAVES, II.

Prior to his assumption of the editorship of the Times last year Mr. Graves had served for four years as assistant chief economist of the Federal Trade Commission in Washington. He conducted the economic work of the commission's celebrated case against the United States Steel Corporation in the so-called "Pittsburgh Basing Point" practice. In addition he was in charge of the commission's investigation of the oil industry and of an earlier one covering the leather industry of the country. During all of this period he was devoting much additional time to the writing of three political and social novels, the most recent of which, entitled "The Shaft in the Sky," was published in 1923.

Mr. Graves is a graduate of Princeton University and of the George Washington University Law School. He is a member of the bar of the District of Columbia and of the Phi Delta Phi legal fraternity. He was for one year a reporter on the staff of the New York Journal. During the war he served in France as a lieutenant of artillery and was subsequently attached to the Peace Commission at Paris as American representative on one of the subcommittees.

Mr. Graves' hobby is tennis and he has within the past three years held the tennis championship of Virginia and of the Middle Atlantic States. He is a member of the Chevy Chase and University clubs of Washington, D. C., the Everglades Club of Palm Beach and the Palm Beach Yacht Club.

What Do Dry Mats Cost?

As all metropolitan newspapers will eventually use dry mats publishers should bear in mind that their cost must be figured at the Autoplates—not at the door.

There are dry mats, claimed to be fit for metropolitan plants, which cost 15c. to buy and as much again to use. In one instance the actual cost of the excess labor required to back-up, or pack, the particular dry mat in use, to say nothing of the time lost, is as much as the mat cost at the door. And at least sixty mats are required, on an average, to print a 48 page paper. The stereotyper never knows how many he will have to use.

Such a dry mat costs not less than 35c. at the Autoplate.

We claim the METROPOLITAN DRY MAT is the speediest and cheapest dry mat at the Autoplate and the only really satisfactory one for big plants.

BECAUSE—

It molds like wax—to the very bottom of type and cuts—and holds its depth until cast from. It molds so deep and has such iron-like stay back that it actually requires less backing-up than a wet mat. In its saving in labor and time in this one important particular it is far cheaper to use than any other dry mat.

Plates may be cast from it almost without limit and remolds are never necessary. 48 METROPOLITAN dry mats, no more, print a 48 page paper.

It will not tear or peel, does not buckle, and is a splendid printer. With it the stereotyper has no worries.

It is the speediest and cheapest dry mat at the pay station—the Autoplates—and that's where the cost of dry mats to the newspaper must be figured.

It should be enough to say that the METROPOLITAN DRY MAT has been adopted for exclusive use by those superb newspaper plants of Philadelphia—

CRAWFORD'S WORLD-WIDE CONTACTS

William H. Crawford was for twenty-five years confidential representative of the New York Times at Washington. He made many trips abroad for his paper during the pre-war, war, and post-war periods. He has interviewed practically all the outstanding men in public life in the world.

CRAWFORD GETS THE HUMAN SIDE

Mr. Crawford writes with exceptional facility and charm and has an unusual knack of getting at the human side of those with whom he comes in contact. It is this human side, hidden facets of humor, of friendliness, of underlying character, which he reveals in this remarkable series.

CRAWFORD TO COVER GREAT EVENTS

This world-famous reporter and correspondent will cover great events and movements that are centers of interest. The paper taking the weekly series, "Things Never Told About World-Famous People," is given a prior option on everything Crawford does.

A POSTSCRIPT NOTE FROM CRAWFORD

Dear Editor:

Do you know that library reports show that more people read biography than any other non-fiction subject? Surely this fact deserves your serious consideration. I'd mightily like to have you run my series, "THINGS NEVER TOLD ABOUT WORLD-FAMOUS PEOPLE."

Fraternally yours, WILLIAM H. CRAWFORD.

To Advertise "Hair Pin for Bobbed Heads"—Litchfield Elected President of Goodrich Tire & Rubber Company—Pabst Permitted to Make Alcohol Tonic

A new product called "Prim," and described as a hairpin for bobbed heads, has been put on the market and newspaper advertising is to be used to introduce it to the flapper public.

The manufacturer is L. F. Grammes & Sons, Inc., Allentown, Pa. The account has been obtained by the Shankweiler Advertising Agency, Inc., Allentown.

Business papers and magazines will also be used in the advertising campaign.

P. W. Litchfield, senior vice-president of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, O., was elected to the presidency of that company March 29. He has been connected with the Goodyear organization for 25 years and succeeds the late George M. Stadelman.

Advertising campaigns, sponsored by the National Association of Real Estate Boards and participated in by real estate boards in various cities of the United States, are being prepared by the Campbell-Ewald Company, Detroit.

The purpose of the campaigns is "to dignify the real estate profession and to show the solid investment values in the purchase of real estate from realtors or members of the national organization."

The Moon Motor Car Company reports a net income after expenses and taxes of $1,102,828 in 1925 as compared with $559,585 in 1924.

The Van Camp Packing Company this week declared a dividend of $7.78½ on the preferred stock, payable to stockholders of record April 27.

The Ross Gould Company, St. Louis, through Harry Meyer, are using 100 newspapers in a spring campaign for "Absorene" wall paper cleaner, and H. R. H. paint cleaner for the Absorene Manufacturing Company, St. Louis.

The Greyhound Bus Lines, of Grand Rapids and Muskegon, Mich., and Chicago are using newspaper advertising space to obtain passengers and build goodwill. The account is handled by the Lafferty Advertising Service, Grand Rapids.

The Pabst Corporation, Milwaukee, this week obtained a permit from Gen. Lincoln C. Andrews, assistant secretary of the treasury in charge of prohibition enforcement, to manufacture a malt tonic containing 3.75 per cent alcohol. A similar permit was obtained by Anheuser-Busch, St. Louis, for "Malt Nutrine."

Coincident with the announcement made in Washington, the Pabst Corporation in Milwaukee announced the appointment of H. B. Thayer as sales and advertising manager of the tonic division. Mr. Thayer was formerly with the Welch Grape Juice Company, Westfield, N. Y.

D'Arcy Advertising Agency, St. Louis, handles the Anheuser-Busch account. The company announced it would not be ready to market "Malt Nutrine" until June 1.

Pabst advertising is directed by Klau-Van Piersom-Dunlap-Young, Inc., Milwaukee.

SOFT WORDS FROM COPS DURING TRAFFIC WEEK

San Francisco Examiner Stressed Education As Substitute for Abuse in Alleviating City's Traffic Problems

The San Francisco Examiner lately suggested and put through a "Traffic Week," as the result of which the city took a brand-new start on its traffic problem.

The campaign was started by the annual report of the city coroner, showing 87 automobile deaths during 10 months, with an automobile death rate of 20 per cent—not a worse condition than most other large cities can show, but a grave one none the less.

On the theory that 90 per cent of motorists want to be law-abiding, and that to that extent traffic is not strictly a criminal problem, the Examiner launched a movement for traffic education. Falling in with the suggestion, Chief of Police D. S. O'Brien fixed the time for Traffic Week.

Supplementing the regular traffic detail, bluecoat policemen were assigned to halt automobiles, not to make arrests, but to talk in a friendly way to the driver and show him, or her, wherein a driving error had been committed. Thousands of drivers during the week received a courteous talking-to about their driving, learned anew of the city ordinances and the reason for them, and departed grinning but in a more careful mood.

Three important outcomes resulted. First, Chief O'Brien announced the regular employment of bluecoats on traffic violations in the future; every man on the force now has a citation book and is on the watch for erring motorists. Second, the California Automobile Association, with the Examiner, by consent of the Chief named 150 of its members, all citizens and all good drivers, as a Vigilance Committee to turn in complaints and license-numbers to the police departme and appear in court and testify wh necessary. And third, the Association its own expense undertook to make thorough traffic survey of San Francis expert engineers employed by the As ciation being in charge. Important leg lation will undoubtedly be the outcor

An Open Letter to the

ST. PETERSBURG TIMES and St. Petersburg DAILY NEWS

Relative to the withdrawal of advertising for theatres operated by this enterprise from the columns of the EVENING INDEPENDENT, permit me to make known the reasons for this action.

The decision prompting the action is based on the inalienable right that we, as an enterprise, are entitled to advertise when, how and where we deem necessary and profitable.

Our annual expenditures for local newspaper advertising affecting our local theatres, amounts to many thousands of dollars.

The action of withdrawing from the EVENING INDEPENDENT was prompted wholly by sound, economic judgment, as set forth below :

The ST. PETERSBURG TIMES is nationally recognized as one of the leading morning publications, reaching the morning readers of theatrical advertising in a most thoro and satisfactory manner, both from an advertising and reader-interest standpoint.

The St. Petersburg DAILY NEWS, an afternoon and evening publication whose phenominal circulation growth has amazed the newspaper world, reaches the readers of theatrical advertising and publicity - both in the home and on the street - so thoroughly and completely that a complete "coverage" is assured, making it unnecessary and unprofitable to advertise in another afternoon and evening paper in this City.

A careful investigation of circulation figures will sustain the fact that complete coverage, the aim of every advertiser, is consumated.

Very truly yours,
Vernon Gray.

ARTEMAS WARD WILLED MILLIONS TO HARVARD

Appraisal of Advertising Man's Estate Shows $4,000,000 Gift to School—Many Employes Remembered

Artemas Ward, owner of the advertising business of Artemas Ward, Inc., left $4,000,000 to Harvard College, according to an appraisal of his estate filed in New York this week.

The report filed disclosed that through the action of Artemas Ward, Jr., son of the decedent, in renouncing his rights under Section 17 of the Decedent's Estate law, the bequest to Harvard was twice the amount it would have been had the son insisted on his rights under this law, which provides that a testator leaving a child may not give to charity more than half of his estate. The will gave to Artemas Ward, Jr., personal effects valued at $14,226 and $1,000,000 in trust. Upon his death the income goes to his wife, and the principal to their children.

In failing to include in the report the entire estate Deputy Commissioner Loughman followed a precedent set in the case of the estate of James Gordon Bennett, who left his residuary estate to found a home for newspaper men. The bequests taxed yesterday were valued at nearly $1,300,000, including the gift to the son.

The will left cash bequests of $78,100 to employes of Artemas Ward, Inc., sixty-two of whom got $850 each. Louis Cohn, W. B. Nesbitt, Esther Sloane, F. W. Doolittle, M. J. Cohn, Sigmund Klee and George B. Wells received $2,000 each; J. W. Callaghan, C. M. Collins and Arthur Cohn got $1,500 each, while $1,000 each went to twenty-one persons. A gift of $10,000 was left to Charles Martyn in recognition of "long and faithful service in publishing work," and $5,000 in cash and $60 a week for life were left to Mrs. Jesse M. Burgoyne "for faithful services which almost cost her eyesight in her early years with me."

It's a mistake to think of gas only from the point of first cost. Look deeper.

Sharpen your pencil. Figure out what it is costing you not to use gas. Thousands of manufacturers have convinced themselves and have changed to gas.

Better product and increased production are two of many advantages in using gas.

Why not send today for our new book, "Gas—The Ideal Factory Fuel"? It may open your eyes to unthought-of economies.

HELPING RETAILERS GET MORE VALUE FROM NEWSPAPER SPACE

Superlative Copy Is Store Owner's Greatest Problem—Dailies Can Aid by Furnishing Newest Selling and Copy Ideas

By PHILIP FRANCIS NOWLAN

"HOW can I make my advertising pay better?"

That's the question the average retail merchant is asking today. The newspaper that comes closest to giving him the answer will come closest to winning his confidence and friendship.

It would be delightfully simple if all you had to do was overwhelm him with argument and evidence simply that more advertising means bigger sales volume. But the retail merchant is not that simple.

He knows too well that the foundation of his success is the value he gives his patrons. He knows that his prices are a vital factor (whether his policy is to emphasize them or not in his advertising) in holding the trade that advertising and other attractions bring into his store.

He dares not allow his advertising expense to eat up what in the last analysis is the only thing he has to advertise—his values.

He knows quite well that increased volume is a factor in lowering general expense percentages, though a suprisingly large number of us seem to feel that Providence has ordained us especially to explain to him that this is so. As a matter of fact, he knows what most of us who are so busy explaining to him do not know—the rate at which increasing volume lowers his costs.

Do you want to have some fun with yourself?

Sit down some time and figure out this principle of volume as it applies to the problem of how much increase in business is necessary to balance off a given discount or price reduction.

You'll be surprised.

Most of us have magnified our vague and figureless mental pictures of this principle out of all proportion. But the merchant has to deal with the figures as well as the principle. Otherwise he may have to deal with a bankruptcy court.

No. You can't tell the retailer that all he needs is more business, and that it's a small matter if his advertising percentage jumps in getting it. At least, you can't get away with it.

There are a lot of things that a newspaper can do to make its advertising space more valuable to the retail merchant.

Paradoxically, one thing that a number of newspapers could do would be to cut down their space radically and increase their rates enough to balance the lost customers. It would make the remaining space far more effective. A number of retail merchants in one big city, have made this suggestion to a paper which runs about 48 pages daily. They have expressed themselves as quite willing to pay double the present rate if the paper will cut its advertising space in half. They think they'd get more for their money. The volume of advertising in this paper today is so big that even a full page announcement has relatively little attention value. The paper is so big that the average reader has a tendency to "skip" through it, and two-page space, or larger, robs the advertiser of contact with news columns. It may well be, however, that the paper in question is right, from the viewpoint of its own policy, in refusing to make such a change. It has a tremendous circulation and is not a "class" paper.

Another thing that a paper may do is establish a real, honest-to-goodness store-service and research department. This means quite an outlay of money. The outlay, depending upon precise conditions faced by the individual paper, may be warranted if the job is done well. If it isn't, it had better not be undertaken at all.

Such a department is not to be confused with the kind that surveys markets and draws up prospectuses for national advertisers and advertising agencies. It is quite a different proposition. Its effective operation involves a very careful professional study of retail business in general, and of the problems of specific stores in particular. Necessarily its headway will be slow. Likewise sure. It must generate good will as it goes, for it must delve rather intimately into store-management problems that affect advertising, problems that contain a great deal of the personal element and must be handled with diplomacy and tact.

The retailer's advertising problem today is very largely the problem of copy, which in turn involves certain merchandising problems as well as the selling policy of the store.

The store's copy may be superlative, and yet miss fire because it does not appeal to its particular clientele. A big Philadelphia department store that has always emphasized price heavily one time attempted to swing over to the kind of copy used by another Philadelphia store that appealed to a wealthier patronage with a highly editorialized type of copy. The loss of business through a six-month try-out caused a near panic and a violent reversion to original style. Store Number Two would suffer as heavily if it tried Number One's style of copy.

The store's copy may be superlative and miss fire because it is centered on the wrong merchandise, or because the merchandise on which it is centered is wrong.

Too often, however, the store's copy isn't superlative at all. It's the latter two reasons that are responsible for most of the lost efficiency in store advertising.

It would be a bit difficult for a newspaper to help a store in properly fitting together its merchandising and selling policies and problems with its advertising, unless it were prepared to establish a store-service and research department. But it can be of a great deal of help in toning up copy, as such, and in suggesting advertising ideas that have proved of benefit to other stores; suggesting them informally and inexpensively.

You can't tell a merchant what his results will be in dollars and cents if he does a given thing with his advertising. But you can tell him with some degree of definiteness what results other merchants have gotten. And he'll thank you for this kind of information.

Tell him, for instance, how the plan of the Pettis Dry Goods Company in Indianapolis of auctioning off its advertising space to department heads worked out.

Tell him how Irwin Spear, advertising manager of the Paine Furniture Company in Boston, "personalized" furniture in his copy and made "stories" of their descriptions, and with what results.

Tell him how the crowds flocked to the W. & M. Gross clothing store in Troy, N. Y., when it broke its no-sale policy following a fire, and just what copy turned the trick.

Tell him about the "Thunderbolt" sales of the Shepard stores of Boston.

Tell him how Famous-Barr and Scruggs-Vandervoort-Barney in St. Louis beat price advances last spring, forestalling increases with early openings at modest prices.

Give him a copy of the M. Rich & Bros. department store's announcement of its adjustment policy.

Tell him how the Hecht Company, in Washington, D. C., used newspaper space to advertise a descriptive booklet of its January furniture sale.

Tell him why Brill Brothers, in New York, never stage sales, and how they explain this policy to the public in their newspaper space.

Do Saturday afternoon advertisements pay? Lewis Kaufman, of the Kaufman Stores in Richmond, Va., has had some interesting experience with them.

Tell him about the agreement and rules governing copy, now in force among Boston publishers and advertisers, the result of the Boston Trade Board's efforts.

Tell him what John B. Guernsey, controller of the Emporium, in San Francisco, predicts about retail advertising in 1930. Among other things he says:

"I believe newspaper advertising will have become recognized by then as the one profitable advertising medium for retailers, and the newspapers themselves will be censoring all advertisements to exclude comparative prices and misstatements."

Tell him how the Butler Music Company in Kansas City addressed newspaper advertisements to various prominent residents, and what the results were.

Tell him how Jack Spines, Wichita clothier, found it more profitable to spend money for advertising than for rent.

Give him, as a matter of courtesy, every scrap of information regarding the experience of other retail merchants in the effectiveness of various kinds of copy and in costs. Don't be afraid to give him something once in a while that isn't quite as favorable to newspaper advertising as you'd like it to be.

Newspapers offer the most effective and most economical advertising medium for the retail store. An occasional exception, frankly stated, will strengthen rather than hurt the cause of the newspaper man.

Giving the merchant information and data like this, whether in casual conversation or bulletin form, keeps him thinking about what you want him to think about—the effectiveness of newspaper a vertising as a general proposition and t fact that you are ready to go out of yo way a bit to help him.

It's a pleasant variation to the hamme and-tongs argument about "the large circulation of radio fans who also ha red hair in any city of more or less th 25,000 population between Chicago a somewhere else," or the squabble as whether more bankers or more washlad read your newspaper or the competi paper.

Business men love gossips as much women do. It's a different kind of g sip, business gossip, that they love.

And if you can feed retail merchan with the kind of gossip they like, that h a real information value to them, a that boosts their interest in what y have to sell and their opinion of yo genuine interest in helping them—w there certainly isn't any harm done, there?

The amount of mule-power annua wasted in this country in sloganeeri campaigneering, and grim, desper efforts to sell something to prospects w are more figments of the imagination th real people, would run Niagara up for 18 months.

56 Halvorsen Newspaper Stuffing Machines

. . . have been placed!

After 6 machines had been manufactured, tested and perfected, the first production unit of 50 was built to standardized specifications. These machines have all been placed—and were by purpose widely distributed, to test varying conditions. The results prove the Halvorsen Newspaper Stuffing Machine to be not only of indispensable necessity to the unhampered growth and success of the metropolitan Sunday newspaper—but an investment of sure economies and profits for the newspaper of medium circulation.

As compared with hand-stuffing the sections of a Sunday newspaper, the machine has in every case shown such advantages as these:

A saving of one-half the cost of stuffing for the year 1925 as compared with the previous hand-stuffing costs on the Saint Paul Daily News.

On the Chicago Tribune, one-fifth the cost of the machines was shown to be saved in six months.

These savings show in the payroll. Even greater advantages for the user are found in the following results:

Speeding the edition, and allowing the delivery to dealers and distributors of completely assembled papers.

Expediting distribution and sales through the delivery of complete papers in good condition.

Eliminating shortage and complaints of missing sections. The machine will deliver only complete papers.

Saving the cost of printing a surplus in anticipation of claims of such shortage.

Machines are of unit construction, consisting of an Opening Head and the necessary number of Insert Heads. The Opening Head handles the outside section, which may be 8 or more pages up to a maximum of 64 pages of Black-and-White, Pink or other standard newsprint. Each Insert Head accommodates a section of from 4 to 64 pages, be it Gravure, Tabloid or Standard Newsprint.

A guaranteed speed of 5000 completely stuffed papers per hour, which means, for example, that a five-head machine turns out in one hour the equivalent of twenty thousand hand stuffings. All users are obtaining greater speed than the guarantee, most of them averaging 6000 per hour.

Publishers, Investigate!

Machines now building will be made available to publishers of Sunday editions whom it has been impossible to serve earlier because of manufacturing limitations imposed by the policy of proceeding conservatively until the machines had been proved to meet the tests of time and the varying conditions that exist in different plants.

An Inquiry Form is attached, with indications of the information necessary to furnish, in order that a recommendation can be made to take care of the stuffing problem for your newspaper. An inquiry carries no obligation, but it will open up the way of informing yourself about one of the important phases of your business. You will find out how the eminently successful newspapers now using Halvorsen Newspaper Stuffing Machines have effected substantial economies while freeing themselves from a vexatious interference with their growth and development. Investigate—and you will want to invest.

PAPER COSTS LIMIT AUSTRALIAN DAILIES

But New Canadian Trade Agreement Expected to Relieve Situation, Melbourne Herald Editor Declares

Keith Murdock, editor-in-chief of the Melbourne Herald, one of Australia's large dailies, passed through Vancouver recently on his way to London. He intends to visit several points in eastern Canadian and the United States before crossing the Atlantic.

The high cost of newsprint is one of the biggest problems facing the Australian newspapers, according to Murdock, and this has had the tendency of curtailing the size of editions, resulting in news condensation and the use of smaller type than would otherwise be justified. He thinks that the recently concluded trade agreement with Canada will result in a larger proportion of newsprint orders being placed with Canadian mills rather than with United States concerns, which in the past have sold large quantities of paper to the commonwealth.

While on this continent Murdock will study Canadian and American methods of newspaper production.

"The conservative newspapers of Australia and New Zealand continue to carry advertisements on their front pages and resemble English journals more than American," he said. "But the trend is more and more towards Western methods of display and some of the more progressive papers in the larger Australian centers bear striking similarity to the papers of the United States and Canada so far as general style and appearance are concerned.

"The Australian newspaper reader, however, is accustomed to news segregated and departmentalized and it will be a long time before he will stand for anything else. He expects to find his cable news on a particular page, his suburban news in another, and so on. As a general rule, he is prepared to read his paper in more leisurely fashion and is not content with scanning headlines. That perhaps accounts for the much lesser development of the headline in Australia than you have in this country. Taken all in all, the Australian papers seem to satisfy their readers very well, but we are always looking for new ideas and I believe that North American papers can offer us some valuable inspiration."

Keith Murdock has had a meteoric career. Before the war he was a reporter on the Melbourne Age. By a coincidence more than by anything else he was sent with the Australian troops to report the attack on Gallipoli, an exploit which provided one of the most spectacular features of the war. He was the only accredited war correspondent with the troops which actually landed.

Subsequently he became well known throughout the British Empire because of a controversy with Sir Ian Hamilton, British leader at Gallipoli, concerning the strategy used in the Gallipoli campaign.

REUTERS' SUBSIDY CUT

Committee Reduces Annual Canadian Payment for Publicity Matter

When the Canadian House of Commons in committee of supply reached the item calling for the payment of $32,000 to Reuters for circulation of Canadian news in Great Britain, exception was taken by several members to this subsidy and finally the amount was reduced by half.

Under the contract entered into between the Government of Canada and Reuters, it was agreed that 10,000 words of Canadian news designed to promote the interests of Canada should be transmitted by cable monthly. This was to be in addition to Reuters' regular news service.

Reuters also engaged to disseminate throughout the United Kingdom, the British dominions and elsewhere mail news calculated to create interest in Canadian affairs. Records supplied to the Canadian Government show that this object is being largely attained. The contract was entered into in August, 1923, and will expire this August.

A grant of $32,000 was asked by the government so that it might be in a position to renew the contract. It was held by the Minister of Finance that it was cheap advertising and, in view of the fact that representations had been made by various transportation and financial interests that Canada was not doing enough advertising, it is expected that there will be a renewal.

WORKING HOURS LIMITED

Australian Day Men Work 46 Hours Per Week, Night Men 40

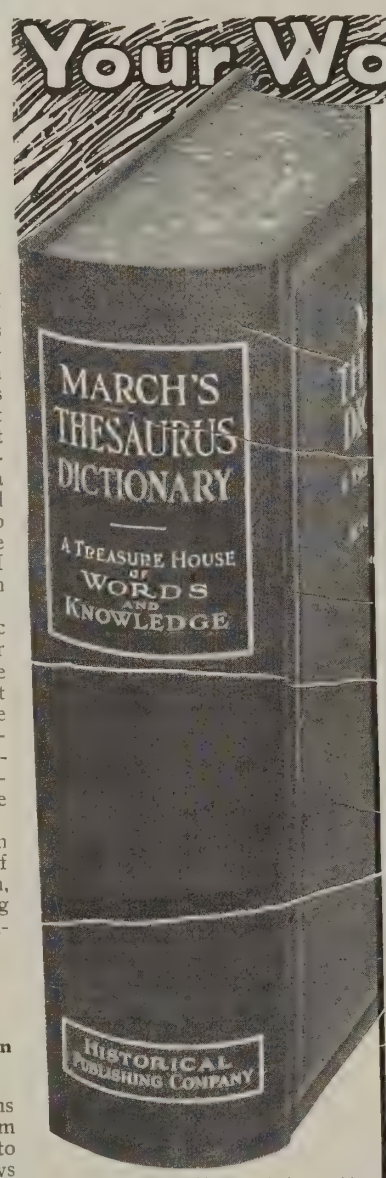
The query circulated among various United States papers regarding the hours worked by reporters and the answers which embraced "nine hours" and "no hours specified" would surprise Australians, a correspondent declares.

The Australian Journalists Association, quite a powerful body, has obtained a very definite and fixed arbitration court award regarding hours which are limited to 46 a week to be worked in five and a half days, with a maximum day of eight hours. Night workers do only five nights a week with a maximum of 40 hours weekly.

CANADA IS STUDYING TAX ON PERIODICALS

Montreal Publicity Association Latest Group to Probe Question—New Tariff Board Expected to Act On Issue

The Montreal Publicity Association has appointed a comittee to make a special study of the conditions under which foreign periodicals are allowed entry into Canada free of duty and the effect of these periodicals on Canadian national and economic life. Two speakers have already addressed luncheons of the association on the subject, Fred Paul, editor of Toronto Saturday Night, and W. F. Harrison, secretary of the Canadian National Newspapers and Periodicals Association, both of whom gave arguments against admitting United States periodicals free of duty.



The question is arousing much controversy in Canada. Recently Dr. Locke, public librarian of Toronto, stated that he would be strongly opposed to any action by Canada which might tend to keep out the better class American magazines, as he considered these of great educational value and maintained that there should b no tax on educational literature. Th view seems to have a good many su porters.

On the other hand the argument th Canada taxes advertising matter when enters the country in the form of catalo or booklets but permits the advertisi in magazines to enter duty free carri weight in some quarters. Further, Can dian publishers of magazines point to t fact that they must pay duty on pape ink,, engravings, etc., when imported fro the United States, while United Stat publishers can send these articles in Canada duty free in the shape of print magazines. They claim this is unjust.

Almost annually representations a made to the Government that somethi should be done to relieve Canadian pu lishers and a deputation of publishers h just been at Ottawa again in an effort obtain some action. As Canada has ju appointed a Tariff Board, it is probab that this one of the problems that will referred to it for study and advice.

New Canadian Daily

A new daily paper recently started pu lication in Trail, B. C. under the name the Bulletin. Elmer D. Hall is publish

No other book like this, in all the world

"How Dr. Johnson Would Marvel" is the title of an interesting booklet which tells how dictionary making has been perfected. Tells what Lord Chesterfield thought of Dr. Samuel Johnson's great Dictionary of the English Language. Tells about the first Thesaurus—what it was, what it did. Shows how the Thesaurus Dictionary is different.

FREE on request without putting you under any obligation or expense. Merely mention this publication.

How many words do you know associated with the various shades of meaning of the word "Flat" and opposed to those meanings? This booklet shows how many such words you can quickly find in this wonder book, March's Thesaurus Dictionary.

Your Words—do they always say what you mean?

The words you use—they must carry your message, convince your readers, you fail.

They are teeming with power to make you a masterful success—or to stam you, in spite of your education, as a person of loose-thinking habits.

You have realized this. Yet how often have you found yourself unable to wri or say just what you wished—to use words accurately, forcibly, exactly—witho seeming stilted.

How often you halt and stumble, perhaps at critical moments, groping vainl wondering "What is the right word to use here."

You can make words fit like glove

Why falter, why become verbose or stilted; when you can have all the language at your comman Your problem has been solved for you by the foremost philologist of the past hundred years, Pr Francis Andrew March, the man sought by practically every leading dictionary maker in America a England as consulting editor, the court of last resort.

MARCH'S THESAURUS DICTIONARY

makes you master of the whole living language

The illimitable wealth of words from which the ablest speakers and writers draw, is yours throu this master-volume—the result of eighteen years' work of Prof. March. No man of the past hund years was so well fitted to write with authority the definitions of words of the English language and differentiate between shades of meaning. None other had so stupendous a vocabulary. No other b known has been granted a patent on its contents in the United States and abroad; none other duplicated that remarkable reference group arrangement by which any desired word to express idea or shade of meaning can be quickly found even by a school child.

Dictionaries merely define the words you know. The previous attempts at Thesaurus making mer indexed the words, left out definitions and required you to use a dictionary also. Even this index system was not altogether alphabetic, therefore finding words was troublesome. March's Thesau Dictionary both finds the word and defines it, is the first and only Thesaurus Dictionary defining words clearly so that exact shades of meaning are apparent to all, and so arranged by reference gro that you can instantly find any desired word, its synonyms or associated words, and its antonyms opposites.

Hailed as "the chiefest tool of the writing man," it has been so greatly appreciated by busin men and parents of children as well as by authors, editors, ministers, lawyers, etc., that three la editions have been exhausted and even used copies have commanded a premium over publication price is the first edition published at a low popular price—a mere fraction of the cost of the three preced editions. It contains all that made March's Thesaurus Dictionary "a reference book of internatio fame" (World's Work), plus all the newer words, all the important words from arts and scien complete text books on English grammar, composition, evolution of the language, word-building, e and historic, geographic and Biblical material nowhere else found in any one volume. Famous cha ters of literature and their dominating traits, pseudonyms, etc.

INSPECT IT AT OUR RISK. So sure are we that this book will appeal to you because of wonderful material found on its 1462 pages that we want you to judge it for yourself. TELEPHONE INNOVATIONS IN PORTLAND JOURNAL'S NEW CLASSIFIED QUARTERS

THE classified advertising department of the Portland Oregon Journal has recently moved into larger quarters occupying about half of the third floor in the Journal tower. The equipment provided for the telephone soliciting section is of more than passing interest, involving as it does several new technical departures in the field of telephone selling.

The room assigned to this division has been treated acoustically to reduce to a minimum all sound transmission. The entire ceiling and walls for a distance of three feet from the top are covered with a special felt designed to dampen sound vibration originating either within or outside the room. The flooring is a cork carpet. Individual desks were specially constructed in order to make the best possible use of the space available.

The business handled over the telephone by the Journal approximates three-quarters of a million lines annually; of this total the proportion of purely "voluntary," or unsolicited, linage is insufficient to justify holding more than one telephone line open for this class of business alone. The girls working on the phones have built a definite clientele who, wishing to place a classified ad, have formed the habit of asking for some particular solicitor either by name or station number. For this reason a so-called "order table" was impracticable because of the impossibility of assigning definite calls to the proper solicitor.

Each solicitor has a direct "out line" provided with a key which permits her to place calls directly with the central operator or to receive incoming calls from the Journal's PBX. Experience has shown this system to save considerable time in making outside calls and it relieves the switch-board as well. The sole objection to these direct lines had previously been that the telephone company could provide no way of notifying the PBX operator when the "out line" was busy; as a result incoming calls were constantly being plugged into local stations the direct lines of which were at the moment in use. The calling party was thus held up while the operator was notified in a round-about way that the solicitor was talking.

This difficulty has yielded to what is believed to be a novel solution. On each solicitor's desk, just in front of the box on which is mounted the "out line" key, is a toggle switch. This switch operates one of a series of lights placed above the PBX switch-board, each light having a number which corresponds to the local station numbers. When the solicitor throws her "out line" switch to call the central operator she throws with the same movement her switch illuminating her number above the switch-board. The PBX operator when an incoming call is received looks first at the lights before plugging the call in; if the local number is lighted she then gives the calling party to an open local or obtains the party's number for a later call-back.

This system has been found to function admirably under all conditions experienced in a period of two months. The time of the solicitor is saved by placing her outside calls direct, the PBX operator is relieved of a vast deal of needless routine, more trunks are constantly available for other departments and incoming calls are handled with increased dispatch.

GAVE TWO HOURS OF LIFE TO AID NEWS MAN

JOHN FLANAGAN, city editor of the Utica Observer, was one of the best known newspapermen in central New York State 40 years ago, and occupied the city editor's desk on the Observer when he died.

He was city editor of the Utica Herald at the time when a man named Earl was sentenced to be hanged in a remote section of Hamilton County, region of lakes, mountains, small towns and villages. The place of the hanging was one of the most inaccessible spots in the county.

Flanagan gave himself the assignment of covering the execution of Earl, and he was the only newspaper man who made the trip to the woods. In order to get back to Utica on time with his report of the execution he was obliged to charter a special train. Even with such help it seemed that it would be impossible for him to reach the city in time to get his story into the paper.

At that time and in that place it was much easier for a murderer under sentence of death to know what was going on around him than it is now, and in some way Earl heard of Flanagan's difficulties. Time meant nothing to him, and so he agreed to be hanged two hours earlier, in order to allow Flanagan to make an earlier start for home!

The plan was carried out, and Flanagan got back to Utica in time to print his detailed story in the next day's paper.

To Cover Florida Economically

Florida has a resident population of nearly one and a half million, and in the winter it entertains an equal number of winter visitors.

Being a rapidly developing state, its demands are heavy for all kinds of manufactured goods and food products. Being a winter playground, it offers a market for summer goods in winter. Being a land of exceptional wealth, its people can afford to buy.

Florida is a great, growing market which should be included in your advertising campaign. Keep Florida in mind when you make your advertising schedule, and remember the fact:

No other medium or group of media covers this state so completely and so economically as the Associated Dailies of Florida.

This group of progressive dailies in the main buying centers of Florida offers a total circulation of more than 250,000 at a comparatively low cost. You can use the entire list or any part of it.

For particular information write to any of the publications or address:

PHILADELPHIA TABLOID IN NEW HOME

Daily News Now Printing from Two Floors of 15-Story Downtown Building—New Equipment Installed

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 1.—In its new home at Fifteenth and Cherry streets, where it was installed less than a week ago, the Philadelphia Daily News, Macfadden tabloid, on Wednesday, March 31, celebrated its first anniversary with a 56-page issue.

Two modern sextuple presses, each capable of 60,000 24-page tabloid papers an hour, compose the printing battery, which formerly consisted of a sextuple and a quad.

Also on the ground floor is the mailing room and paper storage quarters.

Composing and stereotyping rooms are on the floor above the press room, occupying the rear of this floor while the editorial rooms and other departments occupy the front. Twelve linotype machines, two Ludlows and a Monotype, all new except four of the linotypes which were new when the Daily News began publication a year ago.

The stereotyping room adjoins the composing room. An electric chute connects with the press room on the floor below.

The composing room and the news room adjoin, providing for speedy handling of copy. Both rooms are lighted from both sides of the building.

At one end of the news room the sports writers have a department to themselves and at the other end are offices of the managing editor and other executives. A separate room is provided for wire service printers.

The advertising manager also has his office on this floor, adjoining a department for solicitors, stenographers and others of his staff. Near to it is the office of the circulation manager and at another end of the floor are the cashiers and bookkeeping departments and the counting room.

The general manager's office is in the corner of this floor with the offices of his assistant, the editor and the department of promotion next to it in the order named. All the departments, except the press and mailing rooms, are on one floor.

The new home of the Philadelphia Daily News is a new 15-story building in the business section, being only two squares from the Broad Street Station of the Pennsylvania Railroad and a few minutes more to the City Hall.

FARGO FORUM TO BUILD

Contract for New Three Story Plant to Be Let This Month

The Fargo (N. D.) Forum will award the contract for the construction of a new home, about April 15, according to announcement of N. B. Black, publisher. The building is to be completed by Oct. 1, 1926.

The growth of the Forum, morning, evening and Sunday, has made necessary the expansion program, involved in which is an investment of approximately a quarter of a million dollars of additional capital, Mr. Black said.

The new home of the Forum will be three stories and basement, factory type, reinforced concrete and brick construction, 65 x 140.

Three floors, the basement and first and second floors, will be devoted to the publications, while the third floor will be leased.

The first floor will be given over to the administration, advertising and circulation departments, while the second floor will house the editorial department, composing room and stereotyping department. Each floor will provide 9,000 square feet of working space.

The Fargo Forum, established in 1878, was purchased by Mr. Black and his associates, his son, Norman D. Black, and H. D. Paulson, in 1917. Until March, 1924, the Fargo Forum was published only as a six-day afternoon paper. At that time Mr. Black purchased the Fargo Tribune, morning newspaper, and shortly thereafter merged it with the Forum.

Correction

In last week's EDITOR & PUBLISHER the statement was made in a Washington dispatch that the Royal Baking Powder Company case before the Federal Trade Commission, which was dismissed on March 23 by a four to one decision of the commission, had been "reopened" and was to be "reargued." This was an erroneous statement of the facts. Because of the dissenting opinion, opposing counsel asked for a reopening and rehearing of the case and next week argument will be heard upon that application.

CHANGES IN WASHINGTON

Putnam New Publisher, Marks Managing Editor of Times and Herald

C. I. Putnam, formerly advertising director and assistant publisher of the Boston American, has succeeded G. Logan Payne as publisher of the Washington Times and Washington Herald.

Avery C. Marks, Jr., another veteran in the Hearst organization, has been appointed managing editor of both the Times and Herald. Mr. Marks has been the editorial executive of the Times for a number of years.

The business and editorial direction of the Herald, morning and Sunday, and the Times, afternon, has been combined under the same executives. William C. Shelton is circulation manager; Robert E. Joyce, advertising manager; Bryan Morse, promotion manager.

Worcester Publishing Firm Organized

A charter of incorporation has been issued by the Massachusetts secretary of state to the Worcester Leader Publishing Company, Worcester, Mass., to do a newspaper publishing business. The capital is given as $30,000, and the incorporators are: Alfred G. Isenberg, Lewis Blumenthal, Morris Cohen, Lewis S. Landers, David Burwick and Henry R. Sher, all of Worcester.

Col. H. L. Opie Recovering

Col. H. L. Opie, publisher of the Staunton (Va.) News-Leader, who recently suffered a stroke of paralysis, is on the road to recovery, his physicians stated this week. He has practically recovered his speech and control of muscles affected by the stroke.

Forest Week Observance

Elbert H. Baker, publisher, Cleveland Plain-Dealer, and chairman of the American Newspaper Publishers Association's forestry committee, is sending out personal letters to A. N. P. A. members, urging them to promote observance of Forest Week, April 18-24. This year both Canada and the United States have united in proclaiming the week for the first time in the history of both countries.

ADDITIONAL AND REVISED LINAGE FIGURES, 1925

THE following additions or corrections to the tabulation of newspaper linage published March 13 by EDITOR & PUBLISHER have been received:

A REAL SERVICE IN INDIANA

To National Advertisers

Advertising in Indiana is no longer sold by the daily newspapers solely for financial returns.

The Indiana newspapers have a substantial market to sell for the merchandising of the advertisers' products.

Careful investigation of the circulating territory of each paper has made it possible for the advertiser to know the commercial possibilities before expenditures are made in the local market.

The success of their advertisers is important to the newspapers, and the publishers have devoted time and earnest effort to present a true analysis of the merchandising trend of their communities.

The combined efforts of advertisers and publishers have elevated the standard of living and developed the desire of consumers to possess the better things of life.

The manufacturer of a worth-while product, seeking a prolific market of great purchasing power and superior newspaper cooperation, cannot afford to overlook Indiana.

For your entertainment provided with a modern Grebe Syncrophase radio set. Some member of the organization will always be in charge to answer questions and generally to be of service. These same headquarters at the Waldorf have for many years been occupied by EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S Convention staff—an informal club for your convenience. It is our aim to make it a congenial and convenient meeting place before, between, and after convention business sessions.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S new Duplex Office Suite in the Times Building

In the heart of New York's foremost attractions—on Broadway at 42nd Street and only eight blocks from the Waldorf-Astoria. Within five minutes' walk are the Grand Central and Pennsylvania Stations, the new Garden and most of the important hotels, theatres, department stores. The Times Annex and the Herald Tribune Building, two modern newspaper plants, are just around the corner. If you have anything on your mind regarding the service EDITOR & PUBLISHER is endeavoring to render you 52 weeks a year—a suggestion for its improvement or a complaint where it has fallen short—come in and tell the staff. And if you have nothing particular to tell us, come in anyway.

LET US SERVE YOU

At our offices free secretarial and theatre ticket services will be provided. Our information bureau will answer all questions—put you in touch with fellow publishers—direct you to New York firms in the publishing, advertising and supply fields. We will pay particular attention to mail forwarded to you in our care.

Our offices in the heart of the Rialto command a spectacular view of the city—teeming Times Square; the mid-town skyscrapers; the Hudson with its ocean liners and docks; the hills of Jersey; Broadway uptown and down. The Times Tower is Manhattan's uptown showplace. It is convenient—five minutes from Pennsylvania Station, Grand Central, and the Waldorf.

ADVERTISING EXHIBIT IN MIDDLETOWN

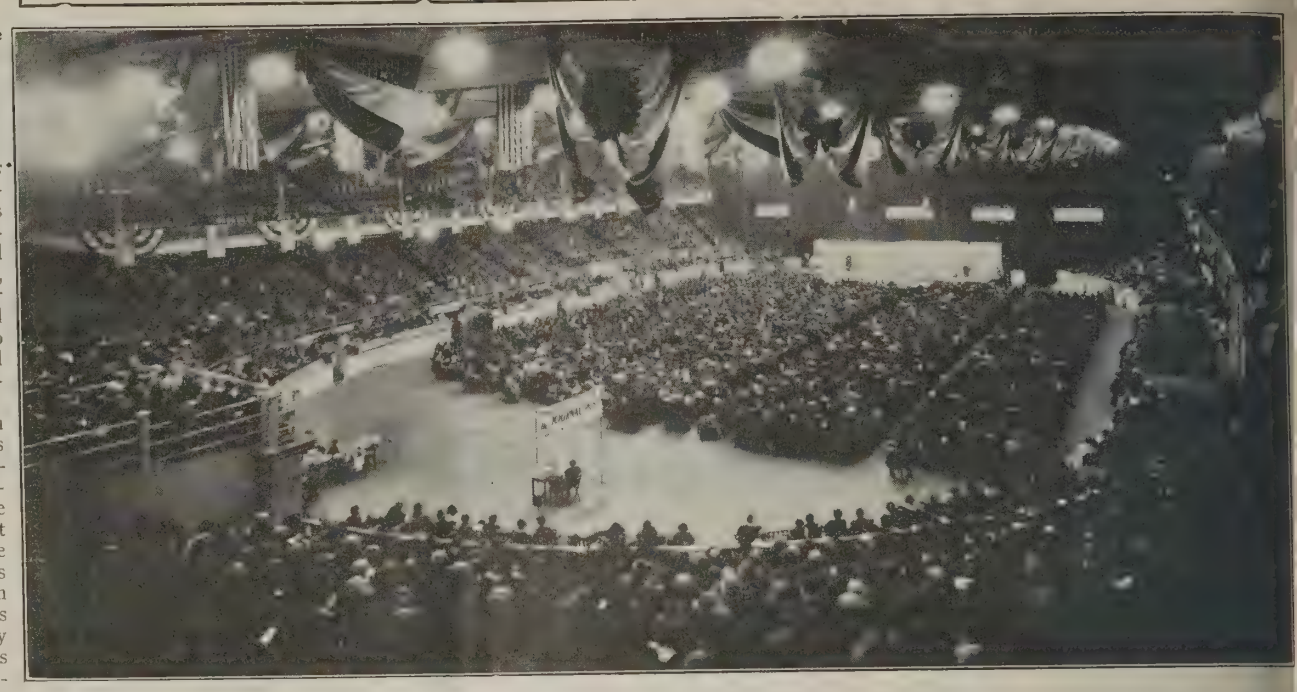
Forty-Six National Advertisers Have Booths at Educational Show Produced by Times-Press

The Middletown (N. Y.) Times-Press last week staged an Advertising Exposition in a local armory, showing exhibits furnished by 46 important national advertisers and several local manufacturers and merchants. The object of the exposition, as stated by J. B. Keeney, its originator and director, is the education of the local merchant and the consuming public as to the amount of money invested in national advertising and its importance as an economic factor.

"Trademark Land" was the name given for the week to the armory, which was decorated and draped with the brand-names and colored advertising of the participating firms. A small admission fee was charged, but no goods were sold at any of the booths. Attractions for the public, beyond the interest in the products and announcements exhibited, included an orchestra and a feature dancing act. Prizes in gold aggregating $150 were given away by the Times-Press to winners in contests in judging of advertisements, writing advertisements, slogan-writing, and for the best costume at the trademark ball which was held the night before the show closed.

Addresses were made by Mr. Keeney before the local business associations, emphasizing the value to the local merchant of stocking his store with nationally advertised merchandise and featuring this merchandise in his newspaper advertisements. The address included a demonstration that every merchant believes in advertising, whether he admits it or not. This talk was illustrated to show the attention given to location of the store, to attractive window displays, plainly marked goods, abundant stocks and courteous service, as contrasted with the old-fashioned general store methods.

Mr. Keeney, who recently resigned as business and advertising manager of EDITOR & PUBLISHER after seven years' service, is giving his entire time to the exposition, which was first produced at Middletown. Bookings have been arranged with newspapers in other cities.



Advertisers who furnished exhibits for the Middletown exposition included: Allen A Company (Hosiery), American Safety Razor Corporation, Armstrong Company (Linoleum), American Radiator Company, Ansco Photoproducts, Inc., Borden Company (Milk), Burroughs Adding Machine Company, Walter Baker & Company, (Chocolate), Campbell Soup Company, Carnation Milk Products Company, The Carter's Ink Company, Colgate & Company, Corning Glass Works (Pyrex), the Duz Company, Eastman Kodak Company, Gold Dust Corporation, Chr. Hansen's Laboratory (Junket), the Hoover Company, International Silver Company, Ipswich Mills (Hosiery), Kelvinator Company, Lever Brothers Company (Soap), Life Savers, Inc., Lowe Brothers Paint Company, Manning, Bowman & Company, the Palmolive Company, Pepsodent Company, Pet Mills Sales Corporation, Rollins Hosiery Mills, Rubberset Company, Sheaffer Pen Company, Salada Tea Company, the Sherwin-Williams Company (Paints), Southern Cotton Oil Trading Company (Snowdrift), the Wahl Company (Pens), Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company.

"United Press Club" at Waldorf

The Green Room of the Waldorf Astoria apartments, New York, has been obtained by the United Press for use as a club room during the week of the Associated Press annual meeting and the American Newspaper Publishers Association convention April 19-24.

DAILY'S COOKING SCHOOL ATTRACTED THOUSANDS

Photograph shows a crowd of between 9,000 and 10,000 at the final night session of the Kansas City Journal-Post's Cooking and Homemakers' school. The school conducted by Miss Jessie M. DeBoth under auspices of the Journal-Post, extended from March 23 to 26, inclusive. Approximately 6,000 housewives attended each afternoon session.

KANSAS CITY business men are evincing more cheerful dispositions in their homes and offices.

The Kansas City Journal-Post, Miss Jessie M. DeBoth, nationally known food expert and thousands of housewives from all walks of life unanimously give credit to the cooking and home-making school conducted last week under auspices of the newspaper.

The school conducted in the spacious Convention hall for three days, March 23, 24 and 25, attracted crowds far larger than the expectations of those in charge.

Sessions were held each afternoon and concluded with a session the night of March 25. At that session between 9,000 and 10,000 men and women were in attendance.

So successful was the venture the Journal-Post has completed plans for the return of Miss DeBoth in October for another series of lectures and demonstrations.

Each session was opened by community singing led by A. B. Sinclair, assisted by Harry Stockwell, baritone. W. Courtright Smith, advertising manager of the Journal-Post introduced Mrs. Hal Gaylord, general chairman of the school, who in turn introduced Miss DeBoth.

Mr. Smith explained that the Journal-Post, interested in everything that goes into the home, believed good cookery was as important to bodily health as good reading to the mental health.

Miss DeBoth conducted her demonstrations in a model kitchen provided on a brilliantly lighted platform. She wore a crisp white apron and as she worked her words were carried to every part of the hall through amplifiers.

Each article and each brand of food stuff was described by its trade name, and its special advantage cited. Firms distributing those commodities ran advertisements in the Journal-Post in connection with the school.

News stories told of the school sessions, giving in detail the various recipes used by Miss DeBoth. Interviews with housewives attending the school and stories about the nursery provided for babies and children, were carried.

The final night session found many men present. They were termed "white elephants" but were valuable for carrying home prizes won by wives. Kitchen cabinets, refrigerators, stoves and other articles were among the prizes.

One "white elephant," Franklin D. Crabbs, president of the Union Bank Note Company, went to the stage, donned an apron and assisted Miss DeBoth in making an Alaskan pudding. His wife cheered with the crowd when he successfully broke an egg and as earnestly reproved him when he did a bad job of it.

Virtually every women's organization in the city participated. Hostesses for the various sessions were provided.

Staff Holds Annual Frolic

Staff members of the Peterborough (Ont.) Evening Examiner held their third annual banquet, March 27, in Paragon Hall. An entertainment program was given by members from the various departments. R. M. Glover, managing director, and John R. Heron, city editor, spoke.

If You Want to Sell It In

NEW ENGLAND

Say It Through the Newspapers

What People Do You Want to Sell To?
Where Are They?
Are They Interested?
How Will You Present Your Offering?

To the National Advertiser who is certain he has been sufficiently thorough in the preparation of his merchandising and distribution to have solved these problems, success is assured.

Having decided the WHAT, WHERE and HOW—the final step is to put into the mind of his consumer prospects, through the printed word, the message he has to present.

The logical medium for this message is the local daily newspaper—the proper means of delivering an honest, straightforward presentation of your product to the consumer public.

If you have a product of merit for New England folks the newspapers on this list will deliver your message into the New England homes.

PAPERS AND AGENCIES DENY MONOPOLY

Amended Answers to Trade Commission Complaint Filed by National and Regional Associations Are Made Public

The present system of compensating advertising agencies and the relations of the latter with publishers again brought to public notice March 27, when the Federal Trade Commission released for publication the text of its amended complaint and the answers to it filed by the American Newspaper Publishers Association, the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, the Six Point League of New York, the American Association of Advertising Agencies, the American Press Association and the San Benito (Tex.) Publishing Company.

The latter defendant was cited as a member of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, but preferred to answer as an individual defendant.

All defendants denied the charges of the Commission that they were in a combination to control the field of national advertising.

The practices complained of, they claimed, are of nearly 50 years' standing and have the approval of newspaper publishers, advertisers and agencies. They asked that the case against them be dismissed, asserting that the commission did not have jurisdiction in the matter under dispute.

The placing of national advertising, they argued, concern personal service, and not commerce, and that consequently it does not come under the regulatory powers granted the commission.

The text of the original and amended complaints and the answers of the publishers and agencies have been printed in EDITOR & PUBLISHER during the past fourteen months.

"an ideal machine for a newspaper office"

"On July 24th, 1925, we installed a Model Eight and also a Model Twenty-six in our plant, both machines have been in daily use since their installation.

"We have experienced little difficulty in the operation of the Model Twenty-six and it has met our requirements as a combined news and head letter machine.

"Our operators were skeptical when the machine was installed as to probable operation, and trouble attending upon a double distributor, but we have experienced little difficulty.

"The No. 26 is an ideal machine for a newspaper office, in the matter of body type and head dress."

NEW YORK CLUB TO ELECT

Two Parties in Field to Direct Newspaper Organization

William P. Beazell, assistant managing editor of the New York World, and Royal W. Daniel, city editor, New York Mirror, head two tickets to be voted for May 3.

The Administration ticket, headed by Mr. Beazell, includes Denis T. Lynch of the Herald Tribune for first vice-president; James Melvin Lee for second vice-president, Frank E. Perley for treasurer, Augustin McNally for secretary, Percy Soule for corresponding secretary. The Administration's candidates for board vacancies are Dwight S. Perrin, retiring president; John J. Leary Jr., Edwin Judd, Jacob Magidoff, Michael Haggerty, Henry I. Phillips, and William J. Guard.

The Progressive ticket headed by Mr. Daniel has Charles S. Hand, city editor of the New York American, for first vice-president; Mr. Lee for second vice-president, Prentice Winchell for corresponding secretary. The Progressives have endorsed Mr. McNally for secretary and Mr. Perley for treasurer. Their candidates for the Board are Leslie H. Allen, James C. Dalton, Alan T. Holcomb, Jacob Magidoff, Philip A. Payne, George Barclay and W. J. Guard.

CHANGES TO P. M. FIELD

Tucson Independent, Fighting Merchants, But "Making Grade Nicely"

The Tucson (Ariz.) Daily Independent on April 2 changed from the morning to the evening field.

Established as a weekly newspaper in April, 1925, the Independent became a daily last November. The publishing company was incorporated in November with $50,000 in stock being held by four young newspaper men, averaging ten years in the business. J. W. Sims is president and manager; W. D. Upshaw, vice-president and editor; R. D. Richards, secretary and advertising manager, and H. F. Dobyns, superintendent.

The paper has been boycotted by the Tucson Merchants Association, Mr. Sims said.

"We would not let the merchants dictate our editorial policy in regard to a fight we are making against President Marvin of the University of Arizona," he declared in a telegraphed statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week.

"Last week the Tucson Ministerial Association demanded an investigation of President Marvin on the grounds that the 'morale of the University is shot to pieces.'

"By our fearless stand we have gained a few bitter enemies and many strong backers. Our city circulation is nearing that of papers established in Tucson 40 years ago.

"We are making the grade nicely, thanks."

Contrary to what some editors might believe, this form can be easily compiled. A desk editor, handling make-up can easily fill in the topics and page numbers as he receives his copy and marks up his "dummy." For features the various form make-up men can rattle off the pages in a few minutes.

By clipping the index from the first edition and making such changes as are necessary for subsequent editions is a matter of but a few minutes labor.

Comments on the index more than justify the time spent in its compilation.

NO LIBEL VIA RADIO

First Case Against a Broadcasting Station Dismissed

What is generally supposed to be the first suit brought against a radio station for slander broadcast has not been sustained.

It was filed against Station KFJF, Oklahoma City, by C. W. Friss, Under Sheriff of Oklahoma County, for $20,000 as the outgrowth of a sermon by a local clergyman in which reference was made to alleged illegal acts by county officials.

The case was dismissed on a demurrer filed by Dudley Shaw of KFJF, who argued that inasmuch as a telephone company could not be held liable for a slanderous conversation passing over its wires between two individuals, neither could a broadcasting station be held.

An amendment making slander over the air a criminal offense was recently defeated in the National House of Representatives.

Nova Scotia Aids Paper Makers

The policy of the new government of Nova Scotia with respect to pulpwood has been announced by Hon. J. C. Douglas, attorney-general. It has been decided to impose a tax on all wood cut in the province after May 1, 1927, the tax to be remitted in the case of wood further manufactured in the province. Legislation already exists under which the government may prohibit the export of pulpwood cut on crown lands. It is anticipated that as a result of this policy paper manufacturing in Nova Scotia will be encouraged.

NEW DAILY FOR PORTLAND?

Henry Breen, Former N. Y. Herald Man, Said to Be Behind Project

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

PORTLAND, Me., March 31.—Persistent rumors have been in circulation that a morning newspaper is to be established here within a few weeks although there has been no definite announcement.

Henry Breen, former Maine man, formerly with the New York Herald during the Bennett regime is understood to be the moving party, interesting a number of local people in the project financially.

It is understood an option has been obtained on the Baxter building on Monument Square, formerly occupied by the Press Herald, morning paper, which moved to a new building three years ago. It is understood A. L. T. Cummings, executive secretary of the State Chamber of Commerce, former newspaper man and correspondent for years for the Boston Herald will be editor.

There are only two papers in Portland, the Evening Express and the Press Herald, both owned by Guy P. Gannett.

BUILDING MODEL HOMES

Seattle Post-Intelligencer to Erect a Group of Ten

An ambitious newspaper enterprise has been launched by the Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer, which plans to erect a group of ten model homes in that city.

With the president of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce sponsoring the ceremony, ground was recently broken for the first of the homes. They will cost between $6,500 and $9,500 each, and will embody valuable suggestions and hints to those desiring to build homes. The paper conducted a contest for home designs, closing March 31, offering $150 in cash prizes.

GERMAN NEWSPAPER PUBLISHER SEEKS TO FORM FASCIST DICTATORSHIP

Dr. Alfred Hugenberg's Power Lies in Ownership of a Newspaper Chain and Control of News Agency Subscribed to by 57 Per Cent of Republic's Papers

DR. ALFRED HUGENBERG, German newspaper publisher and news service owner, has, according to cable dispatches, become press agent of the German reaction and is waging bitter war upon the Dawes plan, the Locarno treaties and Germany's entrance into the League of Nations. He is reported as hoping to establish a German dictatorship on the Italian Fascist model with the aid of the National elements, according to the New York Times.

Hugenberg's power lies in his ownership of a string of newspapers, including the Lokal-Anzeiger and Der Tag in Berlin, and in his control of a news correspondence agency subscribed to by about 57 per cent. of all German newspapers, including Socialist and Communist organs as well as Nationalist. He furnishes 35 per cent. of the German press with ready-made articles and pictures in the form of matrices.

The main reason for acceptance of the Hugenberg news service is found in the lack of any large co-operative news gathering agency in Germany, and the fact that the Wolff Telegraph Bureau, in addition to being semi-official, falls short of furnishing a complete service. About the only agency of any importance besides the Wolff Bureau and the Telegraph Union (Hugenberg's) is the service maintained by the Socialist press. This has representatives in all the larger German cities and in most foreign capitals, but is partisan and limited in scope.

Although the Telegraph Union poses as a seller of news, all German editors are aware that its principal reason for existence is the desire of its director and his followers to put across their propaganda. Therefore, the blue pencil is wielded drastically on the copy desks of the Liberal papers that take the service, in order to be covered on some important events, whereas in the organs of the Nationalist interests and big business the Telegraph Union dispatches run about as received. Some of the clients label the reports "T. U.," so that the readers may know their source; others, like the Hamburger Fremdenblatt, indicate their origin by a special sign recognized by the initiated while a few newspapers rewrite them and use them as coming from their own correspondents.

The present status and history of the Hugenberg enterprises, the foundations of which were largely laid in collaboration with the late Hugo Stinnes during the inflation period, when valuable properties were acquired through the use of almost worthless paper marks, have been studied by several Liberal German magazines, including the Weltbühne. From their accounts it appears that Dr. Hugenberg controls at least seven large banks—the East German Private Bank, the East Bank for Commerce and Industry, the Rye Rentenbank, the Prussian Mortgage Bank, the Agrarian and Commercial Bank, the Land Bank and the German Credit Union. He also controls a number of wholesale paper and movie companies, including the Deulig Film Company, and advertising agencies, in addition to his publishing houses, newspapers and the news agency.

The Telegraph Union was formed in 1917 by combining four news bureaus. Influential Industrialists, anxious to help the German papers continue their policy of "holding out" despite the entry of the United States into the World War, founded the Vera Publishing Company, with a capitalization of 4,000,000 marks. The express purpose of the Vera was to keep hard-pressed newspapers going, provided they were willing to exhort the suffering German masses to stand firm and have faith in the Kaiser. Support was also conditional upon business and political control by the industrialists. When the collapse came, about 10 per cent. of the German press was owned by big business and by monarchists.

Now a new task was faced by the Vera—that of winning back the political power lost in the revolutionary overturn of November, 1918. The publishing company began to found new papers and to reorganize and finance the organs of the reaction, always retaining control in the interests of the industrialists. A capable head was needed. Hugo Stinnes was too busy with other things. Hugenberg already owned several papers. When the Board of Directors of the Vera was reconstructed, at its head sat Privy Financial Councilor Dr. Alfred Hugenberg.

The next task was to gain control of the provincial press. Dr. Hugenberg organized a subdivision of the Vera known as the "Wipro" (Economic Advisory Board of the Provincial Press). Liberal supplies of editorial matter, matrices and machinery soon brought many of the country papers into line in support of big business and monarchism.

Then came the inflation crisis. Financially the situation of the German press became still more precarious. But Dr. Hugenberg organized the Mutuum Loan Company for the purpose of furnishing weak German Nationalist organs with print paper, and the Alterum Loan Company to do the same thing for the People's Party (Big Business) papers. This saved many journals; all were compelled to accept the management of the Vera and to subscribe for the Telegraph Union service for long terms. Thus the T. U. became the leading news agency of the country, and the editors of a host of papers were put under the control of Stinnes, Hugenberg and company.

Since then the growth of the Hugenberg influence has been rapid. In 1925 there were 1,200 newspapers taking the T. U. correspondence service; now they number at least 1,600. More than 1,000 papers take the matrix service. The news service of the T. U., operated separately from the correspondence service, is subscribed to by the majority of the leading German papers. Exceptions are the Vossische Zeitung, the Frankfurter Zeitung, and the Berliner Tageblatt, all stanch Democratic organs jealous of the integrity of their news columns.

The eleven correspondence services, ostensibly independent of the T. U. news service and subscribed to separately, cover sports, commerce, Stock Exchanges, commodity markets, Parliamentary activities, foreign affairs, &c. About the only one of these services that is considered fairly impartial by German Liberial critics of the Hugenberg institution is that treating of sports, and even there it is averred that the Socialist and Labor athletic organizations do not get a fair show. All other topics are strongly colored to favor Nationalism and capitalist combinations.

The Asiatic-East European service seems to make a specialty of announcing at intervals uprisings in Soviet Russia and the imminence of a drive by the Red Army against Poland and "civilized" Europe in general. Nearly all the letters from abroad, foreign pictures and feuilletons so popular in the provincial press, are made to do their bit of propaganda for Pan-Germanism and giant industry.

Country subscribers to Hugenberg's Berlin correspondence service have the choice of four branches of that propaganda factory, according to their political status. Service A goes to People's Party papers, C to pro-Nationalist Centrist organs, D to 100 per cent. German Nationalist papers, and B to country publishers more interested in making money through advertising than in propaganda. Consequently, B is supposedly neutral.

Since Jan. 1, 1925, the Hugenberg matrix service has been waging successful competition against the other two leading matrix concerns with which it had formerly worked in harmony under a contract that expired on December 31, 1924.

Daring and Expensive Exploits of Intrepid Reporter Who Returns With Story After Two Year Chase—Also Sad Account of Bill Jones

By CHET JOHNSON

OP SMITH and Bill Jones are spaper reporters.

p is a youngster just learning the or fun. Bill has been digging up rning in big news stories for the n years.

are both wide awake, clean cut and look quite a bit alike. But ork on different papers and under it conditions.

long ago Scoop's city editor sent t to solve a mystery. The draw- an invention that meant a lot government had been stolen. hired a taxi and went to the in- s home, ordering the taxi to wait n. For two hours he snooped the place, looking for a tip. he found a cigaret stub with a monogram. He jumped into the the meter already had run up and made the rounds of every firm in the city.

oked as if he'd get nowhere, but our days of taxiing he found the no'd sold the cigarets. Scoop got iption of the purchaser, checked steamship offices and found the ad sailed two days before. An y reporter would have had the dio the captain of the ship. But knows his stuff. He chartered rlane at $250 an hour and chased . The plane fell, 100 miles out. and the pilot drifted for a week steamer happened along. Then nired the steamer to turn around se the other boat. They caught her just as she reached a Euro- rt. But the chap Scoop was after shore and caught a train. Scoop special train and chased him iles. Then, when the train was , he rented a dirigible and con- he chase. It took him into Africa, a, Japan and finally to San o and back to New York, from Scoop had started.

Scoop did most of his traveling s, chartered ocean liners and spe- ns. Finally he caught up with , who proved to be only a con- of the real thief. Scoop had battle with him and the chap old Scoop the real thief was in ng just a few blocks from the his newspaper.

hot-footed it right over there .. The thief saw him coming and a bomb at him. Scoop caught b, tossed it out into the street explosion wrecked another 10- ilding, but Scoop got his man. he walked into the editor's office nly been gone two years and of the invention had been for- ong before), and reported that the yarn. It wasn't worth four an inside page, and Scoop had $4,578,890.23 expenses for the ut the boss was so enthusiastic made Scoop star reporter with to do but interview presidents s at $500 a week.

onsider good old Bill Jones:

Bill's city editor chased him out on a whale of a yarn not long ago. Some inventions that were invaluable to the government had been stolen. Bill took a street car to the Federal building and looked up the Department of Justice. He located the agent who was working on the case at 9:00 o'clock and at 9:10 had most of the yarn. The agents had nabbed the thief as he was climbing on a train. Bill argued for five minutes with the Department of Justice boys and finally persuaded them to let him talk with the bird. He went to the cell with a photographer and got a good picture and interview. The rest of the boys had missed out, somehow, and Bill had the entire story sewed up tight within 30 minutes after leaving the office.

But when he hurried back in and started to write the yarn the city editor said:

"What's the matter with you, Jones? You should have had that story in five minutes ago! What d'yuh think this is, a weekly? What d'yuh suppose telephones are for, ornaments? This picture ain't no good! Why didn't yuh make that wooden-headed photographer pose a pretty girl with this cuckoo? An' how much of th' company's money did yuh waste on this yarn?"

"Not much," said Bill, "just carfare down to the Federal building and back. Ten cents . . . no, I lost a transfer one way and had to pay another nickel . . . fifteen cents."

The city editor hit the roof.

"Didnt' you hear th' ol' man rave last week about runnin' up expense accounts? You're stuff's been floppin' worse every day for th' last week, Jones. As a matter of fact I've been thinkin' about lettin' you go for a month. But I wanted t' give yuh one more chance. An' now you take 30 minutes an' spend 15 cents on a yarn that y' could of got by stayin' in the office and usin' the 'phone. Go down t' the cashier an' get your check, Jones; this ain't a home for wooden-headed newspaper men who don't know th' first thing about diggin' up a yarn."

Funny how things turn out, isn't it?

But Scoop Smith, y'see, is a reporter in one of these movie plays about newspaper life.

Bill Jones is a real reporter.

N. Y. TIMES LAUNCHES EVENTS CONTEST

Daily Co-operates with 11 Universities to Examine Students on Knowledge of World Affairs—Gold Medal and $250 Offered as Prize

The New York Times is co-operating with 11 big universities in a current events contest, machinery for which was set in motion at a meeting held last week between professors from each institution and the daily's editorial management in New York.

The universities taking part are: Columbia, Cornell, Harvard, Princeton, Yale, and the Universities of Chicago, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Virginia, the United States Military Academy and the United States Naval Academy.

Examinations on current events are to be held in each of the institutions some time before May 10. The winner in each case is to receive a gold medal and a cash prize of $250 which will be known as the New York Times Current Events Prize. An additional $500 is to be awarded for which all the winners in the local contests are entitled to compete.

It was decided that arrangements for the examination for this intercollegiate prize are to be confided to an executive committee appointed by the whole body of representatives and that this committee shall select the judges who will make the award. The date set was May 15. The committee consists of Dean Hawkes of Columbia, as Chairman; Colonel Holt of West Point and Professor Holcombe of Harvard.

As a regular and annual thing after this year the examination of any year will cover the events of the preceding twelve-month between May 1 and May 1. For this year, because of the short notice under which the contest is held, the period covered will be limited to the events between Oct. 1, 1925 and May 1, 1926. The announcement of the winner of the intercollegiate prize is to be made in the New York Times simultaneously with the local announcement made at the commencement of the winner's institution.

Oklahoma Press Meeting May 7-8

The annual spring session of the Oklahoma Press Association will be held May 7 and 8 at Bristow. Clyde E. Muchmore of Ponca City is president and N. A. Nichols of El Reno is secretary and treasurer of the association.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

THIS is the book for newspaper men to read—"This Is The Life!" (Alfred A. Knopf) by Walt McDougall. There is a good story, on the average, on every page. The volume demonstrates that a man who uses his pen in wordless editorials (cartoons) can also be a good reporter of what he has seen along life's highway.

Several of the chapters in this book appeared as magazine articles which I noticed at their time of publication. The opening chapter "The First Dozen Years Are The Worst" has not previously appeared in print and from a literary point of view is one of the best, though a close second is "The Bending of a Twig." Even in his chapter headings Mr. McDougall knows how to use an attention-arrester. Chapter IV "The Street of a Thousand Sins" will do by way of illustration. He refers to the Bowery which Washington Irving once intimated was what it should not be and which a popular song once told us not to go there any more. But the Bowery has always been a great street for news stories, as this chapter proves.

The book is especially rich in reminiscences of fellow workers who have divided spoils with McDougall. He pays a nice tribute to James A. Wales who presided over the art department of Judge in its cradle days. Personally I am grateful to McDougall for his splendid tribute to Eugene Zimmerman, better known as "Zim"—"the greatest comic artist of the Seventies, after L. Hopkins of the Graphic." The truth of the assertion that "Zim" made pictures that were funny in themselves regardless of the subject matter cannot be questioned. Not every one, however, can appreciate this distinction. Of all who drew for Judge during the days of my editorship of that sheet "Zim" has the warmest place in my heart—and this is no reflection upon the other artists. But to know "Zim" was to love him. If he had been more of a scrapper for salary and for position he might have been a headliner longer. But if he had done that, he would not have been "Zim."

But McDougall has many an anecdote worth telling about other cartoonists, Abbey, Opper, Powers, Davenport, Bush, Kemble, Beard, Taylor, McCutcheon, Rogers—but why catalogue the distinguished cartoonists of the country? It is more interesting to read about them in "This Is The Life!"

The most interesting sections of the book tell of McDougal's experiences with newspaper publishers: how he was hired, fired, and in a few instances, inspired by these men make his pages entertaining. Anecdotes and episodes scattered all through the volume are as amusing as anything that ever came from McDougall's pen—and that is saying a good deal. This comment especially applies to the chapter "Blossom Time in Bohemia." The incidents and comments are just the kind that a historian of the press would like to put into his volume but doesn't. For that reason histories of the press have many sins of omission, even if I am hitting pretty close home.

At the club McDougall has had no difficulty in getting listeners. The tales in his book are just as rollicking and therefore he should have plenty of readers, especially among newspaper men.

I cannot close this comment without questioning the accuracy of the picture which McDougall draws of Frank I. Cobb, the late editor of the New York World. I make this comment after I have talked over with Charles Macauley the incident which gave such an unfavorable impression of Cobb. Opinions may differ but some things are questions of fact which can be settled. But in spite of this criticism McDougall has produced a book that is worthy of the Pulitzer Prize.

CHESTER T. CROWELL chats about "Journalism in Texas" in the American Mercury for April. He tells how he started work as a cub reporter on the Express of San Antonio at a salary of $7 a week. Of the work done by the men on the Express, Mr. Crowell makes this observation:

> We would take novels or dramas and turn them into half-column news stories. We would write imaginary interviews with great figures of history or literature, making them comment on current events. Some of the men were good cartoonists and nearly all could write passable verse. Sometimes there would be a tramp reporter among us, akin in spirit to the rapidly disappearing tramp printer, and he would tell delightfully of adventures in far-away cities. There were romantic tales recounting how this or that obscure reporter dug up the damning facts, printed his story, and startled a community. Then the grand jury would meet and justice would triumph. One man who told such a story was himself the hero of it. He had killed one (or was it more?) of a gang of assassins sent to murder him and stop his articles. The details had been reported by the Associated Press, and his story was not entirely new to us. I gazed upon him worshipfully.

Mr. Crowell tells an interesting yarn about a facetious story which he wrote about the first slit skirt that appeared on the streets in San Antonio. A department-store owner immediately demanded his discharge. Since the owner did not know who wrote the story, the Express said it would comply with his request. Mr. Crowell believes that the advertiser's request was not without some justice on the ground that a newspaper accepting money from a store ought not to make fun of the goods sold and that if it insisted upon making fun of the goods sold it should decline the advertising.

Among the other Texas papers mentioned by Mr. Crowell are the Houston Post, Houston Chronicle, Dallas Dispatch, Fort Worth Record, Star-Telegram, of Fort Worth, Dallas News, and Austin Statesman. Of the last mentioned Mr. Crowell was once editor after he had severed his connections with the Herald of Mexico City as news editor: he had gone directly to the Herald from the Express of San Antonio. He has a good deal to say about salaries paid.

Of the work accomplished by Texas newspapers, Mr. Crowell is somewhat pessimistic. He intimates that during 20 years the newspapers have performed only two notable public services, undertaken on their own initiative and conducted at their own expense. One, the investigation of the state penitentiary system, led to sensational disclosures and reform through legislative action. This campaign was conducted by the San Antonio Express. The second conspicuous public service by the press was the campaign against the Ku Klux Klan by the Dallas Dispatch—"the most telling blows delivered against the Klan anywhere in this country."

Damage suits are said to flourish luxuriously in Texas. According to Mr. Crowell there are enough lawyers earning less than $2,500 a year in that state to pick the cotton crop and no small percentage of them have the ethics of pickpockets. They are especially active in picking up typographical errors.

The last comment made by Mr. Crowell about journalism in Texas follows:

> There was a day when the printshop was journalism's very best recruiting ground. But not now. The printers look upon the hirelings in the editorial department with scorn.

THE issue of the Nation for March 31, is jazzed up with a spicy article on "Journalistic Jazz" by Silas Bent. Whoever selects articles for the Nation knows how to select those that have a "punch and a wallop." Such a policy in the selection of material is what makes the Nation interesting.

The article deals with news photographs as they appear in both blanket and tabloid sheets. Attention is called to the fact that only a small fraction of the news can be photographed: a liberal estimate puts it at about twentieth of the daily grist. Of co related pictures can be inserted. "If reduction won't pose, President Cooli may be snapped while he is discuss the glorious possibility of lower le in the upper brackets." But such ph graphs are said to bear the same rela to real news photographs as a Sun supplement article does "to a story from the anvil of events"—to use s of Bent's journalistic jazz.

From his rapid fire popgun comes following shot about advertising:

> The status of the illustrated tabloids migh established inversely merely by consulting advertising pages. Are you bald or gray? you will find a marvelous specific. Are looking for ten-dollars-down suburban Here's the "dope" about them. Poison remedies and patented relief from man malady seek their places in these colu Rouge, permanent waves, depilatories, poisons, cornpads, radio accessories, face cr have their mart in the picture papers.

Mention is made of the fact that George Harvey once remarked that

IN some cities, the "leading" newspaper may have merely a few hundred more circulatio than its competitor. The Pres has 40,000 more net paid circu lation in Pittsburgh than th other two evening newspaper combined—and 35,000 more ne paid circulation in Pittsburg than the other two Sunday new papers combined.

Mr. ent suggests that a study be made by me of the schools of journalism on how e present size of the standard sheets ew from five to six, to seven, and en to eight columns in width.

On the influence of the advertiser upon e text columns Mr. Bent comments as llows:

The advertiser, although I do not believe he able to cause the suppression of news disreeable to him personally, is able as a class get a great deal printed in which he has no ject interest and which has no proper place a newspaper. He is responsible for the ious unedited police stories and endless "A." yarns which draw their weary length through daily and Sunday papers. He is responsible ause he demands that the amount of "reading tter" shall be in a certain proportion to the ume of advertising. Let us concede one tue to the tabloid.

The circulation of the tabloids came, cording to Mr. Bent, from a source tapped by newspapers of standard size. ie article concludes with this comment out those who put their pennies on ws stands for tabloids:

This new circulation was waiting, ready to be en unto himself by any publisher who wanted t kind, and was crafty enough, or mentally se enough kin to it, to give it what it wanted. iat it wanted was pictures and pabulum, not ws. It was a coincidence that news features ered an endless wall on which to hang the tures. There they hang, a "chilling, thrilling, ing" gallery.

RAHAM TAYLOR writing in the Survey Graphic expresses his personal appreciation that the Chicago Daily News is to remain in the hands of those o have actually controlled it in recent rs even though the ownership belonged Mr. Lawson. He pays a fine tribute the beneficiaries of Lawson's will because they expressed to the executors t they preferred the acceptance of the it bidder even though he might not er the highest bid. This sentiment, cording to Mr. Taylor, was shared by . Lawson's brother who is the fourth iduary legatee. This article by Mr. ylor supplements the comment recently de on the editorial page of the EDITOR PUBLISHER about the wills of newsper editors.

A NICE tribute is paid to the small town newspaper by Edward W. Bok in his latest book, "Dollars Only," (Charles Scribner's Sons). In this volume Mr. Bok gives considerable space to an editorial from the San Luis Obispo (Cal.) Tribune. This editorial is worth reading.

Editorial writers will find "Dollars Only" suggestive because of its theme which furnishes a new yard stick by which to measure success. Not many newspaper publishers, however, have followed Mr. Bok's example.

CONTEST NEARS FINALS

FEW Wall street financial houses advertise in newspapers outside of the financial centers, but one daily in a city of 80,000 obtained several pages of outside financial, real estate, trust company, etc., copy for an "investment edition," by going after it and allowing ample time to really work the proposition before date of publication.—Bert A. Teeters.

"Are You Going to Build or Improve Your Home?—Do It Now and Buy from These Reliable Merchants," would make a good streamer head and sub-head for a page of ads on paint, lumber, brick, and supplies of all kinds. A short story could be written about the season of the year, spring rush, about reliable merchandise, delivery, etc.—a story of this sort always helps to sell the page. A page of this kind can be run for a series of ten weeks by changing the ads-head, etc.—E. U.

One store has a standing advertisement order for the use of a three by five advertisement on each rainy day. The ad reads: "Why not get that umbrella now? You have promised yourself one for a long time. Get it and use it today and have it for future rainy days."—B. A. T.

In Sandusky, O., merchants advertise by neighborhoods. At Christmas, Easter, Valentine's day and other special seasons several pages of neighborhood advertising is featured. For instance Hancock street merchants take an entire page at this time. Some smaller neighborhoods take only half a page. When a new store opens up neighborhood advertising boosts it frequently with a page or double page spread.—R. T. Cassidy.

Golf is a game that simply cannot be played without "togs." Ordinary dress will not do as new recruits learn in the first lesson. "Golf Togs" may be a ribbon for a page of golf clothing and equipment ads from clothing merchants, department stores, custom tailors and sport dealers, to reach the new devotee who often learns by word of mouth where to buy his golf outfit.—C. M. L.

A special double truck of advertisements of automobile body repair shops, tire and accessory dealers, paint shops, etc. based on a leader item concerning the motor car accidents in the vicinity during the week is appearing each week in an Indiana newspaper. The spread has been in use over a period of six weeks already and should prove more popular yet during the summer months.—Bert A. Teeters.

With spring coming many people are thinking more about building homes of their own. A Boston paper hits on the idea of printing a directory giving the names, addresses, phone numbers, etc. of various contractors. They also print directories of plumbers, electricians, painters, furniture houses, heating supply houses and many others of this type. Here is an idea any paper can use.—C. E. Pellissier.

The York (Pa.) Gazette has made a special advertising event of the annual Kiwanis Club Show held in that city. The Club stages the show, charging members for exhibit space, and devoting the proceeds to the Club's work among underprivileged children. The Club runs a campaign of half-page advertisements for a week preceding the show and then cooperates on a "Kiwanis section," in which only Kiwanians and businesses having Kiwanis representation are advertised. This year 11 pages of ads were obtained. This idea might be developed in any city.—W. B.

HUNCHES

RATES paid for street car fare, electricity and gas are always interesting to your readers. A table showing the rates paid in 100 other representative cities in your section of the country can be lined up with very little trouble and yet you will find that many readers clip it out for future reference.—B. A. T.

As a brightener one of these days, send your feature reporter after a yarn on what games the school children are playing now. How about the old "run sheep run"? Or Priggy? Marbles? Are these old games still in force?—R. M. Campbell, Framingham, Mass.

A set of directions for job seekers is printed by the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. The set consists of four pertinent instructions which help in landing the job, as follows:

1st. Read the Help Wanted Columns in P. I. classified ads.

2nd. Apply for the job that you can do the best—the better the work, the more pay you will get for it.

3rd. When answering ads give all the information asked for—for your own sake.

4th. Answer promptly—First come, first served is the rule of business.—C. M. L.

SERVICES TO PUBLIC STUDIED

Journalism School Surveying Outstanding Newspaper Enterprises

The Department of Journalism at Syracuse University, Syracuse, N. Y., is endeavoring to find outstanding examples of local newspaper features that perform some public service among the daily and weekly newspapers in the United States. Departments of journalism in each state have been asked to send in the names of newspapers performing such public service, together with any descriptive data or clippings to illustrate the service accomplished.

Newspapers also have been solicited for public service data in every state, by Professor J. O. Simmons, head of the department. The Wisconsin Press Association conducted a recent contest in this respect, Prof. W. G. Bleyer acting as one of the judges. Three New York State press associations were recently appealed to by Professor Simmons with the result that many good examples are being received for the information of members as well as students entering journalism.

Offer a small prize each week for the best fictional story of not more than 800 words to subscribers only. It will surprise you how many stories you will receive each week, out of which you should be able to find one available for your Saturday or Sunday issue. Besides being interesting to the readers of the paper, this stunt should prove available in opening up a better social connection between your paper and its subscribers, and perhaps be the means of obtaining new ones.—B. F. Clark.

Ask your Chamber of Commerce secretary for strange requests that come to him. The Buffalo Chamber of Commerce in one day recently has a request for the name of manufacturers of rods to find buried treasure, to locate a missing heir whose first name alone was known, and to purchase for a Canadian chicken fancier "an artificial hen to keep chickens warm in weather 30 below zero."—E. V. R.

The Oklahoman, Oklahoma City, Okla., offered a $25 cameo pin as prize for the most typical photograph of an Oklahoma grandmother. The pictures were used in Sunday feature spreads.—T. E. R., Chicago.

PENNSYLVANIA DAILY NEWSPAPERS

A sure sign of growth is the increase of capital invested. Year after year, increased capitalization of every line of endeavor has indicated a large steady growth in business of Pennsylvania industries.

Pennsylvania is a state of unsurpassed and unlimited possibilities. Her wealth is growing to stupendous proportions and she is daily becoming a more and more desirable market. Her people are receptive to advertising, provided such advertising is offered to them through a trustworthy and wholly dependable medium.

There is no more dependable medium for advertising than the daily newspaper and, when properly used, it is an extremely valuable form of sales promotion.

Newspapers have circulations sufficiently wide and varied to reach practically every family in their cities and most of the families in the trading area. The newspaper advertiser gets his message before the eyes of all the consumers in definite markets, for the newspapers get into all of the homes.

Selling Everything in New York

THE Department Stores of Manhattan advertise and sell everything from talcum powder and underwear to golf sticks and radio sets.

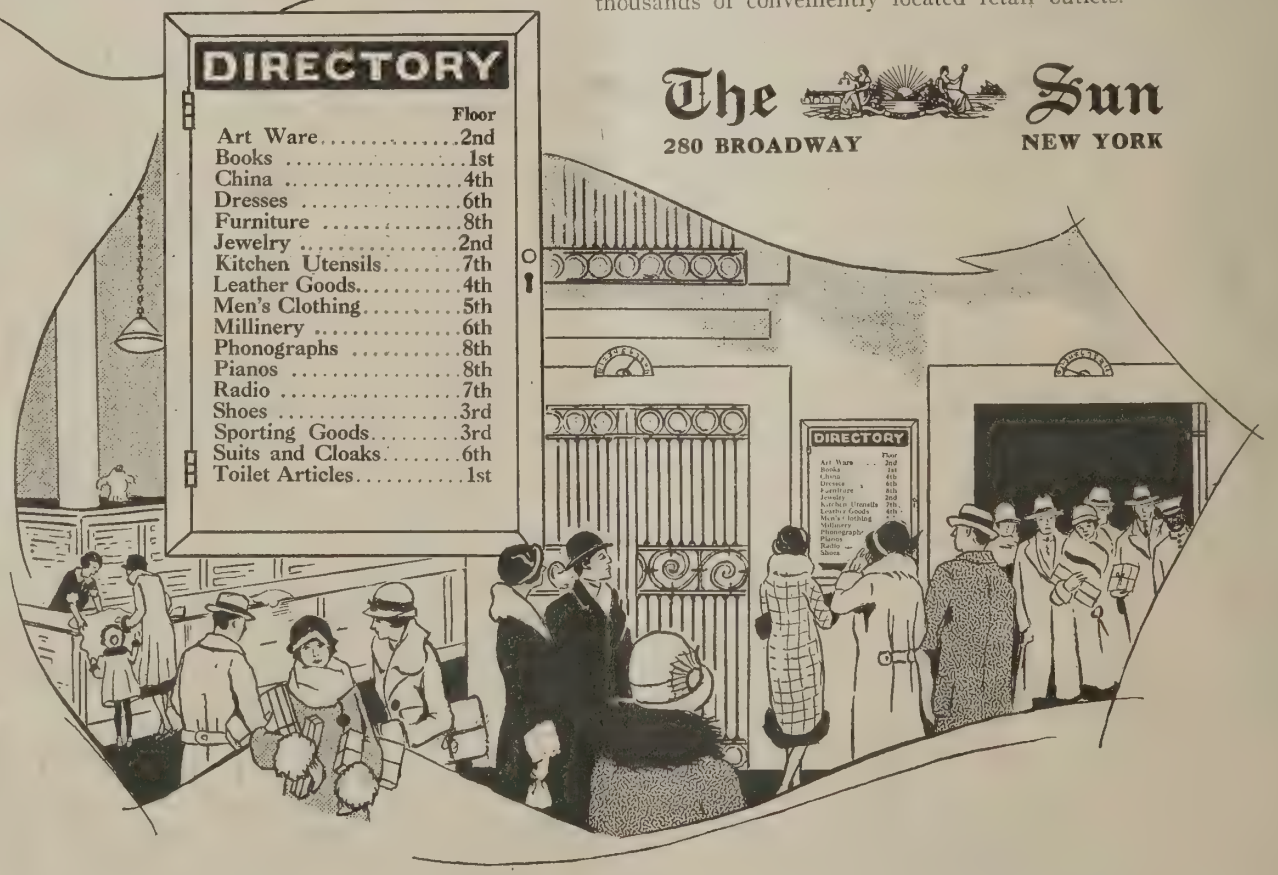
They draw their trade from all parts of New York City and its suburban area. Their customers include people of all ages, all walks of life, all degrees of intelligence, taste and buying power.

The volume of advertising placed in any New York newspaper by the Department Stores of Manhattan is a dependable indication of the responsiveness of its readers and the productiveness of its advertising columns.

For years the Department Stores of Manhattan have used more space in The Sun than in any other New York newspaper—seven-day morning as well as six-day evening.

In 1925 the advertising placed in The Sun by the Manhattan Department Stores was 21 per cent. greater than that placed in the second New York newspaper.

During the first three months of 1926 The Sun continued to lead all New York newspapers in Manhattan Department Store Advertising.



If the Department Store Advertisers of Manhattan depend on The Sun more than on any other newspaper to bring customers from all parts of the New York Trading Territory into their individual stores—certainly National Advertisers can depend on The Sun to the same extent to bring purchasers of their products into the thousands of conveniently located retail outlets.

"BROUGHT UP ON THE DAILY NEWS"

Quoting the Wall Street Journal—

"Thousands of Chicago's soundest and thriftiest families have literally been 'brought up' on The Daily News, and advertisers have been quick to recognize that its warm welcome in the family circle assured them of a ready response, particularly to sales announcements."

In The Daily News the selling message addressed to the great Chicago Family GOES HOME—where it finds respectful and thoughtful audience in the leisure hours. In recognition of this fact advertisers place more business in The Daily News than in any other Chicago daily newspaper.

Deal with these 28 leading Iowa daily newspapers as with one publication. Thorough coverage of the state. Uniform marketing cooperation through the "Iowa plan."

Here is the way to open up this prosperous IOWA market

THE key to this market is the "Iowa plan"—sponsored by the Iowa Daily Press Association.

It is the logical, economical way to make a start in this rich market of preferred prospects.

You probably know that Iowa ranks among the very top states in per capita wealth; that she has the lowest percentage of illiteracy; that she is by far the leading state in livestock and agriculture.

Another point worth remembering is that Iowa people are partial to their daily newspapers. In the cities, in the villages, on the farms, there is hardly a family over the entire state that does not read one of these daily papers every day.

These daily newspapers present the direct, quick way to tell your message to this responsive market.

Let us tell you more about Iowa —and our plan as it pertains to your goods.

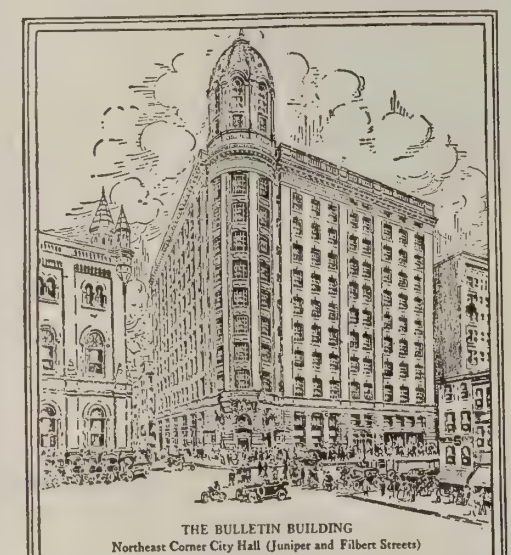
A Message to Readers of The Evening Bulletin



PRINTING PRESS manufacturers have declared that The Evening Bulletin of Philadelphia operates the largest newspaper printing plant in the world. Notwithstanding this, the printing equipment of The Evening Bulletin is being increased as fast as the builders can deliver more new model printing machines because

The Evening Bulletin gives readers all of the news of the day almost as quickly as it happens.

It must be printed and distributed in time to reach its army of readers before they leave their places of employment, and at practically each of the more than half-a-million homes in Philadelphia, Camden and their suburbs before these families sit down to their evening meal.

News-gathering, editing, setting-up, printing and distributing The Bulletin requires a very large daily working force, not including the many thousands of special correspondents of the Associated Press and other sources of news used daily by this newspaper.

In addition, 158 automobiles and other methods of delivery carry the printed copies of The Bulletin to various neighborhood sections of Philadelphia, Camden and their suburbs, where nearly 10,000 Bulletin carriers obtain their supply for distribution to the homes, offices, factories and shops of Bulletin readers.

THE BULLETIN ANNEX
Southwest Corner Juniper and Arch Streets

This entire structure is devoted to additional mechanical facilities for making The Evening Bulletin. Here the five new giant super-speed presses are located in the basement and sub-basements with a battery of smaller presses on the third floor. In addition to The Bulletin's other paper storage facilities, a two weeks supply of paper is constantly on hand on the upper floors of the Annex.

ONE OF THE BATTERY OF NEW STYLE SUPER-SPEED ROTARY PRINTING PRESSES IN THE PLANT OF THE EVENING BULLETIN—PRINTS 4800 EIGHT-PAGE OR 800 FORTY-EIGHT-PAGE BULLETINS A MINUTE

The above picture gives an idea of the immense size of the new rotary super-speed perfecting presses in The Bulletin plant. They are of the duo-double-sextuple, or 12-unit type. Five of them are now running on the main floor of The Bulletin Annex at Juniper and Arch Streets. Each press is 132 feet long, 11 feet wide, 21 feet high and weighs 500 tons.

Printing 7820 Forty-eight-Page Bulletins a Minute

The size of a newspaper printing plant is determined by the number of press units employed, and their capacity. In modern practice a printing press capable of producing a 16-page paper is counted as one unit.

The printing plant of The Bulletin consists of five duo-double-sextuple, four double-sextuple and five octuple rotary printing presses; a total of 104 separate 16-page press units producing complete copies of The Bulletin at the amazing output listed herewith:

Size	Per Hour	Per Minute
16 pages	1,173,000	19,550
24 pages	782,000	13,033
32 pages	586,500	9,975
36, 40, 44 or 48 pages	469,200	7,820

Nearly 225 tons of newsprint paper (about 9 freight-car loads) are needed each day to print The Bulletin.

JASON ROGERS, in The Advertiser's Weekly of January 23, 1926, says:

"Among all of the newspaper developments in the United States during the last thirty years none stands out as conspicuously for sheer merit or legitimate progress like that of The Philadelphia Bulletin.

"Starting in 1895 (when it passed into its present management) with 6317 circulation, The Evening Bulletin has grown to a sale of 524,662 (net paid daily average for 1925) and it all without resource to any other device than the printing of the best newspaper that could be turned out.

"Here is the table of progress:

1896	33,635	1900	124,855	1904	182,904	1909	249,811	1914	326,714	1919	448,126	1923	505,035
1897	59,281	1901	130,084	1905	211,134	1910	244,063	1915	350,531	1920	488,087	1924	518,357
1898	113,973	1902	130,439	1906	222,480	1911	253,565	1916	402,644	1921	494,629	1925	524,662
				1907	241,400	1912	281,285	1917	367,700

"The Philadelphia Bulletin stands as a shining example of the fact that it is not necessary to use sensational head-lines and colored printing to sell a meritorious product to the American public.

"While certain of the other big sellers of the day seek to put over an inferior product by forced-draft methods, The Evening Bulletin goes quietly on its way, a greater and more worth-while achievement strictly on lines of accuracy, sanity, and sound service."

March Net Paid Daily Average Circulation 551,378 copies

America's Twenty Largest Daily Newspapers

The following circulation figures were furnished by THE STANDARD RATE AND DATA SERVICE of Chicago, a national authority on newspaper circulations, and are based on U. S. Post Office and Audit Bureau of Circulations reports for the six months' period ending September 30, 1925.

Chicago Tribune	658,948	Detroit News	285,860
New York Journal	635,805	N. Y. Herald-Tribune	281,672
*Philadelphia Bulletin	520,072	New York Sun	254,189
Chicago American	441,227	N. Y. American	251,368
Chicago Daily News	387,284	Kansas City Star	244,950
Boston Post	378,587	Detroit Times	228,636
Chicago Herald-Examiner	363,162	St. Louis Globe-Democrat	226,579
New York Times	350,406	Boston American	223,810
New York World (Evening)	311,450	Cleveland Press	211,210
Philadelphia Inquirer	287,157	St. Louis Post-Dispatch	207,896

*From the above tabulation, it may be seen that the circulation of The Evening Bulletin is larger than that of any other Philadelphia newspaper, and is one of the largest in America.

Since the publication of the above figures the circulation of The Evening Bulletin has steadily increased. The average daily sales for the entire year 1925 were 524,662 copies a day. For January, 1926, they were 534,370, for February, 543,960, and for March they were 551,378 copies a day.

Dailies Battle to Win and Hold Readers as Advertising Deluge Continues

Editorial Expenses Rise Fifty Per Cent in Five Years—Mechanical Department Wage Scales Average Ten Per Cent Advance—Distribution Speed Paramount—Margin of Profit Diminishing as Gross Revenues Increase

By ARTHUR T. ROBB

THESE are golden days for the newspaper reader.

When Bennett sent Stanley into the heart of Equatorial Africa sixty years ago, he decked the New York Herald with an immortal crown. That was breath-taking enterprise in the Sixties.

Today, more than one hundred newspapers are sending three separate and distinct expeditions on aerial voyages of exploration and discovery in the vast fields of ice surrounding the North Pole. Hundreds of other newspapers share with the entrepreneurs the expenses of the ventures.

Four hundred newspapers join forces in a national "referendum" on changes in the prohibition law, and this group is paralleled by several other co-operative and individual efforts with the same objective.

Had Bennett and his contemporaries engaged in either of these projects, a new date would have been graven indelibly on the annals of journalism. History would have been made.

They are almost routine in 1926. The metropolitan newspaper editor and the small city man who is acute enough to share in the big city enterprises consider such news feats parts of the day's work. Reporters are sent to the far corners of the globe, to mid-ocean islands, to ships ice-bound in the polar circles, to the foothills of the Himalayas, often never to send a line of news, but ready for any emergency that may befall the press-sponsored adventurers far from civilized trails.

Two young women engaged in a tennis match on the Riviera have their strokes chronicled at urgent rates, triple the commercial cable tolls, so that New York and San Francisco presses are grinding on extras before the contestants have reached their dressing-rooms.

The League of Nations assembles at Geneva to discuss questions in which only academic interest is expressed by official America. The daily newspapers and the press associations which they support have their staff men on the job for days, weeks, before the meeting opens and pay cable tolls that march deep into the thousands of dollars for daily descriptive interpretative stories of the closed-door sessions.

This is a day when expense means no restraint to the news-gathering editor if the news has a promise of more circulation. It is conservatively estimated that the cost of conducting the several great press associations which serve the newspapers with spot and specialized news is well above $15,000,000 a year. No accurate estimate is possible of the amounts spent by individual papers in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, or Detroit, for news specials by cable, radio, and land-telegraph. Beyond a doubt, it exceeds in aggregate $5,000,000 a year. The salaries of men engaged in gathering, writing, editing, and commenting upon local and domestic news, press associations excluded, will not be far below $100,000,000 this year, taking the 2,000-odd daily newspapers as a group. The well-conducted daily newspaper in a town of 10,000 people will have an editorial payroll of $25,000 to $30,000 a year as a matter of course, almost of necessity.

Say that the entire expense of gathering and preparing news copy for the printer totals $100,000,000 a year, the editor still has to provide comics, serial stories, short stories, important biographical features, letters and documents of historic interest, features of fashions in dress, millinery, coiffure, hand-bags, lingerie, and the many other affairs that interest intimately the women of the community. Comic sections in color and in black, in one page, two pages, four, and very often now, eight pages, are an indispensable part of most Sunday editions.

Puzzles of various sorts for daily and Sunday issues, political and humorous cartoons, pungent topical paragraphs, special sport features, solid daily pages of news pictures selected by using one out of posssibly fifty prints offered—all of these are on the daily menu that the editor must provide his readers. Special financial services, covering the Stock Exchange in detail and often going at length into transactions on the smaller general and commodity exchanges are products of the past five years and are woven inextricably into the editorial fabric.

Editorial cost, one may hazard, has increased more than 50 per cent since the business depression that followed the post-war boom.

Speed and volume are the keynotes in gathering and presenting the published news. Speed and a broader area of concentrated distribution are the keynotes of getting the newspapers to the readers.

Pre-date editions have lost none of their popularity with circulation managers, but their use has undergone a change during the past few years. The pre-date now serves sections which only a short time ago were considered beyond the circulation radius. The former pre-date territory now gets editions that would have been suitable for suburban and outlying city distribution in 1920. The mails are too slow for metropolitan newspapers, publishers have told Congressional committees time and again during the past year, in emphasizing the need of more efficient service and lower postal rates if the post office is to keep abreast of the times in its function of speeding public information.

Motor trucks owned by the newspapers have supplanted the mail carrier and the railroad as distribution instruments in many districts, both thinly and thickly populated. Newspaper trucks start from the press-room door on 50-mile runs dotted by drops of huge bundles and of singly wrapped papers.

Press and stereotype facilities, composing room equipment that was new within the past five years (and when new was thought adequate for a decade) has gone to the scrap heap, replaced by machinery of greater capacity and speed. Plants that were the acme of newspaper architecture are abandoned or enlarged before the outside walls have had time to become smoke-stained. The clamor of advertisers for newspaper space, and more newspaper space, has been an important factor, of course, but the publishers who are meeting in New York as this is read know that the principal reason for expansion of plant facilities and of editorial service is the competition for new readers, for deeper roots in the territory served. Publishers and editors are working from the fundamentals of the news-

GANNETT-HEARST CONTEST FEATURES A. P. MEET

Board of Directors Aligned with Rochester Publisher in Membership Fight—Two Other Dailies Seeking Admission—Five Directors to Be Elected—Noyes to Report on Year's Progress

A CONTEST between the Associated Press directorate and William Randolph Hearst will reach a climax April 20 at the annual A. P. meeting in the Waldorf-Astoria, New York.

Then vote will be taken by the A. P. members in attendance and by proxy on the application of Frank E. Gannett for the election of his Rochester Times-Union to A. P. membership.

His application has been protested by the Rochester Journal & Post-Express, Hearst paper, and under A. P. by-laws, vote of 80 per cent of the membership is required for his election.

The contest, promising considerable debate, is with two exceptions, a duplicate of what occurred at the annual meeting two years ago when Hearst won. The two exceptions are:

1.—In 1924, Hearst was protesting election of two papers, the Baltimore Evening Sun, as well as the Times-Union.

2.—Mr. Gannett's election this year is unanimously recommended by the board.

Other membership applications are up for vote this year. Kenneth Priestley is seeking admission to membership for the Berkeley (Cal.) Daily Californian, a morning paper; and J. Leo Meehan for the Pasadena (Cal.) Morning Sun.

In addition to usual convention business, a discussion of news broadcasting is scheduled, and there will be a special meeting of the A. P. advisory board to be held April 19.

Terms of five directors terminate this year and successors are to be elected. A director must also be chosen to fill the unexpired terms of the late Victor F. Lawson, Chicago Daily News, publisher, whose term would have expired in 1927.

The nominating committee has renominated the five directors to succeed themselves and has designated five additional candidates, the rule requiring at least ten nominations.

The five whose terms expire are: Frank B. Noyes, Washington Star, and A. P. president; Adolph S. Ochs, New York Times; H. V. Jones, Minneapolis (Minn.) Journal; B. H. Anthony, New Bedford (Mass.) Standard; and Robert McLean, Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

Other candidates are: Paul Patterson, Baltimore Sun; W. T. Dewart, New York Sun; I. R. Kirkwood, Kansas City Star; W. J. Pape, Waterbury (Conn.) Republican; and A. K. Oliver, Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

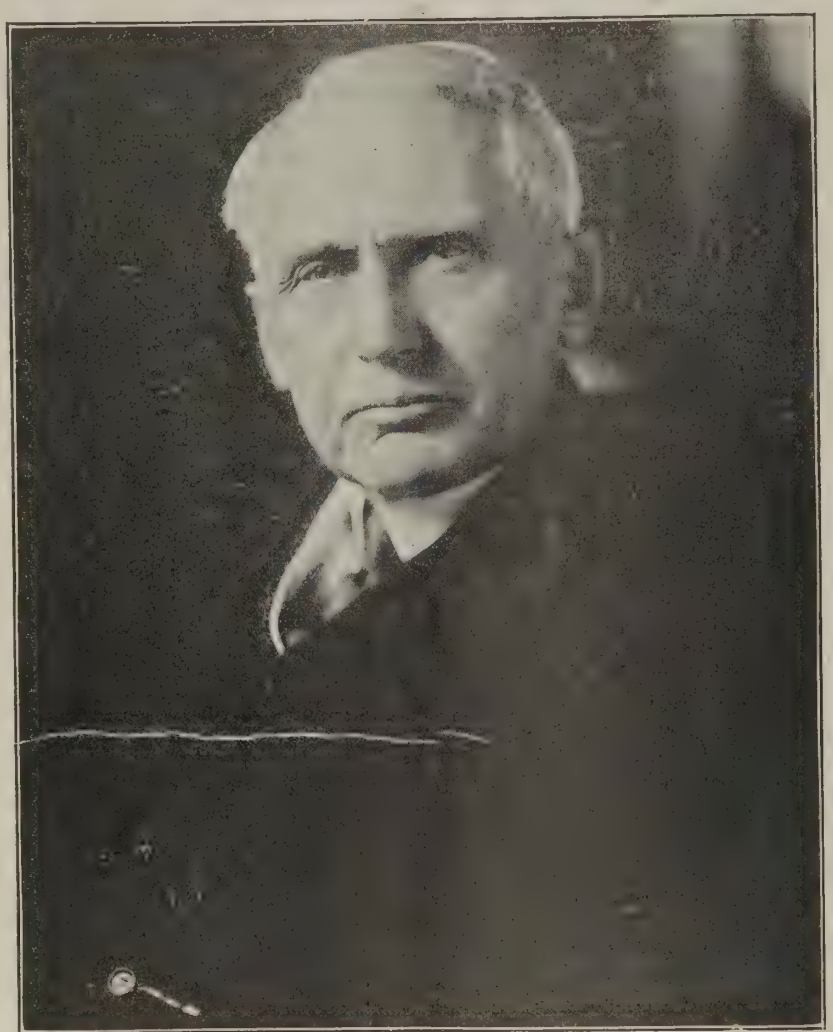
The two nominations made for the successor to Mr. Lawson are Walter A. Strong, Chicago Daily News; and Hilton U. Brown, Indianapolis News.

The Times-Union election contest will be the centre of keenest interest. When he was defeated previously, Mr. Gannett made the statement through Editor & Publisher that he would never again apply for membership.

"The A. P. must come and ask me to join," was in effect his public assertion.



And that is exactly what has happened. When Editor & Publisher heard reports that the Rochester Times-Union was again seeking A. P. election, Mr. Gannett was queried by wire. He telegraphed back:

"Can deny, but suggest you ask A. P. directors."

At Associated Press headquarters a copy of a letter was issued, which, addressed to all members, urged them to vote for Mr. Gannett since the directors unanimously recommended his election. This is the first time in A. P. history such action has been taken by the board.

Arthur Brisbane, Hearst editor, immediately after the headquarters letter was in circulation, also began canvassing A. P. members by mail asking sufficient votes to prevent the Rochester Times-Union's admission.

He charged the directors with trying to "force the voting of a membership to the Times-Union" and said they hoped to confuse the issue by getting the membership to authorize them to vote Mr. Gannett in, through "your signature to the usual blanket proxy for the 27th annual meeting."

Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State, Associated Press Luncheon Speaker

"Having scotched this attempt in 1924, when your proxies were voted directly on this issue, are you going to permit this thing to be done under the cover of a general proxy for the regular annual meeting?" Mr. Brisbane asked the members.

In the letter Mr. Brisbane said there has never been any complaint against the Rochester Journal & Post-Express, "which, as a member of the Associated Press, is discharging faithfully and loyally its every duty to that organization.

"Why should Mr. Gannett be given a franchise for nothing that many other members have spent fortunes to obtain?" the letter continued.

"After having so emphatically decided less than two years ago that you would not destroy the value of all Associated Press franchises you own as well as Hearst's; and that you would not override the right of protest, are you going to allow it to be done now, under cover of a general proxy at this annual meeting?"

At the time Mr. Brisbane's letter was published, Mr. Noyes, A. P. president, wired Editor & Publisher:

"I can only say that after consideration extending over several years, the 14 newspaper men who act as directors of the Associated Press are unanimous in their views that the best interests of their organization will be served by the election of Mr. Gannett to membership and that they will so recommend to the membership at the annual meeting."

The annual meeting will start April 20, with the reading of the annual report by Mr. Noyes.

The report this year will tell of A. P. growth. The members will be officially informed of the installation of a new printer circuit from New York to Kansas City to start operation May 1. The present status of the employes reserve and investment fund will be reviewed. The work done by Kent Cooper, elected general manager last year, will receive comment.

Soon after this report is completed, Mr. Noyes will probably repeat the directors' recommendation of Mr. Gannett's election and vote will be taken. In 1924 debate preceded the voting. William A. DeFord, chief counsel of the Hearst Corporations, argued the protest rights of the Rochester Journal & Post-Express and the Baltimore News. He was answered by Mr. Gannett for the former paper and Mr. Patterson for the latter. Other members took part in the discussion.

Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State, will be guest of honor and chief speaker at the Associated Press luncheon Tuesday. Last year Vice-President Dawes addressed the members.

A number of A. P. members own and operate broadcasting stations. At the last annual convention it was resolved to allow members to broadcast A. P. news of outstanding importance. This resolution was passed because in the 1924 Presidential elections, broadcasting of A. P. returns was not permitted, and those members who wished to broadcast were forced to buy election night service from other services.

Members owning broadcasting stations have been instructed by the management to report at the annual meeting whether or not there is any general interest on the part of the radio public in news, given them verbally over the air.

G. B. Dealey, who, with associates, recently acquired majority control of the Dallas News and Journal, operates a broadcasting station. In New York this week, he told Editor & Publisher he intended to discuss broadcasting.

"Radio fans prefer entertainment to news," was his opinion. "But," he added, "of course they take whatever they can get for nothing."

DALLAS CASE POSTPONED

A. P. Directors Take No Action on Membership Application of Journal

Associated Press directors meeting in New York April 14 voted to postpone action on the application of the Dallas Journal for membership, protested by the Dallas Times-Herald.

It is the second time the application has been before the board this year. The application, however, will not come up for vote before the membership at the annual meeting. Settlement of the dispute by the publishers of the two papers themselves is sought.

G. B. Dealey is publisher of both the Dallas News and the Journal. E. J. Kiest is publisher of the Times-Herald.

The News has a seven-day morning newspaper membership; the Times-Herald a six-day evening membership. The latter paper wants to get the A. P. Saturday night report for its Sunday edition. The former wants evening membership for the Journal.

The proposition discussed April 14 was that both these elections be made, the News waiving its Sunday protest right, and the Times-Herald its evening protest.

Tom Gooch, editor and general manager of the Times-Herald, represented that paper before the board. The Times-Herald, to support its protest, has had published a handsome leather-bound book, rehearsing its history of past services to the Associated Press.

Mr. Dealey and E. B. Doran, director of the news and telegraph departments of the News and Journal, represented those papers.

All three declined comment when questioned by Editor & Publisher, stating the affair was "a private quarrel."

TWO ASK C. P. MEMBERSHIP

Board to Pass on Applications of Trail Buiietin and Moose Jaw Mail

The Board of Directors of the Canadian Press will have two applications for membership before it when it holds its next meeting April 26. Elmer D. Hall is applying for an evening paper membership (pony service) for the Trail (B. C.) Daily Bulletin, and Frank Wright for a morning paper membership (leased wire) for the Moose Jaw (Sask.) Daily Mail.

Mr. Wright was formerly editor of the Moose Jaw News, which was taken over a few years ago by the Times. The Times, though a liberal paper, retained Mr. Wright as editor of a conservative editorial section, the paper thus having both liberal and conservative editorials. This arrangement terminated recently and now Mr. Wright proposes to establish a purely conservative morning daily. It will be the only conservative daily in Saskatchewan.

Parker Celebrates 87th Birthday

Charles S. Parker, dean of active newspaper men of New England and propably the oldest editor in the "harness" to-day celebrated his 87th birthday at his home in Arlington, Mass., last week. Mr. Parker publishes two weekly papers, the Arlington Advocate and the Lexington Minute Man. He began newspaper work in 1854 as an apprentice on the Woburn Journal and has been active ever since.

EXPANSION OF SERVICES CHIEF A. N. P. A. TOPIC

Question of Adding Mechanical and Traffic Departments to Standardize Press Rooms and Fight Freight Rates Most Important Convention Business—J. S. Bryan Slated for Presidency

FORMAL vote will be taken next week by the members of the American Newspaper Publishers Association at their annual meeting in New York on the long agitated proposed expansion of the organization's service departments.

Uppermost in the minds of association leaders is the organization and operation of two new departments; one to handle

JOHN STEWART BRYAN

A. N. P. A. vice-president, who will discuss financing of new expansion plans traffic, the other mechanical problems, and both to be directed by paid experts added to headquarters' staff in New York.

The expansion program, involving reramping of the association's structure, was endorsed in principle by delegates attending the first A. N. P. A. fall convention at White Sulphur Springs last November. Next week's vote will determine finally whether the A. N. P. A. will grow or stand still, performing only its many present functions.

It has not yet been decided on which day the vote will be taken. Committee reports are slated as usual for the opening session, April 21. Because of its importance, it is expected the poll will be conducted immediately after this regular annual business.

Of considerable and obvious importance is the report of the postal committee, headed by Jerome D. Barnum, Syracuse Post-Standard. This, with the other reports, may consume so much time, that the matter of expansion will not be officially broached until the following day.

Then John Stewart Bryan, Richmond News-Leader, A. N. P. A. vice-president, and chairman of the committee on membership matters, will probably be called upon by S. E. Thomason, Chicago Tribune, and association president, to take the platform and outline a suggested new financial system involving increased dues, necessary to any plan of extension.

Incidentally, Mr. Thomason has served two terms as A. N. P. A. president, and will thus this year make his farewell speech as chief of the big newspaper group. The association's history in such matters points to the election of Mr. Bryan as his successor.

Mr. Bryan in his address will show that any expansion at all on the part of A. N. P. A. will require a new system of membership dues.

The A. N. P. A.'s present income is $150,000 a year, raised largely by a sliding scale arrangement, with membership charges fixed in part according to the number of composing machines operated by member publishing plants.

A tentative proposal to permit association advance is that the present assessment on mechanical equipment be continued, but in addition to that and in lieu of present membership dues, there will be a variable charge based on the national advertising rate of every member having in excess of 10,000 circulation.

Present membership dues are $75 a year, and this sum holds for a newspaper whether its circulation is 2,100 or 1,000,000. The mechanical assessment is $1 a month for each composing machine run by a member publisher.

The charge on the national advertising rate differs somewhat from the White Sulphur Springs plan, according to which membership dues were to be increased to larger papers and decreased to smaller.

How much the charge on the national advertising rate will be is a question to be decided by the members at the Waldorf Astoria next week.

L. B. Palmer, association manager, would not hazard even the faintest suggestion of how much the directors expected would be raised should the members decide in favor of expansion. Favorable vote is anticipated, because of the White Sulphur Springs test.

"It is a question for the membership alone to decide how much service they want," he said.

Various amounts have been discussed. Double the present income is considered advisable in some sources, and others believe a lower increase will be sufficient, even down to a boost of $100,000 a year in the present $150,000 income.

Imagination can carry any writer away in a consideration of the two proposed new departments, traffic and mechanical. Sticking to the barest outlines as furnished by A. N. P. A. officials, both departments seem vital and progressive.

Charles F. Hart, New York Times, and chairman of a special mechanical committee, will tell members next week what an A. N. P. A. mechanical department could do if organized. Mr. Hart has frequently scored the lack of standardization in press room equipment. An A. N. P. A. department, it will be pointed out, could bring publishers and manufacturers together in a plan of standardization which would save both parties considerable waste, time and money. Mr. Hart appointed several months ago to study this problem for the A. N. P. A., now has his findings ready.

As the situation prevails today, newspapers frequently send representatives of their mechanical departments on inspection trips to visit publishing plants to study press room and composing room improvements and innovations.

An expert in A. N. P. A. employ could perform this function for the entire membership.

He would be the headquarters for advice on all existing mechanical methods. He would look into and report on all new contrivances manufactured and offered for sale. He would visit member shops to advise and assist employes in the solution of mechanical problems. The membership would be kept up-to-date on mechanical matters.

A.N.P.A. leaders describe a traffic department as "a crying need of American publishers today."

Problems of newsprint transportation, it is pointed out, have been transferred from manufacturer to publisher shoulders. Today when a publisher buys newsprint he pays the freight, a charge formerly met by the paper men. In other words, newsprint is now f.o.b. mill, instead of f.o.b. sidewalk. This has been the rule since 1917.

Thus today freight matters coming before the Interstate Commerce Commission and before transportation companies, must be met by the publishers individually. And such matters naturally call for specialized and expert attention.

To meet these problems some large newsprint users have established their own traffic departments. But many traffic matters come up from time to time that are national in their scope. Freight rates, for instance, lack uniformity. Other opportunities for a national organization to function might be listed—problems which might be handled for the benefit not only of the entire membership, but also matters relating to various groups and sections of the country.

A.N.P.A. members, it is asserted, would profit enormously should the association build up and maintain a proper source of direction and initiative in traffic matters.

An outstanding authority on traffic questions in the newspaper field is E. M. Antrim, of the Chicago Tribune, and chairman of the A.N.P.A. traffic committee. His report is considered important convention business.

The A.N.P.A. postal committee, headed by Mr. Barnum, is in the midst of a smashing drive for restoration of the 1920 schedule of postal rates before the end of the present session of Congress, and its report is of general interest.

The A.N.P.A. is seeking to prove before the Joint Congressional Postal Commission that not only is the Post Office Department losing business by charging rates on newspaper mail which are so

WELCOME TO NEW YORK

Written for Editor & Publisher

By FRANK SULLIVAN

Special Writer, New York World

THE visiting editor will naturally want to see New York. Or maybe not. Who can tell! I knew a man once who didn't want to see New York. He lived here. It was his proud boast that he had never seen the House of Correction on Welfare Island in all the 50 years he had spent in the city, and then one day a detective saw him taking a handbag from a lady named Mrs. Rosenblum. There is a family in New York by that name, you know. So the poor fellow had to go see the House of Correction after all. My how he kicked and screamed! They had to promise him strawberry ice cream every day before they could get him to go.

If you do see anything, though, go see our night clubs. They are those quaint little meeting houses that have sprung up all over New York since Prohibition. There being no more drinking in New York, people naturally have to have something to do, so they go to these night clubs and compare notes, play lotto, and they tell me (but don't let on where you got it) that in some of these places they actually go so far as to play Postoffice!

It doesn't make any particular difference which night club you go to. Any one will do. Just come out of the theater, turn to the right wherever you happen to be and ring the bell, and you'll be at a night club. They are very, very exclusive. Don't forget that. Absolutely no one but the friends of the proprietor are admitted, and he, like the little girl in the joke, hasn't an enemy in the world. Also, only those wearing evening dress are admitted, unless you happen to be wearing anything else, but carry a roll that would choke a cow. Special test cows are provided at the entrances to all the better night clubs.

I'm awfully sorry you can't see Peggy Joyce. I really wanted to have you see her, but I see by the papers where she went to Miami last week to get engaged to her sixth husband. Perhaps, though, before you go, she'll be back getting ready for Number 7, and so you may meet her, after all. In case I'm not with you you'll know her. She'll be the blonde your wife wouldn't like.

If you don't mind, we'd rather not have you go see the Statue of Liberty this spring. She's been working terribly hard keeping up appearances, you know, and she has had a breakdown. I really thought we'd lose her. Had four doctors for her in one night. She's doing a little better now, and we're giving her cod liver oil, but the doctor recommends absolute quiet and removal to some free country, if possible, for a change.

They say the Aquarium is a very nice place to go. I believe they keep fish there. Fancy building a special aquarium for fish on land worth $10,000 a foot when there's a whole ocean within stone's throw for them to occupy. That's New York!

Perhaps we could even go so far as to tender you one of those fancy orgies that are all the rage here now—you know, where a girl comes out of a bathtub of champagne, at the improper moment. But perhaps, we all being newspapermen together, it would really be a pretty and appropriate touch to have a night city editor come out of the bathtub instead. That would be a surprise, and would be more economical too, because I don't think we'd have to use champagne for a night city editor. He might consent to appear in plain gin.

You ought also to see Grant's Tomb, so called because it is the tomb of a man named Grant, or some such name.

And you certainly ought to see my wife when I come home at seven o'clock in the morning after I've told her I'd be home by ten o'clock the night before.

Post Office Officials Indicate They Will Continue Their Opposition to Any Change—Hearings Resumed in Capital

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Post Office Department officials made it clear this week that continued opposition by the Department to the proposed restoration of the 1920 postal rates on second class matter may be expected by the publishing interests to the finish of the present Congressional battle to readjust rates.

The Department has not, however, any proposal for further increases on periodicals or newspapers in contemplation, it was intimated.

When the Special Joint Congressional Committee on postal rates resumed hearings Wednesday Joseph E. Stewart, chief executive assistant to Postmaster General Harry S. New reappeared to combat testimony given previously by Elisha Hanson, Washington representative of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, George C. Lucas, of the American Publishers Conference, and other spokesmen for the publishing interests who had joined in urging an immediate return of the 1920 second class schedules.

Mr. Stewart first referred to the testimony of Mr. Hanson, stating that in his opinion Mr. Hanson's testimony, besides asking for an early return to the 1920 scale of postal rates, was more of a complaint that the Post Office Department did not supply needed transportation for the handling of daily newspapers where the railroads had taken off trains and where there was not an available train for service when needed by the publisher. The postal official indicated that the daily newspaper publishers were now taking care of their interests either by their own truck service or by the utilization of that supplied by some outside organization.

Considerable discussion ensued between Mr. Stewart and members of the Committee as to the comparison of the kind of services that the publisher buys from these outside transportation agents and that which is furnished by the Post Office Department in the regular handling of second class mail.

The Department's spokesman took exception to the statement that the Department could buy this truck transportation at anywhere near the price the Department now pays to the railroads for a three foot space which would be the smallest unit they could buy in regular service.

Mr. Stewart then took up the arguments of Mr. Lucas, presented last week in connection with the restoration of the 1920 rates. He emphasized the fact that there had been various increases since 1920 in the expense of the Post Office Department, including several wage increases and increased transportation costs that would approximate $200,000,000.

He argued that this should be taken into consideration in making a division of the increases established by the War Revenue Act of 1917.

He took issue with the statement of Mr. Lucas that 1920 was the point when publishers of newspapers and periodicals began seriously to divert their publications from the Post Office Department. He submitted a statement showing the revenue at pound rates and the weight of such mail handled during the various years from 1918 to 1925. While he showed that this did show a reduction in 1921 over 1920, and in 1922 over 1921, the revenues continued to increase on a small percentage until in 1925 the revenues of the department were more than $4,000,000 in excess for that of 1920, while the poundage had only increased in the five year period 41,000,000 lbs.

Mr. Stewart contended that this accomplished the purpose of congress in establishing these war rates of 1921 and 1922 in that it brought a larger increase in revenue than it did in weight.

On behalf of the Post Office Department, Mr. Stewart also questioned the arguments of the second class interests that the return of the 1920 rates would be to the advantage of the Post Office Department in that it would return to the mails some 100,000,000 pounds of second class mail that is now distributed by other means. He attempted to show that this additional poundage would cost the department more than the revenue they would receive from the traffic but upon being questioned he admitted that he had applied to this tonnage the average rate now received from all second class mail instead of the higher rate that would obtain on this particular class of mail that would be returned.

The session ended with a partial discussion of free distributed publications. Mr. Stewart explained that the department is unqualifiedly opposed to the granting of second class privilege to this class of publications as he declared it was admitted that they were designed primarily for advertising purposes and not for the purposes of dissemination of news, literature and the arts, as is required of the publications that are granted this privilege.

It is expected that the Joint Committee will hold an executive session early next week to determine its course. Observers here feel that no bill will be reported at this session.

PRESS FREEDOM DENIED

Jersey Sheriff Arrests News Woman in Textile Strike Zone

A reporter and photographer were "exiled" from Passaic, two reporters were thrown from a court for taking notes, and a newspaper woman was arrested this week during strike disturbances in and around Passaic, N. J.

Chief of Police Richard O. Zober deprived Ray Doyle and Jack Wallace, reporter and photographer respectively of the New York Mirror of their police cards and ordered them out of town "never to return," Philip A. Payne, managing editor of the Mirror, ordered the pair right back to Passaic as soon as they returned to the office. They went, with no trouble.

Louis Stark, New York Times, and Jack Spewack, New York Evening Graphic, were the men ejected from a court room for taking notes during the arrangement of strikers.

Esther Lowell, New York correspondent of the Federated Press, labor news service, was arrested in Garfield immediately after Sheriff George P. Nimmo of Bergen County had read the riot act on April 12. A policeman had twisted a New York woman's wrist, thrown her to the ground, and beaten her. Miss Lowell reached down to assist the prostrate woman to her feet.

"Arrest that woman!" ordered the Sheriff, jerking his thumb towards Miss Lowell.

Miss Lowell was taken to Garfield police headquarters and held for $10,000 bail. After a night in jail, she was released on $2,500 bond.

She was in the court room when Spewack and Stark were thrown out.

"They have torn up the Constitution in Bergen County," Miss Lowell said to EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

Miss Lowell was formerly with the San Francisco Bulletin and the Los Angles Record. She is a graduate of the University of California.

Barstow Paper in New Home

The Barstow (Cal.) Printer is now located in its own cement building, which provides four times the floor space previously devoted to the publication. New equipment has been added.

New Home for Paterson Call

The Paterson (N. J.) Morning Call has started construction of a new $350,000 building on Church street in the heart of the city. Colonial type architecture has been followed in the design of the building, in which will be incorporated all modern devices for labor-saving.

Dailies Teaching Auto Driving

The St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press, co-operating with the St. Paul Association of Public and Business Affairs and Dunwoody Institute, is conducting a school for women automobile drivers and offers six free lectures on safe driving, beginning April 13.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Frank B. Noyes

THE career of Frank B. Noyes, president of the Associated Press and of the Evening Star Newspaper Company, which publishes the Evening Star, oldest newspaper of the National Capital, has not been like that of a Horatio Alger hero who, starting from scratch or even with a handicap, eventually finds himself in the vanguard of the race. Rather is it comparable to the progress of the relay-runner who, handed the baton by his fore-runner, together with a comfortable lead, increases the latter and is ready to pass on the former with firmness and certainty.

Mr. Noyes was never a poor boy, either as regards the comforts and opportunities of life, or in the sense of his ranking as an employe and executive. The son of the late Crosby S. Noyes, for more than 40 years editor-in-chief and vice-president of the Star, he entered the business office at an age when he was compelled to mount a high stool in order to pass papers over the counter. While still a young man he had become business manager and treasurer, positions which he held until 1901, when he moved to Chicago and became editor and publisher of the Record-Herald of that city.

Since 1894 Mr. Noyes had been a director and member of the executive committee of the Associated Press. In 1900, on the occasion of the reorganization of the newsgathering agency, he was elected president and in May of last year he completed his twenty-fifth consecutive term in that office. On that occasion impressive tribute was paid to him for his unremitting work on behalf of the public. The members gave him a glowing golden bowl and a "Book of Remembrance" as keepsakes. The letters in the latter, written by his associates, really outshone the polish of the metal in the former.

Always an enthusiastic and observant traveller, Mr. Noyes made a semi-official trip around the world in 1922-1923 during which, in his person, the power and prestige of the Associated Press were recognized and honored in a variety of ways while, as its president, he made a number of telling speeches in various important cities of the Orient.

In 1923 the French Government, through Ambassador Jusserand, made Mr. Noyes an officer of the Legion of Honor, a distinction conferred in recognition of the invariable fairness, accuracy and propriety of the Associated Press reports both during and subsequent to the World War.

In 1910, following a series of deaths among the executive owners, he returned to the Washington Star as president of the company which publishes it. The personal characteristics of such an executive are about what one would be led to expect by his record. His silences are, perhaps, less frequent than those of Calvin Coolidge, meaning that they last longer. Perhaps, too, they are more affable. Like the President, when he has something to say he possesses a flow of language which is as satisfactory as it is unexpected. He says himself that his career, especially that part connected with the A.P., has been featured by no outstanding achievements but work. He enjoys yachting.

WHAT A. P. MEMBERS ASKED FROM DIRECTORS

Chairmen of District Advisory Boards, Totaling 40 Members, Make Suggestions for Improving Service in Annual Reports

EFFECTIVE liason between members of the Associated Press and the A. P. executive staff and directorate was accomplished this year. For the first time the 40 members of the four divisional advisory boards were named by vote of members of their own state A. P. asso-ations, becoming the elected spokesen of their respective groups. These A. state organizations in a resolution ssed last year at the annual meeting ere expressly recognized as the "adsories" of the management.

J. N. Heiskell, Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette

Chairmen of three divisional advisory ards have made suggestions to the manement. They are: J. N. Heiskell, ittle Rock (Ark.) State Gazette, southn division; Richard Hooker, Springfield epublican, eastern division, and Hugh Powell, Coffeyville (Kan.) Journal, ntral division.

What the A. P. members thus asked om the directorate is herewith sumarized.

The Southern advisory board met at lanta, with representatives present from ch of the 11 states of the division.

Mr. Heiskell was delegated to present the directors a recommendation that e report should contain more interpretive matter.

"It is not meant, of course, that the ssociated Press should depart from perct impartiality or discuss matters as wspaper editorials do," he explained.

"If the word 'interpretative' should m to connote expression of opinion or awing of deductions we could use the rds 'explanatory' or 'informative' as scriptive terms for this kind of mat. What is desired is the illuminating erpretation of facts and background l antecedent circumstances, even if such cumstances need go back centuries o history.

"The interpretative matter might be inded in the news dispatch or follow or be the subject of a separate article.

"It happened that on the day of the thern Advisory Board meeting an Ata paper published a Paris dispatch an independent service, dealing with French cabinet situation, which was ective in that it conveyed the informaon that although cabinet ministers may nge frequently, nobody else in a govrment department is changed, and therefore the government functions uninterptedly—more so indeed than does the ernment of the U. S., when a cabinet nges with a change in the Presidency. It seems that with Premiers occupying stage at Paris and receiving the attion of the world, every newspaper uld recently have welcomed a dispatch correspondence giving a clear underding of the powers and functions of French president.

How many people in the United States erstand, for example, for all they have l in news dispatches, why it is that Greek government is subject to so uent and radical changes?

never understood the revolutionary situation in China until it was explained to me by a United States army officer who had spent years in that country. The chief foreign correspondent of the Chicago Daily News recently said in a reminiscent article that he had performed the feat of getting in the old Chicago Record a story of more than half a column long by obtaining from a Chinese in Chicago a statement on the situation in China and that Victor F. Lawson had written on the margin of that issue of the paper 'This is good journalism.'

"Too often the public reads of events with little understanding of the background or circumstances. I know no better way to describe interpretative reports than to say that they should be what a person would hear if he should sit down and talk with a native of a foreign country or a student of certain questions or an explorer or traveler.

"The American people could be vastly informed through linking up with the news of the day the resources in knowledge of history, economics and science possessed by the professors in American colleges and universities. An event that to the man of average intelligence and information is a marvel may be to the historian or the economist or the scientist merely a recurrence no more remarkable than the recurrence of the tides of the sea.

"An arrangement might be made with the National Geographic Society for interpretative matter dealing with subjects in its field. An article describing the topography and the rivers in the regions of Europe which have recently had serious floods would have been of great interest.

"Perhaps greater care and discrimination would be required in the interpretation of domestic than of foreign events. But that interpretation of domestic events is practicable is shown by those interpretative dispatches that are published in identical words in newspapers of widely differing political and economic views. Of the increasing vogue of the interpretative correspondent in Amreican journalism I know I need not speak to publishers and editors."

H. J. Powell, Coffeyville (Kan.) Journal

Richard Hooker, Springfield (Mass.) Republican

The report of the eastern division, presented by Mr. Hooker, was chiefly concerned with the organization and administration of state A. P. associations.

"In order to promote the further usefulness of the state associations and the largest attendance at their meetings, it is respectfully suggested that it would be helpful if the board of directors should cause a statement to be issued to the general membership, calling attention to the fact that the meeting of the state associations are asked to consider highly important questions," this report stated.

"Such a statement might also call attention, if it should seem appropriate to the directors to the fact that, while the state associations are purely advisory bodies, membership in which is voluntary, their recommendations will naturally have weight with the management in making decisions of practical importance and that, therefore, any member who wishes to influence as largely as possible, the decision of matters affecting his own interests, should be present, or be responsibly represented, at state association meetings.

"For the proper development and coordination of news gathering by State Associations, it is respectfully requested that the Associated Press furnish each state or regional group with a map similar to the one prepared for the Pennsylvania State Association, showing the location of each member newspaper and the territory it is expected to cover for the State Association and the general service.

"The Advisory Board feels that there is still some uncertainty and difference of interpretation in various member offices as to what, under the regulations of the Associated Press may be done in incorporating facts from Associated Press stories in articles prepared by the staff reporters of member papers. A letter from the general manager to a Massachusetts member, written in June, 1925, covered this matter briefly and admirably. The Advisory Board, endorsing the recommendation of the Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Vermont joint-state association, is of the opinion that it will be helpful to many offices, if the interpretation of the rules, which Mr. Cooper then gave, is generally available by order of the directors.

R. E. Ellinwood, Tucson (Ariz.) Star

"The Advisory Board is, however, mindful of the fact that if permission is to be continued for the incorporation of facts for Associated Press stories in stories by staff reporters this privilege must not be abused and that if it should be abused, it might have to be withdrawn.

"The Advisory Board wishes to place on record its approval of the general improvement in the writing of Associated Press dispatches. It believes that the greater freedom which has been allowed to correspondents in making their reports vivid and interesting, can be continued without the sacrifice of that scrupulous regard for accuracy, which has always been and must be the first requirement of Associated Press dispatches. The Advisory Board wishes also to record its approval of the so-called 'fixed features,' sent out regularly on scheduled days, and believes that they have become a valuable part of the Associated Press service."

The report of the central division, representing 40 per cent of the total A. P. membership, as presented by Mr. Powell, took the form of results obtained from a questionnaire.

The questionnaire sent out to 470 members in the central division, and answered by 167, discusses 19 subjects regarding the A. P. service, with recommendations and suggestions for improvement. The replies were accepted by the board to be digested and acted upon if advisable.

Expressions of opinion were evenly divided answering one question as to whether or not the membership would suggest fines or other forms of discipline for infractions of the A. P. rule forbidding member papers from furnishing news to non-member papers. Of 83 newspaper editors replying to this question 40 were affirmative and 43 negative.

Those who answered the questionnaire were overwhelmingly opposed to any further reduction in the volume of crime news carried by the A. P. with the vote 30 in favor and 87 against. Members supplying specific suggestions on this question, which was number eight of the 19 queries in the questionnaire, objected to the manner in which the A. P. handled the Rhinelander case in White Plains, N. Y. One member wanted "all smut

S. E. Thomason

S. E. THOMASON, one of the busiest men in America, claims to be a natural idler.

"I am the best loafer that ever was born," he told a friend recently. "I love to sit and think, and part of the time just to sit."

Perhaps he is right about himself. But few of us ever have seen him working at his favorite pastime.

Mr. Thomason is general manager of the Chicago Tribune and vice president of the Tribune Company.

Emory Thomason came to the Tribune via the law. He had been associated with Col. R. R. McCormick, editor of the Tribune, who is also a lawyer. The legal affairs of the Tribune were handled by Mr. Thomason. In 1918, when William H. Field resigned as business manager, Mr. Thomason took over his job.

Rather a revolutionary thing this, the appointing of a young and comparatively obscure lawyer to the business managership of a metropolitan newspaper. But if there were those who had any misgivings about this young man's ability to hold down the job, they were quickly reassured. S. E. Thomason brought to his new work an extraordinary mental alertness, a keen generalship, coupled with a splendid physical condition which enabled him to overcome a hundred and one problems.

That was something like eight years ago. In the intervening years, Emory Thomason has had an important part in every phase of the development through which the Chicago Tribune has passed. A very plain man, with a seemingly inexhaustible fund for human sympathy, he immediately gained the confidence and the affection of the men over whom he was placed. And his calmness "under fire," his continued refusal to get visibly excited or worried, has reacted upon the organization about him to promote a general atmosphere of orderly sureness.

It might be said of Emory Thomason that he is that type of man who sees life as something to be enjoyed to its fullest—and then proceeds to enjoy it. Anything that he does—and seemingly he does everything—is done with a great relish, and a fine thoroughness.

He says he loves to loaf. And yet, in addition to directing the infinite activities of Tribune business—of keeping closely in touch with production, with advertising, circulation, purchasing, legal affairs, paper traffic matters, radio and promotion, he finds time to be president of the A. N. P. A. and a golf club; to ride and shoot; to play handball daily at the Tribune Plant, with executives or men from the ranks, the only requisite being that they must know the game. He bowls in the Tribune league, and plays squash. He seems to be needed in some administrative capacity on about all of his four city clubs and three country clubs.

And yet he finds time for his home life, and gets infinite pleasure in his reading. One of the big events of his week is Sunday evening tea, when his daughter brings in regularly 15 to 20 youths and maidens. Emory Thomason presides—and no power could keep the young folk away.

Few of his friends know that his first association with newspapers was years ago. While a student at the University of Michigan he was managing editor of the Michigan Daily, the college newspaper. He graduated from Michigan in 1904.

The enjoyment he gets from speedy stream-lined motor cars is proverbial around the Tribune. On a day not long ago, two of his fellow Tribunites were watching him climb into the handsome motor equipage parked in front of Tribune Tower.

"I guess," said one of them, "I guess the boss likes automobiles pretty much, doesn't he?"

"Absolutely!" replied his companion, "that man likes EVERYTHING!"

And that, in its best sense, somehow sums up S. E. Thomason.

COPYRIGHT RADIO PROGRAM CALLED "BLUFF"

New York Legal Experts Declare KFI's Handout is News Material and Therefore Not Copyrightable —Station Seeking to Force Printing of Advertisers' Names

"BLUFF!" This word was hurled by New York lawyers again this week at Earle C. Anthony, and Earle C. Anthony, Inc., distributor of Packard Motor Cars, Los Angeles, Cal., and operator of the radio super-station KFI.

Mr. Anthony through his station is seeking to force newspapers to give free advertising in their radio program columns to firms and people who pay him for the right to broadcast. He is attempting to copyright the programs of KFI, sent out free to newspapers. In a letter to EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week, he threatened, and said he would relish a test case with any reputable newspaper to prove his copyright. Many newspapers, rather than give free advertising, are simply omitting the KFI programs. Three New York lawyers consulted by EDITOR & PUBLISHER agreed the program was not copyrightable material, and asserted Mr. Anthony was evidently simply trying to bluff the dailies.

The KFI programs contain the following notice:

"The name of the individual sponsoring the program and the name of the artist first appearing on the artist list must not be omitted. Such omission will be considered an infringement of copyright. Permission is hereby granted to condense any other matter to fit your space."

Carl Helm, New York lawyer, in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of March 20 characterized this notice as "bluff."

This week Mr. Helm's characterization s backed up by two other New York attorneys, Hugo Mock, of Mock & Bloom, copyright and patent attorneys, and Harry H. VanAken, of VanAken & Dewitt, who represent the New York Daily News. Law books were consulted and quoted from, and all three lawyers agreed a radio program such as sent out by KFI is not copyrightable, in that it lacks the minimum of originality necessary for copyright.

A legal finger was run down the pages of Weil on "Copyright Law" to section 503, which reads:

"A mere advertisement or a bare list of articles, prices, or facts, would seem not copyrightable. It would lack the minimum of originality necessary for copyright."

A copy of KFI's copyrighted program was obtained by EDITOR & PUBLISHER for the consideration of Mr. Mock, an authority on copyright law.

"That's news," he said. "It certainly is not copyrightable."

He was told of Mr. Anthony's threat to bring a test case, and his comment was that while such action would be interesting, he was sure the newspapers would be perfectly safe.

Mr. Anthony, writing to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, likened his KFI programs to a copyrighted article in the Saturday Evening Post. The lawyers laughed at his comparison.

"A valid copyright may only be obtained on a new and original literary product," Mr. VanAken said, "or when special originality or artistic merit is shown in the arrangement of an article."

"Is there any originality involved in a radio program?"

"There can be in its arrangement, but not in the facts it contains," Mr. VanAken replied. "I handled a case when the New York Tribune wished to copyright its program. Its copyright was valid, because it was a copyright, not of the facts stated in the program, but of its arrangement, which did show originality."

"The material Mr. Anthony wishes used is not copyrightable material," Mr. Helm asserted. "There is no question of literary composition involved in the matter; it is a question of news facts."

In Weil, the copyright authority previously quoted, the following passage is found:

"Since it is public property, facts or news cannot be copyrighted, although the form in which it is expressed, that is, the language in which they are clothed, may be copyrighted."

The lawyers pointed out that it has been proved impossible to copyright news, although the case of the Associated Press vs. International News Service upheld a property right to news. In that case the fact of unfair competition was involved. The lawyers asserted the radio station could not claim unfair competition.

"If a radio program was so prepared that it took on the nature of an original article, its language could be copyrighted," Mr. Helm maintained. "But the news facts are not copyrightable.

"It appears that Mr. Anthony is endeavoring to use the copyright law to compel newspapers to give free advertising to the people who pay him money to broadcast over his station.

"The newspapers haven't any objection, I believe, should every other word of the announcer of station KFI be an advertisement for someone. But they have a perfect right to expect regular advertising rates for any advertising matter appearing in their columns, particularly in connection with the listing of such news facts as who or what is to be heard from a certain radio broadcasting station as a particular time.

"A newspaper, obviously, for the sake of reader interest, will print the name of the radio artist and the nature of the radio entertainment, but because editors cannot conceive of any great news value involved in publishing the name of the advertiser paying the artist, they are right to leave that name out."

Mr. Anthony's letter was shown to William A. Thomson of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. He immediately brought up the suggestion recently made by a bureau member, that newspapers run a "broadcasters' advertising column."

"If advertisers who are using the radio wish to draw attention to their programs, wouldn't they be willing to patronize a broadcasters' advertising column at regular rates?" the bureau member wondered.

"If it pays the movies and theatrical people to use regular newspaper announcements, why shouldn't it pay the radio advertisers and, what is more to the point, pay the newspapers?"

Mr. Anthony in his letter complained of publicity given free by newspapers to such a person as Paderewski, playing at Aeolian Hall.

"True enough," was Mr. Helm's comment.

"But supposing Mr. Paderewski's press agent wrote and copyrighted the following notice and sent it out free to newspapers:

" 'Ignace Paderewski, superb concert pianist, will play a Steinway piano at Aeolian Hall on April 30.

" 'The world's most celebrated musician will wear Stein-Bloch clothes. His flowing hair will be kept in place by Stacomb, his feet, as they touch the Steinway pedals, will be encased in Walk-over shoes.

" 'Recently Mr. Paderewski sprained his wrists while practicing a difficult concerto. A few rubs with Sloan's liniment, however, and—presto! But, anyway, Mr. Paderewski's wrists are insured by Lloyds for $1,000,000; his life is insured by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company for $2,690,712.13; and his musical ears are insured by the Hartford Insurance Company for $60,000,000.01.

" 'In his leisure moments, Mr. Paderewski smokes a Dunhill pipe, and drinks Clicquot Club Gingerale. It is known he has eaten bread made with Gold Medal Flour. And, according to report, he may soon purchase a Packard motor car. Whispers have it he may visit California some day. He will not play over Station KFI.'

"The press agent could obtain a valid copyright on this article.

"But would a newspaper print it as he sent it in?

"Certainly not. The bare announcement that Paderewski would play at Aeolian Hall, April 30, would be published and the remainder deleted.

"Such omission would not be considered an infringement of his copyright."

Mr. Anthony's letter to EDITOR & PUBLISHER follows in part:

"In your issue of March 20 I see an article entitled 'Radio Station Tries To Bluff Daily.' This refers to our copyrighted advance radio program.

"The advance radio program sent out by this or any other station is compiled some three or four weeks in advance of the time the program is on the air. The information as to what the program will be on a given date originates with, and of course is the property of the station. This material is copyrighted and the same as a patent, the property belongs to us.

"Like any patent or any other copyrighted article, the same as an article appearing, we will say, in the Saturday Evening Post, the entire ownership belongs to the person who owns the copyright. We send this program out to those newspapers and news agencies who wish to provide their readers with the advance program. These programs are run by newspapers to please the readers who demand the news of the radio, the same as the news of operatic concerts or other entertainment. It is perfectly useless for us or to the reader, to have the artists or the organization providing the program deleted and we release this program to the newspapers under the condition that there be no deletion as to the sponsor of the program (call it advertising if you will), and of the artists appearing. Otherwise we reserve the right not to have them printed. Considering the expense of sending this advance program out and the expense of operating a radio station, all of which provides material for the newspaper for their news pages, we certainly reserve the right to state to what extent they shall be cut or deleted. The Saturday Evening Post would not permit a copyrighted article to be reprinted omitting certain parts. Attorney Helm is entirely mistaken. We are not copyrighting the copyright name or the title. We are copyrighting the material, and we object and will protect our rights from having this matter deleted.

"As to the general policy adopted by the newspaper association, of not giving any publicity to those concerned furnishing radio programs, we might ask if you would print a theatre notice where Mr. Paderewski was playing and he played for money (and a lot of it), stating that a concert pianist would appear at Aeolian Hall, would you not mention Mr. Paderewski's name? Yet the publicity which he receives undoubtedly makes his box office.

"If we provide, and I mean by 'we,' all radio stations, the advance programs which they consider valuable enough to allot from one column to half a page in their columns, all of which material they receive free, we certainly have the right to state that it shall not be deleted or else they can omit it.

"In conclusion, Mr. Helm is entirely mistaken on the copyright and patent law. Parts of a copyrighted article cannot be reprinted any more than eight bars of a copyrighted musical composition can be used in another musical composition without damages being awarded.

"We are perfectly willing to make a test case of this issue. These programs are reprinted in the newspapers from the advance copyrighted bulletin send out by this station, and if you will bring to our attention, any newspaper of reputable standing who takes one of our advance programs and violates the copyright restriction upon its printing, we will be very glad to take the matter up immediately in the Federal Courts and see whether we have not the same right to protect our material as the newspaper has in protecting theirs. We welcome and relish a test case on the matter."

JURY CLEARS DAILY OF LIBEL CHARGE

$100,000 Action Brought by Sarah Robertson Against New York Times Dismissed—Plaintiff Has Sued Other Newspapers

A $100,000 libel suit brought by Sarah Robertson, Orange, N. J., against the New York Times, was decided in favor of the newspaper this week before Judge Mitchell and a jury in supreme court, New York.

Mrs. Robertson had objected to a story published in the Times on Feb. 22, 1922, to the effect that she had confessed to a private detective the robbery of her own jewels at Deal, N. J. some time before. Her action against the Times was one of a series of suits involving other New York newspapers in the same charge.

The New York Sun and New York Evening Telegram are joint defendants in a suit brought by the same plaintiff, trial of which is set for April 19, in supreme court before Judge Churchill. In this action, Mrs. Robertson is seeking $250,000 damages. These two dailies will be represented in court by Leon Godley, of the firm of Watson, Godley, Sheppard & Willguss.

Represented by Alfred A. Cook, attorney, the Times proved to the satisfaction of the jury that Mrs. Robertson had faked the robbery of her jewels to collect the insurance and had confessed her act to a private detective as was published in the story held libellous by the plaintiff.

It was brought out during the trial that the alleged confession was published two years before Mrs. Robertson brought suit against the New York dailies. Defense attorneys showed that two days following the alleged jewel robbery, two boys were arrested and the black bag in which the jewels had been kept was found in their possession. Arraigned, they denied there were jewels in the bag when they stole it from Mrs. Robertson.

Mrs. Robertson was arrested, arraigned and acquitted under the laws of New Jersey on a charge of conspiracy to defraud. While in custody, she was visited by the private detective, who claimed he had obtained a confession.

Suit against the Times was originally for $135,000. Mrs. Robertson, however, withdrew her demand for $35,000 special damages before the case came to trial. The Times published a denial of the confession, shortly after the story of Feb. 22 was published.

Mrs. Robertson has sued the New York World for $135,000; the New York Journal, for $50,000; the New York American for $50,000 and the New York Daily News for $200,000.

None of these suits has yet been tried.

PERMANENT PAN-AMERICAN PRESS BODY URGED

Twenty-nine Resolutions Run the Gamut of Journalistic Activity Covering Protection of Free Press, End of Taxes on Cables and Paper, Reform of Bad News and Business Practices

By BART CAMPBELL

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Creation of a Pan-American Press Associa-ion, and of "bonds of sympathy and closer understanding" between the news-apers of the Americas, was the keynote f the final sessions of the First Pan-American Congress of Journalists which djourned here Tuesday.

The adoption of the 29 resolutions, ach reflecting the sentiment and opinion f the leading newspaper men of North nd South America, was considered as pening a new page of American journal-stic history.

Each resolution was approved finally nly after lengthy discussion and amend-nent, and as written into the record of he Congress, was regarded as picturing he matured ideas of some of the best inds of journalistic America.

The text of each resolution is here-with presented by EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

First

RESOLVED, That the First Pan-American Congress of Journalists formally declares hat its fundamental purpose is to create onds of sympathy and closer understand-ng among the newspapers here repre-ented, to secure a fuller interchange of ews, to guard against misrepresentation f the peoples concerned, and to establish code of ethics which shall be acceptable o and binding upon the publications here epresented. It is no part of the duty f this Congress to dictate to any pub-isher how his newspaper shall be con-ducted. It is, however, of the highest mportance that certain basic principles o which all will agree should be here nunciated. We believe, therefore, that his Congress may formally declare that s constituent members should neglect no ndeavor to give their readers the im-ortant, constructive, educational news f all countries limiting as far as possible hat which is merely sensational, trivial r likely to create antagonisms or ealousies. We hold that every editor as it in his power to do his share toward tilling international distrust, and we de-lare it to be the sentiment of this Congress that its members should dis-harge their duty as a matter of pro-essional service, of patriotism and as a ontribution to the welfare of all ranking.

In order that organized endeavor may e made to this end we recommend the rganization of a Pan-American Associa-ion of Journalists, and the delegation to committee of that Association of the sk of negotiating with the cable com-anies for suitable concessions in the atter of rates and expedition of service. he same Association should investigate nd report upon the practicability of the terchange of news between the con-ituent members of this organization in oth American Continents.

This Congress declares that it is not ithin its proper authority to express pinions upon questions of international olitics other than to lay down em-hatically the doctrine that the interests f North, Central and South America e more and more tending to become entical and that it is within the power the press of this section to conserve its terests and to bring the nations involved the point of harmonious action in their fense. This we held to be the highest ity of the newspapers here represented d we believe that if it will be the study each editor to give to his readers de-lopment in the Americas and refrain om depicting the evil, or the lapses from e highest good from which they may be ilty, this great need may be most fully tained.

Second

The First Pan-American Congress of urnalists recommends the creation of Pan-American Press Association.

Third

This Congress recommends the suppression of all horror-producing or intimate details in news regarding crimes or scandalous events, as well as of the names of minors of both sexes who may commit crimes.

Fourth

This Congress recommends the adoption of arbitration as a means to settle all disputes between them and any nation outside of the Continent, not only in the case of political disagreements but in all those which may in any form affect the interests or the harmony between the nations of the Western Hemisphere.

It recommends that all the members of the Pan-American Press not represented in this Congress adhere to this recommendation.

Fifth

The First Pan-American Congress of Journalists recommends the promotion of the study of the geography and history of all America and of the Constitution of each one of the American countries by the members of Pan-American journalism.

Sixth

This Congress recommends the advisability of promoting the passage of laws and the taking of other steps regarding the labors of the press and tending to censor and purify all suggestive or deceitful advertisements or to their elimination, rejecting those attacking purity of customs or which are not based upon licit and honest business; it also recommends the adoption of a fixed rate for advertisement by each paper.

Seventh

This Congress recommends the suppression of or indirect taxes on news cable messages addressed to the press whether in transit or at point of destination.

Eighth

This Congress recommends the suppression of duties on paper to be used in printing newspapers and on bond paper in the countries where such duties may exist.

Ninth

This Congress recommends the promulgation of an adequate press law securing the freedom of the press in those countries not yet having such law.

Tenth

This Congress recommends the establishment of a voluntary exchange service among the newspapers of the American Continent.

Eleventh

This Congress recommends to the press of the American countries the advocation of the construction of the Columbus Lighthouse in the city of Santo Domingo.

Twelfth

This Congress recommends the establishment in New York City of a Salon for the promotion of artistic production in the Western Hemisphere.

Thirteenth

This Congress recommends the adoption of a journalistic creed and proposes the creed written by Dr. Walter Williams.

Fourteenth

This Congress recommends that the Key to the City of Washington presented to the First Pan-American Congress of Journalists be left in the Pan-American Union.

Fifteenth

This Congress recommends that the Pan-American Union spread its munificient action.

Sixteenth

This Congress recommends a vote of thanks to the President of the United States of America, Honorable Calvin Coolidge, for his address of welcome and the many acts of courtesy which he has shown this Congress.

Seventeenth

This Congress recommends a vote of thanks to the Congress of the United States of America for the reception of the Delegates and for the generous words of welcome pronounced in both Houses.

Eighteenth

This Congress expresses its wish for the success of the labors of the Congress of the United States of America.

Nineteenth

This Congress, considering as attacks against the freedom of the press all actions detrimental to the personal rights of the journalist and to the activity of the press, expresses its condemnation of such attacks and declares that it would learn with pleasure of the reparation of the moral and material harm caused by such actions and of the amnesty of those who may still be suffering penalty exclusively on account of the exercise of this profession.

This resolution shall be communicated to the Pan-American Press Association when it might have been organized in order that there may be published in all the newspapers of the Continent duly proved tax against the freedom of the American Press.

Twentieth

This Congress recommends that a Committee be appointed to prepare plans for the Second Pan-American Congress of Journalists. The Congress requests the Governing Board of the Pan-American Union to appoint this Committee in the form that may be most convenient.

Twenty-first

The Congress recommends to the delegations that they carry to their colleagues a message recommending the organization of National Press Associations in all the countries in which they may not yet exist as a means of giving effect to the proposed Pan-American Association of Journalists.

Twenty-second

The Congress recommends that North American and Latin American publications be sent to the libraries of the principal cities of each country. This recommendation extends to periodicals, to editorial houses and to others.

Twenty-third

The First Pan-American Congress of Journalists recommends, that the next Congress be essentially technical in character and that any reports or references that may be made concerning the progress of the countries represented at the Congress or concerning the newspapers represented be confined to such reports as may present a definite state-

PAN-AMERICAN EDITORS TO SPEND FIVE CROWDED DAYS IN NEW YORK

Many Entertainments Planned for Party of 92 Arriving Monday—Will Leave Friday for Tour to Chicago

A PARTY of 92 Latin American editors, with four members of the Pan-American Union, started on a sight-seeing tour which will take them from the east coast to Chicago and back, following the close of the First Pan-American Congress of Journalists in Washington Tuesday.

Starting Wednesday the party left on a three-day tour of Virginia as guests of the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce. Cities visited included Alexandria, Lynchburg, Charlottesville, Richmond, Jamestown, Williamsburg, Newport News, Norfolk, and Portsmouth.

William J. Harahan, president of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, W. S. Copeland, president, Virginia Press Association, J. P. Fishburn, secretary, Virginia Daily Newspaper Publishers Association, R. D. Ford, editor, Richmond Times-Dispatch, Carter Glass, Jr., editor, Lynchburg News, and a number of other prominent Virginians were among those entertaining the party.

The editors were entertained at Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson at Charlottesville, by two Virginia colleges, near Lynchburg, and they then inspected the historic side of Richmond and Jamestown, site of the first permanent English settlement in America.

On Friday the party leaves for Philadelphia where they will be entertained by local publishing and business groups. On Monday, April 19, the editors will leave Philadelphia for New York, where they will spend five days as guests of the Merchants Association.

A welcoming committee will meet the party at the Pennsylvania station at 6 p. m. and escort the editors from the train to the Hotel Commodore, which will be headquarters during their stay in the city.

On Tuesday April 20, the Associated Press will act as host to the group at a luncheon in the Grand Ball Room of the Waldorf. Tuesday evening the New York City Publishers Association will tender a dinner to the editors at the Park Lane hotel. Julius Ochs Adler of the New York Times is chairman of the committee arranging the dinner. Among the speakers will be Ogden Reid, Ralph Pulitzer, Herbert Gunnison, William Randolph Hearst, Jose Camprubi and Jorge Mitre.

On Wednesday morning a visit will be made to the rotogravure plant of the New York Times, followed by luncheon in the Times Annex as guests of Adolph Ochs. In the afternoon the editors will attend a session of the American Newspaper Publishers Association annual convention at the Waldorf. In the evening the group will visit the plant of the Herald Tribune.

Thursday morning the American Association of Advertising Agencies will act as host at a breakfast at the Commodore.

At the close of the New York visit the group will leave on an automobile and train trip which will take them to Chicago and back, the itinerary of which was planned by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

The automobile trip starts from the Concourse entrance of the Hotel Commo-ment of progress in the general intellectual, ethical, industrial or economic conditions prevailing.

Twenty-fourth

The Congress recommends the study of pending international questions that might affect in any way the peace among the peoples of America, seeking and propitiating such solutions as may adjust themselves to international rights and equitableness.

Twenty-fifth

The Congress recommends that there may be communicated to all the newspapers of other countries the resolutions of the Congress, at the same time expressing the hope that the resolutions may merit the approval of these newspapers.

Twenty-sixth

The Congress recommends that the North American newspapers devote more space to information relative to the nations of Latin America, and especially to that type of news that serves to improve the existing present relations between the papers of the three independent Americas.

Twenty-seventh

The First Pan-American Congress of Journalists on concluding its sessions desires to express its sincere appreciation to the President of the Republic, Hon. Calvin Coolidge, the Pan-American Union, the Secretary of State, the Press, the National Chamber of Commerce, the City of Washington and other organizations and persons for the courtesies that have been extended to the Congress. The members of the Congress desire to express this feeling of appreciation, not only as a Congress, but as individuals.

Twenty-eighth

The Congress adopts a vote of appreciation to Dr. L. S. Rowe for the great service he has rendered to the Pan-Americanism.

Twenty-ninth

The First Pan-American Congress of Journalists resolves:

To recommend to all the members of the Congress the desirability of conducting a press campaign in the respective countries in order:

1. That the Governments of America may ratify resolution number 61 of the Fifth International Conference of American States relative to the erection on the coast of the City of Santo Domingo, the oldest city of America, of a monumental lighthouse in honor of Christopher Columbus, Discoverer of the New World.

2. That the peoples and governments contribute morally and materially to the early realization of this work, as the greatest common homage of the American Continent to the Discoverer.

The Committee on Resolutions included:

Willis J. Abbot, Christian Science Monitor, Boston.

A. J. Calcaño Herrera, El Heraldo, Caracas, Venezuela.

Federico Llaverías, Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic.

Efren Alvarez Lara, El Guante, Guayaquil, Ecuador.

Luis Rosado Vega, Revista de Yucatan, Merida, Yucatan, Mexico.

The session devoted to advertising was opened by Dr. Ramiro Guerra of El Diario de la Marina, Havana, Cuba, who vigorously attacked the widespread use of the half-clad female figure as a design upon which to hang all manner of advertisements.

Enumerating a list of subjects that should be eliminated from the advertising page, including patent medicines, personalities, unreliable financial inducements and anything smacking of the suggestive, Dr. Guerra declared:

"There are artists and draftsmen who attempt to attract the attention of readers by using—or rather abusing—the nude female figure, making the beautiful form of man's companion into a hackneyed advertising 'motif,' serving for automobiles, clothing or soft drinks.

"It should not be forgotten," he continued, "that just as advertising counts for much in the business life of a periodical it may also bring about a lowering of the moral tone of the press, robbing it of independence, forcing it to adopt prejudiced opinions or to keep a suspicious silence in respect to matters of public interest which affect a class of its advertisers.

"Against these evils the power of public opinion has great weight, but above all is the concerted action of the great organs of publicity, great not only in their circulation figures but also in the high moral standards by which they decide and settle the conflicts which arise between private interests of their advertisers and the general interests of the community."

Amid generous applause Dr. Guerra submitted as an advertising creed for the Congress:

1. That it is advisable to establish a uniform system of methods, both in provisions of law and rules governing periodicals, looking toward the censoring, sifting out and elimination of misleading or fraudulent advertisements, for the protection of the public against unscrupulous advertisers and those of bad faith.
2. That every advertisement, which tends to exploit or promote vice, even if but indirectly, or one which is an offense against decency, or one which is not based on honest and legitimate business, should be refused or suppressed.
3. That it is advisable to designate a committee to study the possibilities and advantages of organizing an international advertising service, to be carried on by the periodicals themselves.
4. That all influence of advertising upon the policies and management of periodicals should be prescribed through its repudiation and condemnation by the press itself, brought to bear on every case in which this principle of press ethics is broken."

In a printed report distributed during the session Dr. Tiburcio Castaneda, also of El Diario de la Marina, contrasted the first page of the London Times, devoted exclusively to advertisements, with the first page of New York dailies.

"In the United States," he said, "on takes up the most serious and mos widely read newspapers and the firs page and even all of the second, as wa true in the New York newspapers o March 27 last, are filled with account and details of terrible crimes that pro duce intense nausea upon the reader."

Dr. Castaneda described these ac counts as "a thousand times more crue than the wild beasts." The financial ad vertisements on the first page of th London paper presented in refreshin contrast, he said, news which was inter esting and valuable.

What newspapers would be like i they were deprived of the revenues fro advertising was pointed out by Henr T. Claus of the Boston Transcript.

"There would be an end of specia stories by our own correspondents," h said, "few cable dispatches, still fewe pictures, almost no special features an an almost complete dearth of the man things which go to make a newspape readable but which lack a definite cor nection with actual events of the da In short, those of us who managed t survive at all would be getting ou mere news chronicles and not very com plete ones at that."

PUBLIC WAKING TO NEEDS OF FORESTS

But Congress Is Tardy in Enacting Legislation to Hasten Restoration of Denuded Areas—Industries Dependent Upon Wood Cannot Carry Financial Burden of Reforestation Unaided

By GEORGE G. WHEAT

FORESTRY Week, here again, gives timeliness to a check-up on how much actual progress has been made in thought and action on the problem of increasing useful forest areas. How much addition are we getting? How quickly are we balancing the budget between "forest put" and "forest take"? Is it yet recognized that the real answer lies in economic or business readjustment and not in political expediency? How frankly do newspaper publishers accept their responsibility of knowing this subject and leading in public information and opinion concerning it? Is it realized that the answer lies in drastic reduction of forest consumption for the least sound and least economic business uses and in the vastly increased production of forests?

Some light on these phases of the question is given below.

The McNary-Woodruff bill has fair prospect of passage, but in reduced form. The original bill called for an appropriation of $40,000,000 over a 10-year period, to obtain 7,500,000 acres under the Weeks Act. Of this land, 2,500,000 were to be in the pulpwood area. The House Committee on Agriculture reduced this to $2,000,000 annually for the two years of 1928-1929, with the approval of the Budget Bureau and the President. The Senate Committee on Agriculture had approved the bill in its original form. Efforts will be made to have the bill passed as originally drawn.

A look ahead on forestry prospects warrants the statement that the time has come to take hold of the job with both hands and handle it. Tangible results obtained to date suggest that only he little finger has been used in lifting so far. This is not said in criticism of what has been done. Pages could be written praising the Forestry Service and the unthanked labors of those few far-seeing, hard-working starters of what success has been achieved. But the entire acreage obtained under the Weeks Act, since 1911, barely tops 2,000,000. The entire contribution of the national forests, 89,100,000 acres, is less than 5 per cent of the annual take. There are still the 81,000,000 acres of entirely idle and burned-over lands, and the acreage of denuded lands is increasing many times faster than the restoration. These 81,000,000 denuded acres balance against a total planted to date of 500,000 acres—and this vast denuded acreage can be restored only by planting.

It has been shown (EDITOR & PUBLISHER, Dec. 5, 1925, pages 10-11) that our entire 470,000,000 forest acres can produce about 10,000,000,000 cubic feet of timber yearly under present crude American methods, by 1950. Under intensive European methods, this acreage could produce 28,000,000,000 cubic feet after 1975. Our present cut is 26,000,000,000 cubic feet.

The nub of the whole question lies in whether we can afford to own enough forests to sustain present consumption under present-day uses. Congressman Haugen, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, has often asked this sensible question, "What will this all cost?" But if anyone knows the answer, he has not dared to come forward.

Will the national, state and private holdings of this total acreage, under crude forestry, require a cumulative investment of $47,000,000,000? Under intensive European management methods the investment of this sum would doubtless be required to produce the 28,000,000,000 cubic feet. We know fairly well the cost of growing, the harvest an acre must yield and that the average value of the acre would be $100. Can we hope to exceed the economies of lower labor and interest costs of Europe where we know that the economic side of the whole matter makes such an investment for present annual returns an idle dream? The present returns from the 26 billion cubic feet taken are too small.

The actual value of the logs cut from the forest, before any manufacture, cannot be stretched to equal $1,000,000,000. Take $1,000,000,000 for argument's sake and the log crop would be only one fortieth of the capital investment in forests.

Add the capital investment in the principal census groups—lumber and its remanufactures, paper and its remanufactures—$5,000,000,000 to the above $47,000,000,000 and we get a total investment of $52,000,000,000. Then take the entire returns of these two groups in their biggest year, 1920—$5,578,055,000. This is barely more than one-tenth of capital return annually.

Farming capital, in 1920, was $100,000,000,000, and produce returns were $22,000,000,000, or better than one-fifth the capital return. Both industries were considered profitable at that time. But since then, with returns on farm capital reduced to one-eighth, or less, farming capital investment has become a sore boil on our body economic. Could we endure a much worse sore boil? We would have it if wood-using industries carried this potential investment of the capital needed for forests.

There is just one answer. We are going to pay twice as much or more for our forest products when their price has to carry the forest investment. We did it in 1920 flurry. That was only a flurry but it was a clear forecast of what will sometime be the established condition.

Only those industries that can carry the cost of reproduction of the timber and still hold their own in competition with other materials can survive.

The publishing business, it has been pointed out before, can most probably absorb its share of the increased cost. Pulp and paper can and will eventually come to the basis of self-sustenance. What paper-making has undergone and is undergoing because of domestic shortage is all too well known. The moving of the industry out of the United States is one sore spot now in our whole economic structure. It moved out of our borders because we unwittingly cut out the pulpwood species for lesser uses before we knew what we were doing or could check it if we did know.

Let us not fool ourselves, however, about absorbing heavy increased costs by readjustments within the publishing business. Increased costs may kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. Neglect of national and private increase of forests and neglect of proper and wiser utilization of forests we now have will kill many more of these geese.

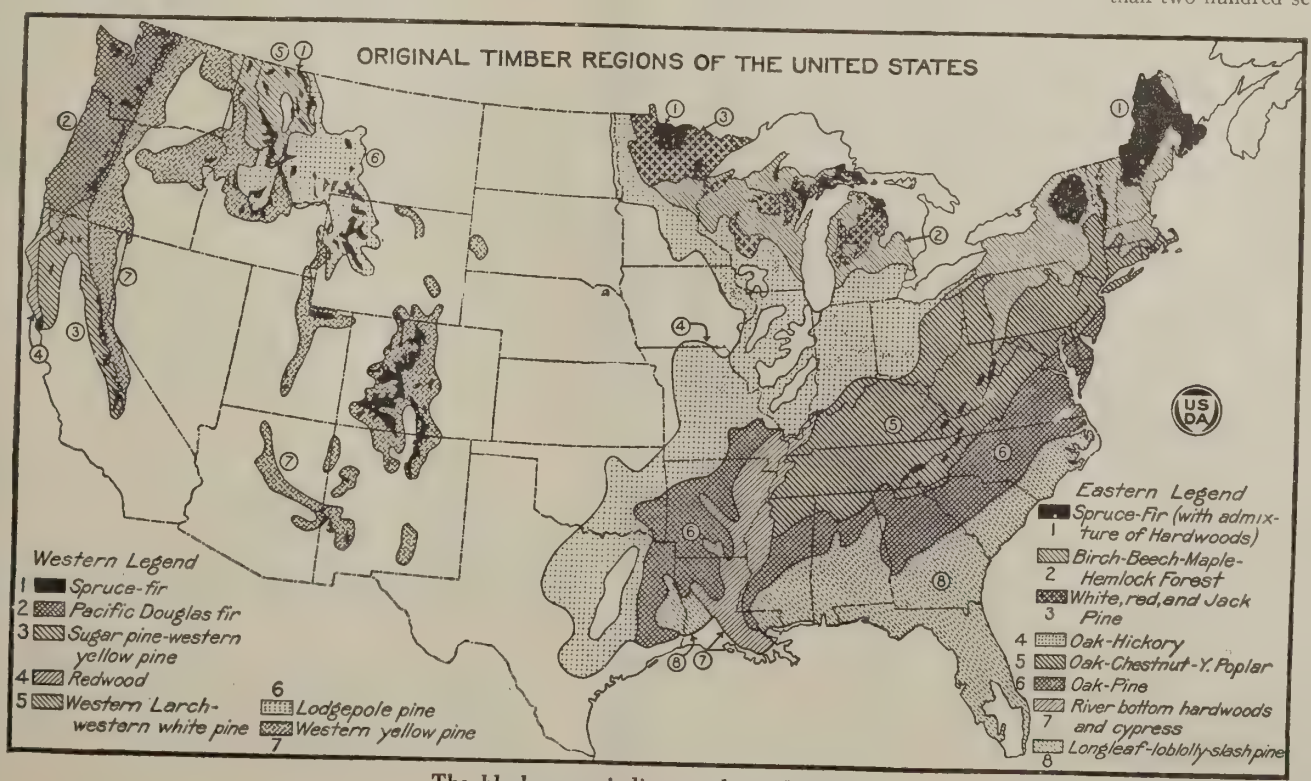
Can legislation be inoculated with business principles and business common sense? We now witness our "Economy Congress" agreeing to a $37,000,000 irrigation program for certain localities and projects, a part only of the whole, and not a ten year program. Where does reclamation stand with its results of the past eighteen years? It is the sorest spot in our whole sore spot of farming.

Rivers and harbors? On April 8 Governor Smith turned the first spade of earth on Albany's $6,000,000 port development. The Federal job is to spend $11,200,000 for deepening the Hudson to 27 feet for ocean ships, from Albany thirty miles south to City of Hudson. This is but one small item in "Rivers and Harbors."

Time, space, and patience forbid listing these government spendings on current projects. The total would blot out entirely the petty $2,000,000 yearly for forests now proposed.

How are we handling the last great stand in the northwest where fifty per cent of the total reserves are found?

Laurence Donovan, formerly a newspaper man of Portland, Ore., and now editorial writer of the Vancouver Sun tells us in American Forests and Forest Life, March, 1926 "The Paradox of the Northwest," in substance, that:



"For six months smoke has covered the northwest. Twelve million acres have been burned over, more than sustaining the five-year average of sixty million. I have watched the giant stalk through the land creating the devastation with his 'skyline cables' and his caterpillar tractors with one hand and posting fire warnings and getting the public excluded from the nation's forest playgrounds with the other hand. 'What a Paradox.' . . . .

"Millions of trees from twenty to fifty years old, everything under one hundred years old, are wiped out by the 'crushing cat' and the 'sky-line cables'—slashings from the cut piled on top of these and the down timber—fires on a thousand hills feed the flames every year. In two years on the Pacific coast and years in the Middle West, the writer has failed to find more than half a dozen logging enterprises that leave seed trees. These areas burned over year after year, seedling and soil destroyed. . . . .

"Fierceness of competition in markets that show no profits, the seven seas being combed for markets—universal complaint that there is no profit and that there are too many in the business. In no industry is the competition keener. Export business is valuable only as we are able to replace the resources that produce it. The product of centuries is being "forced" on foreign markets because we can at the moment manage to sell cheaper. Students of national economy recognize this as the sheerest waste. William M. Jardine, Secretary of Agriculture, touring the West coast predicts catastrophic consequences from ignoring of fundamental principles. More than two hundred scientists and engineers touring this coast, predict that this waste will exhaust the remaining billions of timber feet in fifteen to twenty years, and destroy more than half the industry and commerce of the Pacific Coast. This lesson has been bitterly learned in the cut out parts of the United States. They now get their own timber needs mainly from this region. They now pay through the nose. They have likewise lost their one time gloried-in industry."

Turning from Donovan to the other side of this export matter for confirmation on what we are trying to do with this timber stand.

TRAIL BLAZERS OF ADVERTISING

The Old Brass Band Was There

CHAPTER XLII

The Old Brass Band Was There

WHOEVER heard of an advertising event, a pageant, carnival, street fair, county fair, Mexican wedding or any kind of a celebration, or parade, without a brass band? It is the best example we have of animated and vociferous publicity.

The advent of the circus would be like a funeral without its many brass bands, with its members happily garbed in bright colored costumes.

The brass band as an advertisement has stirred millions to action. In war or peace it gets results. From Mexican weddings to Italian funerals it has its big part to play.

What greater spot-light can be thrown upon any man than to have a brass band meet him at the railway station?

When a brass band comes to your home town depot to celebrate your home-coming you have arrived at the top rung of the ladder of prominence.

No blare of trumpets, no musical festival can ever equal the thrill producing effects of that old brass band playing "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight." No spectacle can ever be more dazzling than the hundreds of torch bearers marching in an old political parade to the inspiring music of the town's brass band.

The town without a brass band is a town without the voice of publicity. It is a town lacking in public spirit. In the old time Labor Day and Fourth of July celebrations a brass band was a vital necessity. Without the bleating of horns and racket of drums and the peacock gestures of the plumed and bespangled Drum-Major, twirling his brass headed staff, there could be no celebration. The brass band was the spark of the very life of such popular publicity events.

Organizing a brass band for a small town was a great adventure. Some public spirited local merchants would get together and donate the bright colored uniforms. The braided and gilded uniforms came first. You could not get the local town boys to go into a band until they set eyes on those dazzling uniforms. Usually they had all the ear-marks of the garb of the Royal family of some European country. The more brass buttons, braid and tassels the better. The biggest advertisement for getting up a brass band were these flashy suits.

Some other public spirited local business men would provide the instruments. Then would commence months and months of practice at night in some barn on the outskirts of the town.

When their efforts had achieved a squeaking resemblance of music, the band boys would come into town and take up their nightly practice in some vacant hall with an entrance on an alley.

At the first toot of horns crowds would gather to hear how the band boys were getting along.

To promote or build up a local band is a job which few men want to undertake a second time. But, of course, the town must have a band to put it in the limelight, and so many a poor band promoter has suffered much for the sake of publicity for his town.

The period between donning the uniforms and making the first public appearance was one fraught with many vicissitudes.

The boys wanted to get out on the street and show off their talents. But the first appearance, marching and trying to blow a horn, has made many a proud, dolled-up band boy hang his head in shame.

If the false notes predominated, the town folks, heartless at best, jeered and mocked the band.

The greatest knocker in the world is the fellow who looks on from the sidewalk, in the average small town.

It is very dangerous for successful publicity purposes for a band to venture forth until it has one or two choruses down pat.

In the days before the rural telephone, the music box, jitney and radio, country people hitched up the team and drove miles to hear the brass band play. It did not matter what it played so long as every horn and drum made grand music.

The name of the band and town was always painted on both sides of the bass drum. This advertising space could not have been bought for love or money.

The late President Harding's famous Silver Cornet band is still bringing valuable publicity to Marion, O.

There are men high up in the advertising game today who take great pride in boasting that they once played the trombone in the band back home.

Today the band is still playing an important part in the great game of advertising. The band gets attention. As a headliner in the profession it will always remain.

CHAPTER XLIII

The Hint of Gold Brings Adventurers

THERE was a certain lure about the old advertising game for adventurers and fighters. In the 'eighties and 'nineties the advertising gave was a fighting game. And into this game drifted pioneers and explorers looking for pay-dirt. Just as the report of gold in the Klondike brought adventurers in droves, just so did the hint that there was quick, easy-money in the advertising game attract the bold and brainy business adventurers.

When the story went out that there was gold in this or that game, many plunged into advertising without knowing the first thing about it. They were lured by the vision of money easily acquired.

No amount of disappointment, disillusionment, hardship nor tragedy can overshadow the success and pleasure derived from the advertising game as it was once played.

Business battles were fought with schemes and prize contests; bread wars and furniture wars started with throat-cutting competition, and ended in disaster and failures; tricks and novel ideas were used to lure the buyer.

All campaigns for leadership were built around clever schemes to stir up the people and get quick action. Publicity of the unusual, forceful and novel kind was the beginning and the end of all contests for supremacy.

Into this fighting game came easy-money seekers, soldiers of fortune; colorful, strange, quaint, picturesque, bold, brainy and clever characters, all hoping to discover gold where it had never before been discovered.

The lure of a new field for pay-dirt, the gambler's chances, and sudden changes brought new experiences in hardships, hunger, sacrifices, cold and lean living, to those unprepared to play the game as it had to be played to win.

Now, it is a great mental sport to glance backward to the thrills and chills of yesterday, and laugh and talk about them. It would have been perhaps an even greater adventure if these fights, hardships and defeats could have been enjoyed then, as we now enjoy their colorful memories.

On the Great Advertising Highway I have met many unusual and enjoyable characters. I still find pleasure in hob-nobbing with them in memory.

As I have traveled about, I have had a "nose for advertising ideas and schemes"; a keen interest in all the famous advertising events, publicity pageants, clever advertising people, unique shows, celebrations, stunts, schemes and tricks to attract the crowds.

I always liked the big, bold, blustering schemes that had a real dramatic appeal. There are those events dramatized in such a way that large crowds, even mobs, respond to the publicity alarms sounded.

Who can help but get a thrill from the flaming messages of the Great White Way—those burning words that etch and carve themselves into the millions of minds that come to Broadway to see the most talked-of advertising battleground in the world.

The scenic electrical fires of Broadway, and the brilliance and beauty, and powerful and clever publicity of fashionable Fifth Avenue are the kind of advertisements that spark the imagination of millions today.

There is also Atlantic City's Boardwalk, which has become the advertisers rich display ground. And its annual Beauty Pageant is an event that gives an enthusiastic pull to the imagination.

The New Orleans "Mardi Gras," that widely advertised event—"An interesting round of revels, that marks an ancien and picturesque time in the gay life o New Orleans." Here is advertised fun frolic, sports, colorful outdoor pageants magnificent balls and tableaus. Really de luxe publicity.

But greater than the lure of these modern publicity stunts and ideas, wa the fascination and strange appeal of the old-time clever advertising men; their crude and bold advertisements; startling publicity, strange pageants, gambling schemes, wild ideas, daring stunts, and all those old mind-driving forces which existed in the 'eighties and 'nineties.

I have written about the good old days of schemes and schemers; the old days when thrived matrimonial bureaus and clairvoyant advertising; guessing con tests and lotteries; free-lunch signs fo saloons, and money-raising stunts fo churches; Labor Day advertising floats and Indian Medicine Tent Shows; free premiums, coupons and free auctio barkers with a gift-of-gab; torch ligh political parades and land rushing events when patent medicines were a nationa drink, and advertising was the bigges gambling game there was.

Manufacturers and merchants seeking to enter or increase their sales in the New York market—the richest in the world—most profitably concentrate their efforts in the advertising columns of The New York Times.

The Times is the strongest advertising influence upon the purchasing power of the New York market. The Times readers—intelligent, substantial, greater in number than those of any other standard size New York morning newspaper—represent circulation unequaled in quantity and quality. Advertising in The New York Times is the foundation of a successful campaign.

The average net paid daily and Sunday circulation of The New York Times, as reported to the Post Office Department for the six months ended March 31, 1926, was 392,695 copies. This total is a gain of 10,690 over the average of 382,005 for the six months ended September 30, 1925.

In 1925 The Times published 26,200,044 agate lines of advertising, the greatest volume ever published by any New York newspaper in one year. This record was a gain of 1,916,520 lines over the total of 1924, and an excess of 10,963,382 lines over the second New York newspaper.

In the three months of this year, The Times published 7,481,592 agate lines of advertising, a gain of 776,330 lines over the total of the corresponding period of 1925, and an excess over the second New York newspaper of 2,829,046 lines.

This great volume of advertising was attained by The New York Times notwithstanding the censorship under which thousands of lines of questionable, misleading and unworthy announcements were declined. All advertisements submitted for publication in The New York Times are subject to its censorship.

FORESTRY AND THE NEWSPRINT PAPER SUPPLY

Scientific Farming of Timber Crops Means Continuous Timber Production, But Not Necessarily Cheap Wood—Fire Prevention a Major Practical Step in Program

By R. S. KELLOGG
Secretary News Print Service Bureau

HAD it been possible to put in one place all the wood used to make the newsprint paper used in the United States in 1925, it would have made a pile a mile square and twenty feet high. If stacked in cord fashion four feet wide and four feet high, it would have made a wall of wood 6,800 miles long. and the paper made from these 4,500,000 cords would have covered an area nearly equal to the combined areas of the states of Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Jersey.

Notwithstanding these big figures, the demand for wood for the manufacture of newsprint paper is one of the minor drains upon the forest resources of North America when all species and uses are considered. To produce the lumber used in the United States last year, for instance, required nearly five times as much timber as to produce the newsprint paper consumed, and there are various other demands upon the forests which are greater than those of the paper mill.

It is because of the relatively few species used to make newsprint and the fact that these are neither our most abundant nor widely distributed species that the question of raw material supply for our newsprint mills is so important.

As now operated, the newsprint industry requires 100 h. p. for every ton of paper made, and the woods used are chiefly spruce, balsam and hemlock. The industry is therefore concentrated at the points which afford the most economical combination of wood and power. This will always be the case unless there is some revolutionary change in the processes and materials used for newsprint paper.

There is a larger investment per unit of product in the manufacture of paper than in any other important forest industry. Hence the necessity for large capitalization and permanent wood supply. A completely integrated 100-ton mill with its own power development may easily require a $5,000,000 investment, and were this mill backed by the ownership of forest land suitably stocked to yield annually the necessary 45,000 cords of pulpwood, another $5,000,000 might be involved, or a total of $100,000 per ton of daily capacity for a permanently self-sustained operation.

With the paper industry, forestry is no longer a matter of sentiment and theory. It is a question of protection of investment in plant and working capital through the assurance of a supply of raw material. Forestry is the growing and using of timber crops just as farming is the growing of other crops which supply human needs. The result of forestry is continuous timber production, but not necessarily cheap timber. Some of the shouters for forestry would be less audible if they understood this. Forestry must pay its way by producing timber crops which, on the average, return the cost of production. Most of the timber so far used in this country has not brought a reproduction price. But it is infinitely better for us to pay the cost of growing timber under the methods of forestry and be assured of a permanent supply than it is for us to destroy the supply furnished by nature and then go without.

This is the time of the 60-page daily and the 200-page Sunday issue, the time of great advertising spreads and big circulations—all based on cheap white paper. But to make this paper forests are being cut which required fifty to one hundred years to grow. The vital question is:

"Are sufficient new forests coming on to replace the present cutting and meet still greater future demands?"

The only truthful answer to this question now is "No," but it need not always be so. Fire prevention is not forestry, but without it forest crops cannot be grown. The Royal Proclamation of "Save-the-Forest-Week" April 18 to 24 in Canada begins by saying:

"The protection and perpetuation of our forests are vital to the continued industrial welfare and national strength of Canada and to the health, comfort and prosperity of our people;

"The tremendous economic loss through forest fires continues year by year without appreciable diminution; and Canada's future prosperity is seriously menaced by these recurrent holocausts;

"The experience of all forest authorities in Canada has abundantly demonstrated that the forest fire problem can be solved only with the full sympathy, assistance and active support of all the people, practically expressed by increased individual care with fire in the woods, and an insistent public demand for proper precaution against fire on the part of all workers or travellers in or adjacent to the forest."

The corresponding Presidential Proclamation of American Forest Week carries these statements:

"In again proclaiming American Forest Week it is fitting that while giving full weight to the evils resulting from impoverished forests and idle land, I should lay stress upon the outward spread of forestry in industrial practice and land usage. Too long have we as a nation consumed our forest wealth without adequate provision for its wise utilization and renewal. But a gratifying change is taking place in the attitude of our industries, our landowners and the American people towards our forests.

"Although our national progress in forestry has been well begun, much remains to be done through both concerted and individual effort. We must stamp out the forest fires which still annually sweep many wooded areas, destroying timber the nation can ill afford to lose and killing young growth needed to constitute the forests of the future. Forest fires, caused largely by human indifference or carelessness, are the greatest single obstacle to reforestation and effective forest management.

"We must encourage and extend methods of timber cutting which perpetuate the forest while harvesting its products. We must plant trees in abundance on our idle land where they can profitably be grown. We must examine taxation practices that may form economic barriers to timber culture. We must encourage the extension of forest ownership on the part of municipalities, counties, States and the Federal Government. And we must take common counsel in public meetings to the end that the forestry problems of each region may be well considered and adequately met."

Most fortunately, timber is our one great natural resource which is easily reproducible. It is possible for us to have a permanent supply of wood adequate for every reasonable use if the land areas in North America fit only for timber growing are kept at the job. This involves co-operation between the private owner or limit holder and the public as represented by State or Provincial and Federal authorities. The public must do its share through fair taxation of forest properties, widespread and effective fire prevention measures, the establishment of large forest reserves, and fundamental research into the manner of tree growth and the properties of wood.

Assured of these, the corporation with a large mill investment can then proceed with some confidence to the formulation and application of detailed plans for continuous timber production upon its forest lands or limits held under license.

The problem for the manufacturer and user of newsprint paper is not to find a substitute for wood, but to help bring about conditions which will result in the growing of more wood.

LINDSLEY DENIED APPEAL

Eureka, Cal., Editor Must Serve Contempt Sentence or Pay Fine

Alfred Lindsley, former editor of the Eureka Humboldt News at Eureka, Cal., lost his last fight for release from jail on a contempt charge April 3, when the State Supreme Court refused to hear his appeal from a decision of the Appellate Court.

Judge Denver Sevier, Humboldt county judge, had fined Lindsley $2,000, with an alternative of 1,000 days in jail.

The law provides that the appeal to the Supreme Court must be taken within 40 days. Lindsley's counsel waited until the fifty-eighth day.

Lindsley was adjudged in contempt because of articles appearing in his newspaper concerning court proceedings in a libel suit that had been brought against him. His readers rallied to his support, and when he was first threatened with jail, many offered to serve for him.

Every Day is Better Homes Day in Cincinnati

The Better Homes Movement that has been sweeping the country during the past decade has not only made the American housewife more discriminating in her choice of household furniture and furnishings but it has also given to designers and manufacturers the incentive to create better and more beautiful things. It has revolutionized retail selling methods and placed the merchandising of furniture, carpets, rugs, draperies, lamps and interior decorations on a plane of professional service. Mid-Victorian ugliness has no longer a place in the American scheme of living.

This is particularly true in Cincinnati, "the most American of American cities." Here every third home is owned by the family that occupies it—and home ownership is the strongest incentive to home betterment. In Cincinnati every day is "better homes day" and every edition of Cincinnati's leading newspaper is a special "better homes edition," carrying at least two solid pages of matter devoted solely to the home, its management and its beautification.

That the Times-Star should have become the recognized leader in the better homes movement in Cincinnati was but the natural outcome of its dominant leadership in home circulation, reaching as it does, practically every native white family in the city and contiguous trading area, the homes where better furniture and furnishings are to be used and enjoyed.

Such, in brief, is the explanation for the unchallenged dominance of the Times-Star in display lineage for furniture and furnishings. Year after year, with unvarying regularity, the merchants who sell furniture, floor coverings, draperies, lamps and articles of household decoration register the responsiveness of the Cincinnati public in increased display advertising in the Times-Star.

And such too, in brief, is the explanation for the overwhelming leadership of the Times-Star as the medium of contact with the Cincinnati market for those manufacturers whose products are distributed through the retail furniture, carpet and household supply stores of this great city in which every day is "better homes day."

The Unbreakable Bond

CAN you imagine more than a million and a half families? No one can. Can you visualize several million individuals? No. And yet it is true that the Scripps-Howard newspapers—twenty-four of them in the leading cities—have gathered together in one group more than a million and a half families, comprising an enormous family group in themselves—a family of readers and of buyers. Held together by the unbreakable bond of confidence established through many years of reading and trusting the pages of these great publications.

Why do they read these newspapers? Because of accurate, truthful news. Because of honest, fearless editorials. Because of helpful and interesting features and articles. And they read them, not only for these valid reasons, but also because these newspapers carry on the bold spirit of Horace Greeley . . . the pedestrian common sense of Ben Franklin . . . the proudest traditions of American journalism. The Scripps-Howard newspapers stand courageous and independent. Because they owe allegiance only to the truth—and no newspaper is infallible—they are quick to admit a fault and ready to correct an inaccuracy. Small wonder that more than 1,500,000 Americans here rest their faith!

1,950 USURIOUS LOANS CANCELLED IN DAILY'S CLEAN-UP CAMPAIGN

Minneapolis Daily Star Brought "Loan Sharks" to Terms in Spirited 38 Day Campaign in Which 40 Lawyers Aided—Libel Threat Ignored

By ROGER BANNING

A MOST unusual and effective crusade against lawlessness came to a successful conclusion in the city of Minneapolis on April 5 when 32 loan companies formally "surrendered" to the Minneapolis Daily Star after that militant newspaper for 38 successive days directed an incessant fire both in its columns and in the courts against "loan sharks."

Today, in the absence of a law regulating the money lending business in Minneapolis, the Daily Star has established itself as a public supervisor over the lending of thousands of dollars to Minneapolis citizens by the loan companies.

W. C. Robertson

While the procedure used by the Daily Star in its fight to curb the practice of usury was both daring and unique, the outcome of the anti-usury drive indicates quite conclusively that steps similar to those employed by the Daily Star might be taken with the same prospect of success by any other metropolitan daily in a city where poor people as well as those in more favorable circumstances are being victimized by money lenders charging exorbitant interest on small chattel or salary loans.

The Daily Star, at the conslusion of its anti-usury campaign, had some tangible results to "show on paper." These included:

The cancellation of 1,950 usurious loans which needy or gullible—as the case might be—citizens had taken out with "loan sharks."

A cash saving to the public of $75,000.

The curbing of further lawlessness by unscrupulous money lenders.

The "economic rescue" of hundreds of Minneapolis citizens who were being pursued relentlessly by aggressive collectors employed by usurious money lenders.

The militant fight waged against "loan sharks" was mapped out by W. C. Robertson, editor of the Star, who originated a method of dealing with lawless money lenders that is probably without precedent.

Mr. Robertson called several Minneapolis attorneys engaged in the private practice of law, and invited them, over the telephone, to form the nucleus of what he described as "a public legal board that will agree, without remuneration, to aid the Daily Star in a fight to the finish against usurious money lenders." Twelve of the first 15 attorneys whom he called consented to serve on such a legal board. The editor then established an "Anti-Usury Bureau" in the editorial department of the Star.

On Feb. 28, 1926, the Daily Star published a story on page one, announcing that it would cancel all usurious loans drawn to the attention of its "Anti-Usury" Bureau by "loan shark" victims. Within an hour after the Feb. 28 issue of the Star appeared on the streets the first "loan shark" victim to apply for relief came to the desk of the reporter in charge of the Anti-Usury Bureau. Within five minutes this "loan shark" victim was on his way to the office of one of the 12 attorneys comprising the Legal Board. He was armed with a letter of introduction presented to him by the "Anti-Usury" Bureau, which briefly outlined an allegation of usury against three companies with which the borrower had been dealing.

The Legal Board member, to whom the letter outlining the complaint was presented, thereupon dictated three letters to his stenographer, notifying each of the three loan companies that the Legal Board demanded the cancellation of the loan on grounds of usury.

When the money lenders received the letters they immediately sent representatives to the office of the attorney, and submitted to his demands. The companies did not wish to contest the demands of the Legal Board member, knowing that if the case was taken into court they would face the loss of legal costs in addition to the loss occasioned by cancellation of the loan.

Following the success of the first "test case," a steady stream of oppressed victims of usurious money lenders flowed daily past the Anti-Usury desk in the Star editorial department and thence down to the private offices of the various members of the Legal Board. The money which the public saved through the Anti-Usury Bureau and Legal Board began to mount into thousands of dollars. Usurious money lenders called conferences and found, following several symposiums, that they were being forced out of their unlawful business. Backed by a capital of a staggering amount, they banded together and decided to sue the Daily Star for libel.

Counsel for the usurious money lenders served a "demand for retraction"—the preliminary to a libel suit—on Mr. Robertson on March 28, after the Star announced that it would increase the membership of its Legal Board from 12 to 40 attorneys in order to handle the steadily mounting flood of complaints lodged by borrowers with the Anti-Usury Bureau.

The demand for a "retraction" was met the following day by the Star's reply, which was written by Mr. Robertson and published in the editorial page. The editor's reply was to the effect that "The Daily Star would welcome a show-down on a libel charge in the courts at the earliest convenience of the complainants."

Simultaneously, the Star published the names of its completed board of 40 attorneys, as well as the thirtieth news story baring depredations of "loan sharks" on innocent victims. The board of 40 attorneys launched itself into the Anti-Usury drive with such determination that the volume of complaints against the money lenders increased in a sensational manner. "Loan sharks," unable to contest the demands of the attorneys because of laws which make the collection of usurious interest illegal while not prohibiting the practice of usury, found that they were losing thousands of dollars. The Legal Board insisted that 8 per cent per annum was the legal rate of interest and its contention was upheld by the courts. Loan sharks had been levying interest ranging from 60 per cent to 500 per cent!

Finding that the Star meant business, the money lenders abandoned their plan to carry out their threat of a libel suit. Instead they sent representatives to the editor of the Star. They announced that they sought peace—at terms to be laid down by the Star.

Mr. Robertson called a meeting of the Legal Board and attorneys representing the loan companies. It was decided at the meeting that the companies were to submit to restrictions that would place them "within the law."

Beginning April 6 a loan arbitration board consisting of the editor of the Daily Star, a member of the Legal Board and an attorney representing the loan companies, held the first of a series of hearings at which borrowers appeared, lodged their complaints, and had usurious claims against them "wiped off the books" within a few minutes.

The arbitration board will continue to function so long as usurious loans are drawn to the attention of the Anti-Usury Bureau, replacing the Legal Board, which has completed its work.

Complaints against any companies not submitting to arbitration are prosecuted by attorneys representing the Daily Star in the same drastic manner that characterized the work of the Legal Board during the 38 days it waged continual warfare on "loan sharks."

Commenting on the Daily Star's anti-usury drive Mr. Robertson said: "The general public and even members of the Legal Board didn't suspect the amazing extent of the ramifications of unscrupulous money lenders. As the campaign against usury progressed the extent to which the money lenders were victimizing thousands of Minneapolis citizens was gradually brought to light.

"Attorneys were appalled by the amount of suffering bared by the drive leaders. The public responded instantaneously to the disclosures made in the news columns. The drive was looked upon with favor also by business men.

"Minneapolis Builders Exchange, for example, adopted a resolution in which they commended the Daily Star for its fearless attitude, and encouraged continuance of the campaign. In a word the anti-usury drive attracted widespread attention and hundreds of victims of usurious money lenders were genuinely thankful for their rescue by the Daily Star and its assisting Legal Board.

"The Loan Arbitration Board which now settles complaints against 32 companies which surrendered to the Star is a novel experiment. The Board, in absence of laws governing money lending, is cancelling loans on which the principal has been paid. In instances where the principal has not been paid by the borrower, the Board arranges for payment in installments at the rate of 3½ per cent interest per month. The interest applies only from the day on which the Board began to function. The Board meets twice a week to consider a docket of loan complaints. At the next meeting the Board will decide whether or not one of the companies subscribing to arbitration is to be excluded on the grounds that the manager informed one borrower that her credit would be destroyed if she applied for relief to the Arbitration Board. Once excluded the company is deprived of arbitration privileges and will face cancellation of usurious loans and court suits for recovery of interest. In ths manner the Daily Star intends to perpetuate the features of its anti-usury drive until the State Legislature passes a loan law."

COMIC SUPPLEMENT HUMOR

With This Section Editor & Publisher Celebrates Thirty-Two Years' Success of the Colored Comic—Old and New Characters Contrasted —Brief History of An Exclusively American Newspaper Feature

WHEN one visits the public library and reviews the past generation's contemporaneous comments on the colored newspaper comic he is shocked and amazed that the youth of America has "turned out" so well, for dismally pious high-brows for more than a quarter of a century have been predicting that the comic would drive our boys and girls into blithering idiocy, render their morals loose as ashes and strike a death blow at civilization.

Such gloomy forebodings were at their peak in magazine print 15 or 20 years ago. Since the American kid has given evidence that he was not only surviving, but highly enjoying the comic, the critics have of late years retired from the scene. The year 1926 witnesses the colored Sunday comic at the peak of its success as a newspaper feature.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER, desiring to celebrate the event, recently requested all of the producers of colored newspaper comics to furnish cartoon strips, thus to parade their famous characters through our columns during the April newspaper conventions. The unique supplement published this week is the happy result.

On page one are reproductions of some of the famous comic characters of early days, forerunners of the colored supplement of the present. To obtain these, old files in the New York Public Library were inspected and since they could not be clipped copies were made for EDITOR & PUBLISHER by Edward Grinham, for years in newspaper art work in St. Louis and New York, now manager of the newspaper section of the Powers Engraving Company. Mr. Grinham selected at random some of the notable successes, carefully avoiding original creations still familiar to the present generation due to continued run. The object of this selection was to contrast the work of some of the old masters, now out of print with the current crop of Sunday newspaper humor.

The Yellow Kid was the progenitor of American colored comic characters. After New York and Chicago publishers had for years experimented with colored printing, a press was installed by the New York World in 1894 that would make four colors register without the effect resembling a Spanish omelette. On Nov. 18, of that year, the World brought out the first successful Sunday "funny side." Morrill Goddard was Sunday editor and prevailed over other editors who wanted to use the color press to print colored fashions.

Richard F. Outcault, then a draughtsman for the Electrical World, offered a comic showing a clown and a wolf-hound as characters. This was the first Sunday comic. Outcault then created Hogan's Alley and one of his background characters was a kid with big ears and funny toes, wearing a yellow dress. New York went wild over the "Yellow Kid," Outcault put him in the spot-light and the comic craze that has swept the country and has extended to Europe and South America was thus put in motion.

Meanwhile Hearst, Bennett, and other publishers installed color presses. Outcault took the Yellow Kid to the New York Sunday Journal, now American. This great comic artist later created Buster Brown and Poor Lil Mose, for the New York Herald and Denver Post, and his syndicated work has won a fortune.

F. Opper, dean of the comic artists, carried his fun makers from Puck to Mr. Hearst's Journal in 1899. He is the creator of an amazing array of characters that have held the public for more than a quarter of a century and are still so well known that we do not show them in our collection. George McManus scored heavily with his Newlyweds and Panhandle Pete 18 to 20 years ago. Do you remember Kemble's wonderful "Coons," Stemigans' amusing pups, Verbeck's Tiny Tads in New York Herald, Marcelene by Jennett, Kate Carew's Angel Child and Follett's Kid? Meet them again on page one of EDITOR & PUBLISHERS' convention comic section! Gene Carr was reported to be the highest paid comic artist in the days of Lady Bountiful. Kahles who made Mr. Buttin, also originated Clarence the Cop—remember him?

Other famous names among those who started the craze are: Frank M. Howarth, Herriman, still doing Krazy Kat; Bud Fisher, still loyal to his original characters; James Swinnerton, T. A. Dorgan, Carl E. Schultz (Bunny) of Foxy Grandpa fame; Sterrett, Briggs, Fox, McCay and Sid Smith. This is by no means a complete list of the original happy band, but represents the leading spirits, most of whom today rank at the top of the comic art profession.

This aggregation of pen and pencil humorists have brought to the American people more moments of happiness, greater relief from the dull routine of life, than all other instrumentalities in this generation.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER takes this occasion to thank the artists who have generously contributed their work to entertain visiting delegates to the newspaper conventions this week, providing the first colored comics ever printed by a trade paper.

On with the fun !

Charles B. Welch

Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Welch

PROTECTING Washington's educational system from the dangers of political entanglements, maintaining wide circulation throughout southwest Washington despite pressure from metropolitan newspapers of two larger cities, and doing metropolitan advertising business in a small city are some of the things that have kept Charles B. Welch, editor and general manager of the Tacoma (Wash.) News Tribune, working considerably more than the union hours every day during the last year.

But problems of his office are to be forgotten, or at least laid aside, during April, Mr. Welch has decided, and he is to attend the annual Associated Press and A. N. P. A. conventions in New York next week to renew acquaintance with eastern newspaper men at whose sides he worked before coming to the Pacific coast.

Born and reared in Connecticut, Mr. Welch entered his newspaper career after leaving Yale by serving as the proverbial cub reporter on the New Haven Palladium. Later, after a fling at newspaper proprietorship in Meriden, Conn., he went to Boston where he rose rapidly until, at 29, he became managing editor of the Boston Traveler, succeeding Marlen E. Pew, under whom he had been city editor, and enjoying the distinction of being the youngest managing editor of a metropolitan newspaper in the United States at that time.

After other important service in Boston and New York Mr. Welch went to Tacoma in 1913 with Frank S. Baker, as managing editor of the Tacoma Tribune. When the Tribune Publishing Company bought out the News and Ledger, he became editor and general manager of the afternoon newspaper, The News Tribune.

Since that time he has been busy in the work of building up in Tacoma a newspaper of metropolitan size and appearance, designed to fit the peculiar needs of a city of 100,000 and its surrounding territory, against the pressure of the larger city of Seattle to the north and Portland to the south.

Editorially speaking, the outstanding feature of the last year of the News Tribune has been its fight to prevent the educational system of the state from being thrown into the mire of politics. At the special session of the legislature last fall Gov. Roland H. Hartley proposed that the legislature give him authority to do away with the various boards of regents and to form one small board, members to be appointed by himself, to have entire control of the educational system of the state.

Mr. Welch along with many prominent educators of the state, saw grave danger in this, especially as he felt that the governor was not sympathetic with the development of the university along the modern lines which, during the last several years, has elevated it to a position as one of the outstanding universities of the country. By a series of able editorials, backed up by comprehensive news accounts of all developments and frequent cartoons, the News Tribune became a pronounced leader in the fight and played no small part in holding the opposition together for a final victory.

OREGON DAILY WINS SUIT

Establishes Right of Reporters to Inspect Public Records

The right of newspapers or others to inspect public records is upheld in a decision just handed down by the Oregon supreme court. The decision comes as a result of a suit brought by the Bend Publishing Company, publishers of the Bend (Ore.) Bulletin, to compel J. H. Haner, county clerk of Deschutes county, to place the records of his department at the services of reporters representing the Bulletin.

The decision holds without equivocation that the records of state, county, school districts, cities and towns must be kept accessible for inspection and examination by "all persons having reason to make examination of them for any lawful purpose."

The right of newspapers to make such examination is specifically upheld.

The opinion was written by Justice Brown and concurred in by Chief Justice McBride and Justices Bean and Belt. The only limitation mentioned is a provision that the official "is protected in his possession and care of the records in that he is empowered to make such rules and regulations as he shall deem necessary for the preservation of the records and files and to prevent interference with his regular duties as such clerk."

NEW RADIO EQUIPMENT

Portland Oregonian Now Broadcasting With 1000-Watt Set

A newly-installed 1000-watt radio broadcasting set was dedicated on April 5 by the Portland Oregonian. It takes the place of a 500-watt set the Oregonian is discarding. R. G. Callvert, assistant managing editor made the speech of dedication in the absence of Edgar B. Piper, editor, who had planned to participate. R. V. Haller, radio director, also talked and there was an elaborate entertainment program lasting until 2 a. m.

Together with its new set the Oregonian has fitted up new radio studios on the eighth floor of its building, the same floor as the editorial rooms.

The Oregonian KGW has been broadcasting continuously since March 1922.

Paterson Daily Getting New Press

Leadership and Growth

AMONG those New Yorkers who constitute the best market for advertised products—the prosperous, intelligent, responsive New Yorkers—The Sun has a greater appeal than any other New York evening newspaper.

It is for this reason that manufacturers and merchants have found it so profitable to advertise their products in The Sun. It is for this reason that advertisers use more space in The Sun than in any other New York evening newspaper.

Leadership in Advertising

In March, for the ninth consecutive month, The Sun led all New York evening newspapers in total volume of advertising.

The Sun's gain in advertising in March, 1926 (compared with March, 1925), was 341,022 lines—a greater gain than that of any other New York newspaper, morning, evening or Sunday—a greater gain also than that of all other New York evening newspapers combined.

During the first quarter of 1926 advertisers placed 4,194,926 lines of total advertising in The Sun—which exceeded by 360,036 lines the volume of advertising placed in the second New York evening newspaper.

National Advertisers as well as Manhattan Department Stores have for years used more space in The Sun than in any other New York evening newspaper.

The Sun's net paid daily average circulation for the six months period ending March 31, 1926, was 259,351.

This represents an increase of 11,981 over the corresponding six months of 1925.

What is most significant about this circulation increase is that it is a natural, steady, sound increase, won purely on the merits of The Sun as a newspaper. It is in no way a forced increase. It was not secured through contests or prizes, or through any series of special articles or through any other similar form of promotion designed to swell circulation.

The Sun's circulation increase is the kind that is most valuable to advertisers, for it represents new readers who, like the older ones, believe in The Sun and have confidence in the advertisements as well as in the news it publishes.

WATCH THOSE DANGEROUS LITTLE LIBEL WORDS

Newspaper Men Urged to Remember They Bear Burden of Proof in Damage Actions—Be Sure of Truth When Calling Names, Says Helm, Lawyer

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

A five-letter word, wrongfully used, may create a five-figure libel action against a newspaper.

Short, but potentially costly words, are these listed this week in a libel dictionary compiled by Editor & Publisher.

"Certain words are libellous per se, and, if used in unprivileged instances, the plaintiff bringing suit against a newspaper need not prove injury or intent to injure to recover damages," warns Carl Helm, lawyer, member of the Hearst legal department in New York, in this the fifth article in a series stripping the libel law of legal verbiage.

A NEW YORK doctor's wife had run away with another man and had been named co-defendant with him in a bad check charge in the courts. She repented and returned to her husband.

Assigned to the story, a newspaper man called on the doctor for an interview. The doctor rallied to the support of his wife and to the reporter hurled abuse at the man who had run away with her. Among other things, he called the man a Svengali, who had hypnotized his wife, a rogue, a rascal, and a villain.

The reporter, a youngster, wrote a graphic story and turned it in. Fortunately it was killed.

"How would you like the assignment of proving those words true of the man about whom they were used?" the reporter was asked.

On occasion such words have been published by newspapers in instances where they were not privileged, according to Carl Helm, New York lawyer, member of the Hearst legal department, assigned by William A. DeFord, chief counsel of the Hearst Corporations, to study the causes of libel actions.

"Words that are libellous per se used without privilege are indefensible in a resultant libel action," Mr. Helm said. "The plaintiff has only to prove publication. The burden of proving the truth of the accusation rests solely on the newspaper.

"A court has ruled that 'the publication of a libel is a wrongful act, presuming injury to those persons to whom it relates, and, in the absence of legal excuse, gives a right of recovery irrespective of the intent of the defendant who published it, and thus although he had reason to believe the statement to be true.'

"And another court has held: 'If a word or article is libellous per se, a perfect and indefensible cause of action accrues to the plaintiff, if the matter is false, to recover from the defendant a fair compensation for all injury which the publication should cause to the reputation, feelings, good name and fame of the victim.'

"It is well for a reporter or editor to think of what a job he'll have to prove a statement or word true, before he publishes it."

From Odgers "Slander and Libel," and Newell, "The Law of Slander and Libel," a brief dictionary of libellous words has been compiled by Editor & Publisher. Each word has figured in a libel suit won by the plaintiff. For pasting in the hat, the dictionary follows:

Anarchist; bankrupt; black-leg; black-sheep; brainstorm; briber; crook; crooked; damaged goods chap; destitute; extreme poverty.

Felon; fraud; frozen snake; gambler; henchman of a notorious character; humbug; hypocrite; impending insanity; impostor.

Infernal villain; insane; insolvent; insulting to ladies; ironical praise (such as to call an attorney "an honest lawyer, when the opposite is implied); itchy old toad; liar; mere man of straw; obituary of a living person.

Packing a jury; psuedo scientist; rascal; rogue; scoundrel; slacker; suicide fiend; syphilis; thief; tool of profiteers; unfit to be trusted with money; and villain.

Regarding libellous words, Odgers says:

"All written words, which expose the plaintiff to hatred, contempt, ridicule or obloquy, which tend to injure him in his profession or trade, or cause him to be shunned or avoided by his neighbors are libellous.

"Any written words are defamatory, which impute to the plaintiff that he has been guilty of any crime, fraud, dishonesty, immorality, vice or dishonorable conduct, or has been accused or suspected of any misconduct, or which suggest that the plaintiff is suffering from any infectious disorder, or which have a tendency to injure him in his office, profession, calling or trade.

"And so, too, are all words which hold the plaintiff up to contempt, hatred, scorn or ridicule, and which by thus engendering an evil opinion of him in the minds of right-thinking men, tend to deprive him of friendly intercourse and society."

A sensational news story which set forth that the plaintiff was living in extreme poverty and destitution, which was false, and which was maliciously published with the intent of injuring the plaintiff's good name has been held by a court to be libellous.

"Henchman of a notorious character" was declared libellous per se by a judge, who held that it imputed the plaintiff was ready to do unlawful and disreputable things.

Because it held the plaintiff up to public hatred, contempt and ridicule, this story, copied from another paper, was held libellous by a court: (The names of the plaintiff and town are fictitious).

"John Roberts is again a resident of Westover. Westover has troubles and annoyances enough without Mr. Roberts. The town does not deserve such an indignity. Although Westover has had many uninvited visitors this summer, the townspeople had hoped to escape Roberts."

Roberts recovered substantial damages.

A Chicago newspaper once called a person a "suicide fiend," who had attempted suicide 25 times and would go to a hospital and asked to be "pumped out." The newspaper was unable to prove to a jury's satisfaction that the plaintiff was a "suicide fiend" and was forced to pay out a couple of editors' salaries. The reporter was fired.

A newspaper has been made the defendant in a libel action because it referred to a white man as colored. The plaintiff won, the court deciding that the story was libellous per se, stating that the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments to the Constitution did not affect former social relations of the two races.

The New York World once published a story which began:

"That the battle for existence is not won by brains alone is illustrated in the sad plight of Prof. ———, Staten Island.

"A man of extraordinary attainments in classical learning and once a professor in Oxford, he is now in sad straits, because his education hampers him in earning a living."

The story went on to describe his poverty.

The court held this story libellous per se, as exposing the person in question to ridicule.

Even though acts of a person are done outside his business or profession, a court may hold their publication is damaging to his business or profession.

The headline "Minister Curses in Court," for instance, is actionable per se as affecting the clergyman's ministerial profession.

Words calculated to hurt the credit of a business or business man in the sense of imputing bankruptcy or insolvency, are libellous per se. An action may be maintained against a newspaper in such cases, even though no fraud, or dishonesty, has been charged and although the publication is free from actual malice.

If a libel is published injuring the business of a co-partnership, each partner may maintain a separate action to recover damages caused to his share in the business. Damages to the co-partnership itself must be recovered jointly and damage to the partners individually must be recovered by the partners separately.

One tricky thing for newspaper men to remember is that words which do not convey a definite libellous meaning to people generally may be held by a court to convey such a meaning to those people tutored in the use of them.

Thus 'moron' may be held libellous, 'manic depressive,' or 'dementia praecox.'

Mr. Helm in his capacity of libel cause investigator for Mr. DeFord has discovered that words, libellous per se, crop up most frequently in small unimportant stories, that might easily be left out of the paper.

Rumors are reported containing libellous words or statements, detectives or police are quoted, or so-called human interest stories, not vitally necessary to a newspaper from point of reader interest or circulation, are written in such a way to hold the person written about up to public ridicule or scorn, he said.

"Only this week," he declared, "a copy reader who had written a headline to the effect that a man on trial for murder had repudiated a previous confession to police passed a story which was worth a couple of sticks at best, and wouldn't have been missed if killed—as it eventually was. It stated that a band of youths confessed at police headquarters that they had been living several months on money stolen from coin boxes. The boys had about $7 in small coins in their possession when they were arrested. Later they were released for lack of evidence."

A startling proof that libel lurks in small things is the fact pointed out by Mr. Helm that libel by faulty punctuation is possible. The other day he caught and corrected this libellous statement: (the names have been changed).

"John Jones, brother of Sam Jones, who is also wanted by police on a charge of murder, aided detectives in New York today."

The "also" referred to another person mentioned in the previous sentence. John Jones, had the story been published, could have brought libel suit against the newspaper. His brother, not he, was wanted by police on a murder charge. Insertion of the second comma, however, had libelled him seriously. Omit that comma, and the story is safe.

(Next week this series will be continued in Editor & Publisher, with an article entitled "What Is Fair Criticism and Comment"?)

ROSCOE S. Chapman, publisher of the Rockford (Ill.) Morning Star who has been a regular at A.N.P.A. meetings for years, will not interest himself in advertising rates, print paper and wage schedules as intensively this convention-time. Not that he has ceased to be interested in those important details. Not at all. Roscoe will have been married by the time of the big meeting and will be showing his young wife Niagara Falls, Broadway and the Waldorf Astoria for the first time.

Undoubtedly the New York end of the Star's advertising staff has already obtained space in all the New York theatres where good shows are going on and those events, in addition to seeing many of the great personalities of the newspaper world, will give the bride a royal honeymoon.

ANNUAL DINNER OF GRIDIRON CLUB

Fathers Step from Frames to Chide Moderns in Good-Natured Raillery Cartoonist Barryman New President

George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, John Marshall and Alexander Hamilton stepped last Saturday night from their golden frames in history to chide present-day Americans.

Portraits of these four outstanding figures became animated at the annual Spring dinner of the Gridiron Club. They selected popular airs of 1926 as the medium for their critical counsel to the America of this, the sesquicentennial year, when all eyes are turned to Philadelphia.

The gist of their tuneful shafts was that the Nation had sacrificed much of what they had gained for it and that to them the colonial days appeared to be truly the "good old days."

If Washington, Jefferson, Marshall and Hamilton were present in the spirit among the large group of distinguished guests, including the Vice President, the cabinet, diplomats, Senators, jurists, artists, financial and professional leaders and journalists of Pan-America, they heard the Gridiron's scorching satire of the prohibition debate, the bi-partisan coalition in the Senate, the Democratic search for campaign issues, the White House spokesman, the "Bill" Borah—"Jim" Reed anti-world court crusade, a reading of the "diary and memoirs" of Frank W. Stearns and numerous jibes at the Vice President.

The musical lilt of the dinner was heightened by the presence of John Philip Sousa, a limited member of the club, who had composed for the occasion the "Gridiron March." The March King of the world conducted the Marine Band in introducing his new production, its premiere presentation.

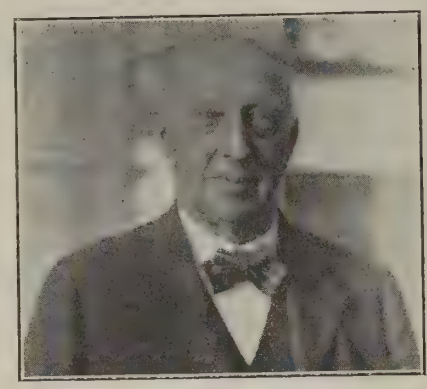
In honor of the inauguration of Clifford K. Berryman, cartoonist of the Washington Star, as president of the club, the first non-writing member ever to attain to that office, 10 of the leading artists of the country were present as guests of the president to give display of another art. Their personal conceptions of President Coolidge and Vice President Dawes were thrown on a screen while the artists were made to stand in the glare of the spotlight.

The artists included Herbert Johnson of the Saturday Evening Post, Rolin Kirby of the New York World, C. H. Sykes, Philadelphia Public Ledger; Edwin Marcus, New York Times; W. A. Rogers, Washington Post; "Billy" Ireland, Columbus Despatch; J. H. Donahey, Cleveland Plain Dealer; D. R. Fitzpatrick, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and John L. DeMar, Philadelphia Record.

Ulric Bell, Washington correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal, and Theodore H. Tiller, Washington Correspondent of the Atlanta Journal, were initiated as new members of the Gridiron Club in a skit satirizing the new-found prosperity of the South and its demand for more representation in the club.

Among the speakers were the vice president, Walter Williams of Missouri, chairman of the Pan-American Congress of Journalists; Senator Ashurst of Arizona and Senator Reed of Pennsylvania. President Coolidge was obliged to withdraw his acceptance to attend the dinner, following the death of his father.

Illustrators to Dine April 16



A dinner, minstrel show and dance was given April 16 at the Hotel Roosevelt, New York, by the Society of Illustrators. Clare Briggs and Rube Goldberg, newspaper cartoonists, were on the entertainment program.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Wallace M. Scudder

AN outstanding example of the type of newspaper owner who seeks as a settled principle complete anonymity is Wallace M. Scudder, proprietor and publisher of the Newark (N. J.) Evening News. He, with some associates who have long since passed out of the picture, founded the News in 1883.

As preparation for his life work he was graduated from Lehigh University in 1873 with the degree of mechanical engineer. He then went to the Harvard Law School, studied in the office of John R. Emery, later a vice chancellor, and was admitted to the New Jersey bar in 1877. He practised as an attorney until 1883 when he started the News. Since then he has devoted his life to his newspaper.

The News met rough going at first. The man who had been educated to be both a mechanical engineer and a lawyer became a solicitor of advertisements and tramped the town getting business. Financial institutions were wary of the new paper and were not extravagant with loans to tide over stresses. The News had formidable competition in the "old stand-by" Newark Daily Advertiser, and in the New York and Philadelphia newspapers whose territories the News invaded. But the infant grew and developed and by 1900 had become established as one of New Jersey's leading newspapers. Today it is especially noted for its editorial page.

Mr. Scudder is the most modest of men, he yet has always kept control of his property and directed its policies, although rarely if ever appearing publicly as its guiding hand. His ability to keep himself out of the limelight has been extraordinary, due to his firm conviction that the newspaper comes before any personality, even its owner's.

Charlotte, N. C., Western Newspaper Union Branch to Close Following Blaze

As a result of three disastrous fires occurring within four years, the Charlotte branch of the Western Newspaper Union is to be permanently discontinued.

This announcement followed an investigation by company executives into the conflagration of April 2, which completely destroyed the plant on North Graham street, valued at $115,000.

W. M. Harper, assistant general manager, of Omaha, Neb.; J. P. Rivett, of Chicago, Ill., and A. H. Turner, resident manager, in conference at Charlotte reached the decision to close the branch.

Atlanta and Baltimore offices will serve the district.

California Editors to Meet May 15

offers you circulation! The man who has hundreds of thousands of scientifically-created circulation to his credit, has built another sure-fire reader-puller, and YOU can have it, in your territory, if you are the first to order.

"SECOND LOVE"

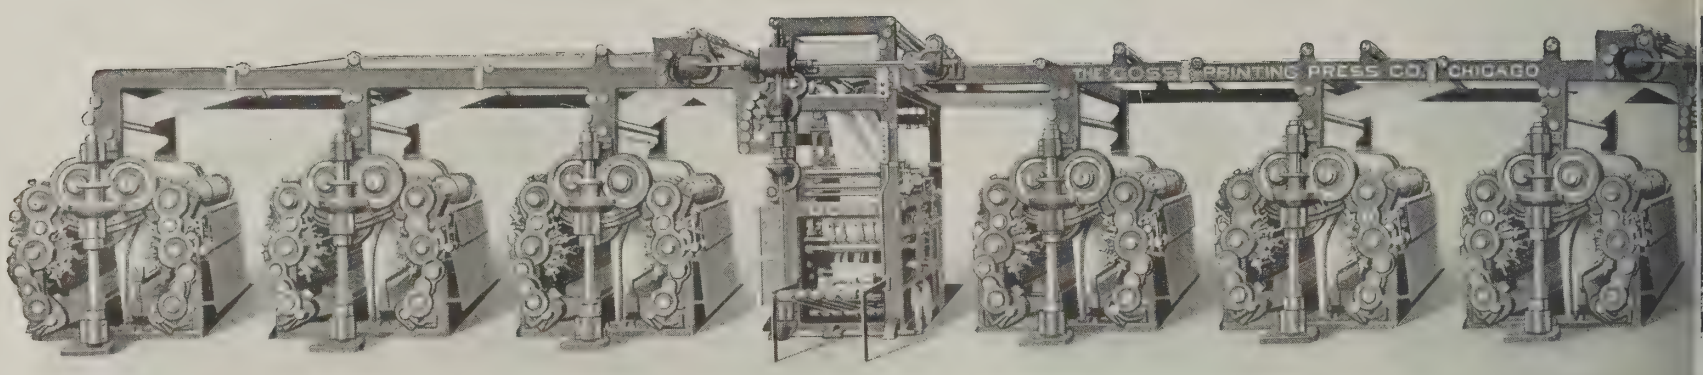
a new, powerful newspaper serial, constructed for newspaper needs, is the answer to your circulation question. (For release June 5, in 60 installments.)

Director of the most astounding quick successes in the history of journalism, Mr. MacLean has discovered and perfected the specific tonic and stimulant for circulation ailments.

The great fiction campaign originated and supervised by Mr. MacLean, including "The Flapper Wife," "Footloose," "Spinsterhood," "The Yellow Stub" and "These Women" (the last written by himself under the pen name of Malcolm Duart and now running in more than 400 dailies) proved to be the most sensational circulation builder of the decade. If you benefitted by this campaign you need SECOND LOVE to hold what you gained and to gain more—and if you were "the other fellow," who couldn't buy these circulation builders before, this is your chance to "get in."

Your territory is open. This is the first announcement of SECOND LOVE. Complete proofs ready May 5. Illustrations and material for promotion campaign ready May 15. Illustrations are photographic, in mat form.

"SECOND LOVE"



is a sequel to "These Women," and yet is a complete serial in itself. Written as a local story in your territory, it is better than local news for getting and holding new readers. Prices on request. Better wire today to:

SK OPEN SESSIONS OF THE LEAGUE

orking Correspondents Give Views on Convention of Press Experts —Complain of Cost of Living

The International Association of Jour- ists Accredited to the League of Na- ns, recently gave to the League its ws on the appropriateness of calling gether an International Committee of perts of the Press. The Interna- nal body is composed of journalists onging to twenty-seven different coun- es, who regularly follow for distant wspapers or agencies the work of the ague.

The association offers hearty co-oper- on, if it is demonstrated that re is "no intention whatever to alien- in any possible way the independence judgment of the members. It is posed that the League make more de- ite assurance that no propaganda for League is intended."

The report says: "Journalists fol- ing the work of the League of Na- ns would have fuller feeling of their ependence and of their liberty of in- pretation if they were enabled to be sent at all the sittings of the sembly and the League Council and Commissions when the discussion of stions before these bodies should not der absolute secrecy indispensable. cite a definite case, we will take the mple of the extraordinary meeting of Council of February 12 last relative the reception of the request for ad- sion by Germany. For this meeting, ich will mark a date in the history the League of Nations, special corre- ndents had come from afar, and their prise was great to see that, like the er journalists, they were not allowed ess to the hall in which the meeting s taking place.

We will not hide from you that several mbers of the Council of the League of tions made known to us their astonish- nt to find this session was secret when ly in no way saw the necessity for it ng so.

Furthermore, the intensification of egraphic and telephonic diffusion by the ss of news from the seat of the League Nations could scarcely be obtained er than by the most rapid means and establishing less heavy tolls.

It is evident that the tendency to entralization manifest with the League Nations, which more and more trans- ts its meetings to localities and ers countries, renders the obtaining of ded rapid service at low rates ex- mely difficult, and we do not cease m making repeated representations to Swiss administration of telegraphs telephones. We are persuaded that localization of the labors of the gue of Nations is of a nature to en- rage this administration to improve transmission services, which at pres- are inadequate at Geneva, and to en- e for telegraph and telephone press ssages that permanent priority over others, by day and night, which is spensable for the proper carrying out our task.

Our Association would also like, in ordance with the wish so expressed the greater number of its members, something be done in favor of the respondents working at Geneva far n their country. For the facility and idity of their getting about, they uld like the cards issued by the League Nations to possess the virtue of an rnational visa, which should enable n to shorten formalities at frontiers. y would also like to benefit on all ways of all countries by the special s accorded in each country to its journalists, that is in all countries h have to be crossed to reach the of the League. They consider, fur- more, that means should be studied void the double taxing of the salaries ournalists obliged to reside abroad by on of their profession.

Our members consider that on these first points it would be easy to give them satisfaction. As to the double taxation, it adds to the high cost of living in Switzerland in preventing the constitution in Geneva of an international corps of newspaper correspondents who, by reason of their duties, are collaborators in the work of the League of Nations.

"Lastly, our Association begs that measures be taken in the near future to put a stop to the journalistic activities of certain functionaries of the League of Nations, and especially of the International Labor Bureau."

Elzey Roberts

THE career of Elzey Roberts, publisher of the St. Louis Star, has not followed along the lines for success laid down in the copy book maxims, but is in many ways equally remarkable. Mr. Roberts is probably one of the youngest metropolitan newspaper owners and publishers in the United States. The age of 34 finds him as president of the corporation and majority stock owner of a publication of nearly $2,000,000 a year gross business.

His father, the late John C. Roberts, purchased the paper in 1913 and Elzey Roberts entered the newspaper business two years later immediately after leaving college, and has been in it ever since except for the time he was in the army. After three years given to learning the business he was made publisher and president of the corporation. The Star has an influence in community affairs. In the last Mayoralty primary campaign, the Star championed the candidacy of an independent who broke down the machine which had dominated St. Louis affairs for 16 years. In the election that followed the St. Louis Star elected its candidate.

An interesting feature of the Star organization is that its executives and department heads are men who have come up on the newspaper. Mr. Roberts believes that it is both unnecessary and a reflection on the management of a property to have to go outside for ability to fill executive vacancies. Consequently, every man in the Star organization has his eye on the job of the fellow higher up and is putting forth the kind of effort necessary to create a hard-hitting, cohesive organization.

Many people, who think of Florida as only a winter resort, imagine that as soon as the tourists have departed in the spring Florida is as deserted as a baseball park after the game is over.

The truth is that Florida in the summer more nearly resembles the circus grounds after the show is over. For then the work seems really to begin. The state seethes with activity. Construction is rushed on new hotels, apartments, business buildings and houses. New roads are built, new paving laid. Public utilities are extended. Everybody is busy.

The permanent residents of the state, numbering nearly a million and a half, continue to live here throughout the summer. And many others come here for business or pleasure. The heat is not excessive. There is no record of a single sunstroke in Florida history. People work and play as usual and they all continue to buy just as they do in other parts of the land.

All of which merely shows that it pays to advertise to Florida in the summer, too. It's a great year-round market, with an extra population thrown in for good measure in the winter.

Keep your advertising message continuously before the Florida market by using the Associated Dailies—the only media that cover the state completely and economically.

NEW YORK STATE PRESS MEETS AT SYRACUSE

Jerome D. Barnum Tells Editors Post Office Department Is Lagging in Modern Transportation of Mails

Jerome D. Barnum, publisher of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Post Standard, chairman of the postal committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, in an address at the annual meeting of the New York State Press Association at the Department of Journalism, Syracuse University, April 10, declared the Post Office Department is lagging in its adoption of modern transportation methods.

"The situation could easily be corrected," said Mr. Barnum, "by business-like methods such as any manufacturer, mail order house or retail establishment would use for service to its patrons." He maintained nearly 15 months had elapsed since representatives of the largest regular users of the United States Mails had shown the Post Office Department, by testimony at Congressional hearings, "that it was behind the times and losing a large volume of business because of high mail rates and infrequent delivery of mail." The time has come, he said, for speedy elimination of antiquated transportation conditions particularly for local or short haul matter.

"In many sections of the country there are opportunities for greatly improved postal service by use of motor bus or motor truck lines, giving more frequent service at a cost that should be no greater than the charges now paid for transportation of the mail by the railroads. In fact records of several newspapers show that motor truck deliveries to distant points are being made cheaper than the same delivery can be made by express or at mail rates.

"Then there are the numerous experiments of operation by railroads of motor or gasoline car trains which point to a new and more frequent service on branch line roads. If such one car train service is extended on more railroads more frequent mail service will invite a larger volume of business by mail users who are now employing other means of transportation of mail or who are not using the mails to the greatest possibilities because of the character of service rendered.

"If the Post Office Department should request a faster service at more frequent intervals along railroad lines of the country to give the people of the rural communities the mail service they are entitled to there is no question the railroads would quickly respond. Improved service and reduced rates would result in a greatly increased revenue.

"Suggestions have been made that a committee representing all phases of the question be ordered to investigate the Post Office Department with a view to bringing about corrections for the improvement of the mail delivery service. There is no need for outsiders to go into the Post Office Department any more than for an outsider to go into a private business. The department with its knowledge of conditions, and with the co-operation of the railroads and other shippers heartily offer should be able to provide a modern, efficient mail service and thus meet the demands of the people."

The members were guests of the Department of Journalism, following luncheon at the Faculty Club. President Hugh Parker presided. Other speakers were Dean Charles L. Raper of the College of Business Administration, Syracuse University, who discussed why journalism was naturally placed as a department of the business college; Prof. Paul D. Kelleter, head of the extension department of the State College of Forestry at Syracuse University, who discussed newspaper co-operation in reforestation, and Lee W. McHenry, editor of the Oneida Democratic Union, who discussed the cost of advertising composition.

Hugh Parker, editor of the Oneida Post, was re-elected president at the annual election. Other officers chosen were: Vice-president, F. Dudley Corse, Sandy Creek News; secretary, Gerrit S. Hyde, Utica Observer-Dispatch; treasurer, B. H. Stone, Camden Advance-Journal.

At the invitation of Prof. J. O. Simmons, head of the department of journalism, members attended the Rutgers-Syracuse lacrosse game following the meeting.

LORENZ CASE UP AGAIN

Illinois Attorney General Wants German Editor to Serve Sentence

Attorney General Oscar Carlstrom of Illinois has applied to the Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus nullifying the order of Circuit Judge Emanuel Elder, Cook county, releasing Arthur Lorenz, editor of a German newspaper, convicted of criminally libeling the American Legion. The court, in releasing Lorenz, explained his action by stating that the court which convicted him had no right to impose both a jail sentence and a fine. Lorenz was sentenced to six months in the house of correction and fined $1, Judge Hugo Pam imposing the sentence. The attorney general presented to the court that proper jurisdiction was had and that Lorenz's only course was an appeal. The appellate and supreme court both had affirmed the decision.

The supreme court order gave Judge Eller five days to show cause why he issued the habeas corpus writ on which Lorenz gained his freedom from the jail sentence. Attorney General Carlstrom has indicated that he would prosecute the case to the court of last appeal.

Urey Woodson

BACK from Florida, where he has been basking in the winter sunshine annually for 40 years, Urey Woodson, veteran editor and publisher of the Owensboro (Ky.) Daily Messenger, finds two well developed booms for him—one for the Democratic nomination for United States senator and the other for the Democratic nomination for governor of Kentucky.

"I think I will hold a primary to decide which race I will make," was the only comment made by Mr. Woodson when informed by friends they were preparing to draft him.

Mr. Woodson has served as a member of the Democratic National Committee from the Bluegrass state for more than 20 years and was unanimously elected to the position at the last Democratic state convention held in Lexington.

The only public office ever held by Mr. Woodson was that of railroad commissioner during Gov. John Young Brown's administration. It is doubtful if he would accept a nomination if tendered to him.

However, he has been instrumental in obtaining scores of offices for his friends in Kentucky.

Mr. Woodson has returned from Florida in better health than he has enjoyed for many years.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Clarence C. Hamlin

CLARENCE C. HAMLIN, publisher of the Colorado Springs (Col.) Gazette and Telegraph, who holds a high place among political leaders of his state, where he is Republican national committeeman, is a veteran of many palitical battles, but finds his greatest thrills in the newspaper battles in which his publications have taken part. An attorney with an extensive practice, he obtained control of the Telegraph in 1916, and immediately put his city editor, T. E. Nowels, in charge of the paper. It prospered and events followed rapidly in its progress. It bought its own plant and building, opening it in 1920, began a Sunday edition a year later and in 1923 bought the Gazette. The two newspapers were consolidated in the Telegraph plant at that time.

"Reader confidence in news, advertising and editorials," is Mr. Hamlin's slogan. While some publishers of combination newspapers that are alone in their fields, have found some difficulty in "walking the tight wire," this has never bothered Mr. Hamlin's newspapers, for there is no balancing act performed by his papers. Immediately after the consolidation Mr. Hamlin obtained the man he considered the leading Democratic writer in the state to handle a daily column on the editorial page, next to the Gazette's own editorials. This Democratic writer is free to express any of his opinions he wishes, in the idea that every phase of controversial subjects can be handled. An extensive department for letters from readers is also used and during campaigns both sides get their innings, as they wish. But the Gazette and Telegraph still expresses its own opinions.

"Tell the facts, print all the news, give your opinions, but do not try to throttle public opinion. Let the people have their say. You generally can depend on them to do the right thing if they are informed about the facts,"—this is Mr. Hamlin's editorial slogan.

Mr. Hamlin is well-known in national Republican circles and since he was 21 has been prominent in politics. He was elected state senator in Wyoming when he reached his majority and served on the committee that revised the laws of that state. He has been a resident of Colorado Springs 30 years.

Mr. Hamlin has extensive gold mine and oil interests.

The Elrod
for Leads, Slugs, Plain Rules

The Elrod brings you all the leads, slugs and plain rules you can use, cut to any size, at very little above the actual cost of the metal.

This system is automatic and requires but little attention. Elrod material is of a high grade and able to stand up under severe stereotyping and press conditions.

All profitless hours and wasted dollars spent in hunting for material are stopped when the Elrod is installed.

That the Ludlow gives maximum production for a minimum of investment is well known by these users.

That the Ludlow quality in typefaces is an acknowledged factor in the development of modern newspaper advertising is attested by advertisers generally. This not only applies to the superior quality of the slugline, but to the careful, painstaking designing as well, of all Ludlow typefaces.

LUDLOW QUALITY COMPOSITION

CARROLL HEADS CURTIS WASHINGTON BUREAU

Paris Correspondent Succeeds Robert Barry at Capital for Public Ledger and N. Y. Evening Post—Sailed This Week

At the end of this month Raymond G. Carroll, who has been head of the Paris bureau, will return to this country and take charge of the Washington bureau of the Curtis-Martin Newspapers, Inc., the New York Evening Post and the Philadelphia Public Ledger, succeeding Robert Barry, who resigned recently to join the New York Evening World.

Mr. Carroll is widely known, and it is "only a reporter, the ordinary garden variety" that he insists upon calling himself. His assignments have taken him all over this country, into Mexico, South America, through the war at the front and to the principal capitals of Europe.

In France, during the World War, he concentrated on personal stories of the boys in the trenches which gave the folks back home an insight into the life, the humors and the tragedies at the front. After the war he covered the Peace Conference.

Born in Buffalo, Carroll's first contact with newspapers was through the ownership of an after-school carrier route. Later he became an office boy with the Buffalo Express, but determined to perfect himself as a writer and took special courses at Hobart College, Syracuse University and Cornell, holding a number of newspaper jobs before he became a reporter on the New York Evening World in 1890.

In 1913 he was appointed staff correspondent of the New York World in Paris. In 1914 he returned to this country and went with the Public Ledger, which had come under Cyrus H. K. Curtis' ownership the year before.

After the Peace Conference he was for a year the London correspondent of the Public Ledger, and later New York correspondent.

In 1924 he went to Paris for his papers.

He sails this week on the "Mauretania," and will arrive in New York about April 24, going immediately to Washington.

Mr. Carroll will be succeeded as Paris correspondent by E. Percy Noel, who has been stationed at Geneva for the Curtis-Martin Newspapers, Inc.

Mr. Noel was born in St. Louis. He worked on newspapers there and in New York and Chicago, founded a weekly aviation publication, and in 1914 went to Europe for the Chicago Daily News with a roving commission which took him all over the Continent. He saw service on the British front in France. He joined the Public Ledger staff in Paris.

Later Noel was transferred to the London bureau and then became head of the Far Eastern bureau in Tokio. For the past six months he has been in Geneva.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Jerome D. Barnum

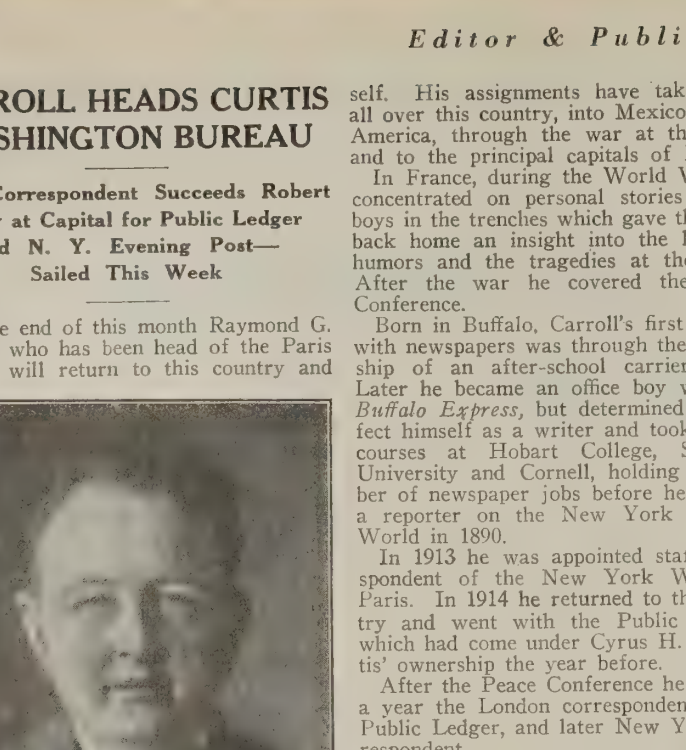
ADVERTISE the dairy cow. Take bossie out of the back lot and tie her to the front page. Paint the Jersey cow on the fence alongside the Durham bull and teach young America to drink before it learns how to smoke.

That, in effect, was what Jerome D. Barnum, publisher of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Post-Standard told 400 dairymen of the five producing organizations of New York state recently assembled in Utica. Mr. Barnum's plea for unity among the warring factions of the dairy interests, sounded the keynote of the meeting which was called to bring about a representative organization of the milk producers. His optimistic word-picture of a national advertising and sales campaign to solve the major problems confronting the New York milk shed was instrumental in bringing together opposing points of view and in furthering plans for a United Dairymen's association.

The Syracuse publisher long has been an ardent worker for organization of the agricultural interests of the country, believing that in co-operation lies the only road that will lead the farmer definitely beyond need for federal or legislative aid.

In his remarks at Utica, Mr. Barnum pointed to the New York state publishers who after years of individualistic competitions and distrusts because of business differences, have been able through organization to overcome seemingly unsurmountable problems to the betterment of the public good and the publishers themselves.

Deploring the note of sympathy that creeps into reports of farm gatherings, Mr. Barnum urged the dairymen to help themselves through popularizing the use of farm products by advertising.



"Follow the example of numerous lines of business that have engaged in advertising campaigns to create new markets and establish satisfactory returns to the producers," he told them.

A national campaign with a slogan of "drink milk," that would reach into every home in the country, Mr. Barnum said, would not only greatly increase milk consumption, but would create a new understanding of the value of the product and assure a permanent price level that would be fair to all.

The money for the campaign, the speaker suggested could be raised by starting with a small group after which other groups would join.

READERS MEET AT "SIGN OF THE SEVEN SEERS"

Unusual Editorial Innovation on Iowa Daily Gives Free Rein to Opinions of Seven Anonymous Citizens Who Write One Column a Week—Publisher Tells How It Works

THE feature which appears daily in column one, page one of the Cedar Rapids (Ia.) Republican under the title of "At the sign of the seven seers" was the outgrowth of a desire on my part to get away from beaten paths and establish a bit of variety in so important a spot on the front page.

The trail blazed by Arthur Brisbane in establishing crisp current comment in so important a position was a good one, but it has seemed to me that imitation of his style has become so universal—the idea has become commonplace.

Heading for "Seers" column

In this age of joy riding, sex appeal movies and jazz in general, newspaper readers are not concerning themselves in any great numbers with the mature reflections which characterized the editorial page of a generation ago.

The introduction into the newspaper world of Arthur Brisbane's crisp front page comment sounded the death-knell of the old order.

My innovation is simply an off-shoot of the Brisbane idea based upon the belief that with the passing of the personal era in journalism, more and more it is becoming necessary for the modern newspaper to share its creation with its readers.

The style of the cut which heads the column is in itself somewhat unusual in such a position. Such a sign is largely used in his business by a friend of mine, who conducts a cafe which has become known all over the country for the quality of its food. The quaintness of the sign has always had an appeal to me. "The seven seers" of course are represented by individuals each of whom has a day allotted to him each week for his column. Although it has been in operation less than a year the amount of speculation and comment which it has aroused fully justified its establishment.

Perhaps such a column is particularly apropos to a small town of 50,000 like Cedar Rapids, Ia., where neighborliness and acquaintanceship are far-reaching enough so that the readers may at once asume that they probably know all of the contributors either personally or by reputation.

Each of the seven were personally selected by me and their identity is known only to the managing editor and myself. They do not know even each other. Their contributions come to my desk sealed and written under their nom-de-plumes. The initial presentation of the column was preceded by no announcement. It simply replaced the old "Today's Topics" column which previously was written by myself and another member of the staff. The change was naturally confusing to the readers at first, but they soon caught the spirit, and the element of mystery surounding the identity of the seers supplied plenty of speculation. The selection of the seven men successful in their respective callings, was based also upon my personal knowledge of the natural writing ability of each.

Facts and revelations presented with that freedom which a big business man would use over a nom-de-plume early established in the minds of the readers, the realization that the writers knew what they were talking about.

By JAMES S. FARQUHAR

(Publisher Cedar Rapids (Ia.) Republican)

Say what you will, a professional newspaper writer of editorial comment in due course of time involuntarily tends to hedge his thoughts with certain reservations which inhibit free expression of honest opinion.

Not so with the business man on the outside, untrammelled by newspaper customs or ethics, given the opportunity freely and unreservedly once a week to express himself in the best spot in his own newspaper. He gives the best of his thoughts. The reader knows it is not the newspaper but simply another citizen like himself talking to him. This is borne out by the many letters which come to the newspaper replying to comments made by the seers, and which are freely given space in the open forum column on the editorial page.

I have never seen a more frank and clean cut discussion of the prohibition question than has appeared in the seven seers column. The replies have all been given space.

By virtue of their style of writing, and the topics they discuss, I should say that our reading public probably know who three of the seven seers are. Two or three of the seers very quickly and very definitely stepped to the front of the others in popularity.

"Young Titmarsh" is perhaps the foremost artist in Iowa. His paintings have won for him widespread recognition in the middle west. Before sailing to Spain for a sketching trip last month, he conducted a crusade through the column for beautifying the river front and removing objectionable signs, which not only created wide discussion but resulted in a marked improvement in the river front situation. The campaign was augmented through the newspaper columns with pictures and many letters from river front advertisers. He explains his nom-de-plume as having been given to him by a group of English people in an Italian hotel who dubbed him Young Titmarsh because of his likeness to Thackeray's character of that name.

"Jareb" selected his nom-de-plume for no more important reason than that the five letters represent the first letters of the names of his five children. Now a well-known business man who was for many years an editorial writer, he is particularly well versed on economic questions. He is a student of politics with strong Republican inclinations.

"Nasr-Ed-Din" is at the head of a well-known and successful real estate business. He is a graduate of Yale. He has marked talent along artistic lines and is always in the forefront of civic enterprise. He utilized the column to marked advantage last month in the exposition and defense of an extensive annexation project which carried by a large majority. His nom-de-plume is that of a famous philosopher, teacher and savant whom he has always admired.

"Monseer," who has taken the place of Young Titmarsh, is a college professor, formerly a minister, of particularly keen mind and with a penchant for sparkling criticism.

"Shag Bark" is one of Iowa's best known poets and short story writers. While he has earned a high place in the middle west as a short story writer, it is his books of homespun verse that have given him his real place in literature. His contribution to the column appears every Sunday morning, and is a mixture of rural philosophy and bits of verse depicting characters familiar to everyone who has ever lived on a farm or in a country town. His kindly, homely treatment of country folks has met with a very warm reception by our rural readers.

James S. Farquhar

"Veritas" is the head of an advertising agency and he is a distinct modernist in his opinions. A foe to sham and pretense as well as a graceful writer, his darts never fail to find their marks.

"A seventh son" is the head of the second largest cereal mill in the world. A Southerner by birth with strong Democratic leanings, he has had many years experience in state and national politics while a resident of the South. He possesses a rare wealth of political and historical lore. His mother was an opera singer. His father was an artist who painted one of General Robert E. Lee's best known portraits. With so artistic an inheritance, the column provides in his life an avenue of expression which, he says, he does not find in the business of taking the overalls off of oats.

To show the freedom with which the columnists write I might quote the first line of a column appearing recently which said:

"Congressman Cole needs to come down to earth."

Congressman Cyrenus Cole is the representative of this district and was a distinguished editor for many years of this newspaper. Our newspaper staff for sentimental reasons alone would have hesitated to have so frankly and directly criticised our former associate under the seven seers. However, neither Mr. Cole nor our reading public, who so much admire him, resent the honest opinion of an unpaid contributor, not connected with the newspaper.

Recently a minister wrote in to say he was "grieved with the tone of many recent editorials and articles" in the seven seers column.

"The only complaint I am finding is with reference to a very noticeable low grade moral fibre," he said.

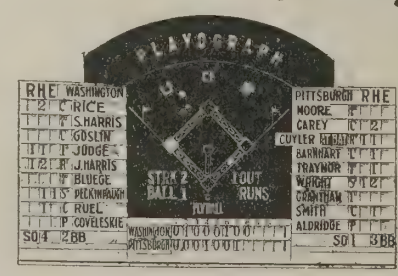
"Monseer," the former minister, among the seven seers answered this communication straight from the shoulder, saying:

"The 'seven seers' idea represents an innovation in newspaperdom. It is a clean break with the idea of standardization which has crushed the life out of many a newspaper; a desire to permit public opinion to have free play in the columns of a modern paper. As for the seers themselves, they are simply seven men, successful in their respective callings, and educated students of life. Their purpose is to reflect the viewpoint of the layman who reads the paper.

"Obviously this is not a propaganda column. If one of the seven happens to be opposed to the present operation of 'prohibition,' that cannot be charged to deliberate intention. This may 'grieve' our divine critic, but it should serve to warn him that society rather than this column should be the object of his reforming zeal.

"We who write the column know that many of our readers agree with us, even though we make no demands for such agreement. If any wish to disagree, that is their right. If we are wrong, we shall gladly and quickly make amends. But let our critics come at us with facts and logic, not with idealistic mudballs or vapid generalities about moral tone. And let them remember that this is a column of comment, not the editorial opinions of the paper. All we ask is the right of free speech, and the exercise of fair play.

"MONSEER."



Mr. Farquhar, publisher of the Cedar Rapids Republican, is 36 years old, a native Iowan, born at Ida Grove, March 12, 1890. He was reared at Marengo. Completing his education at the University of Chicago, he became a reporter on the Chicago Examiner, where he gained his first newspaper experience. Associated for eight years with the Chicago Record Herald and the Chicago Herald, under H. H. Kohlsaat, J. S. Seymour, and James Keeley, he became classified advertising manager of the Chicago Herald, a post which he later held on the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Mr. Farquhar publishes six other Iowa newspapers in addition to the Republican, the Williamsburg Journal-Tribune, Iowa City Republican, Marengo Republican, Blairstown Press, Dewitt Observer, and Ladora News.

He was married to Miss Irene Lockwood of Chicago in 1912 and has three sons, George, Jim, and Bill.

QUEENSBORO'S GREAT HOME NEWSPAPER

DAILY ★ STAR

ONLY A.B.C. NEWSPAPER IN QUEENS

STAR SQUARE LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y. TELEPHONE ASTORIA 1900

March 9, 1926.

R. Hoe & Co.,
504 Grand Street, New York.

Gentlemen:

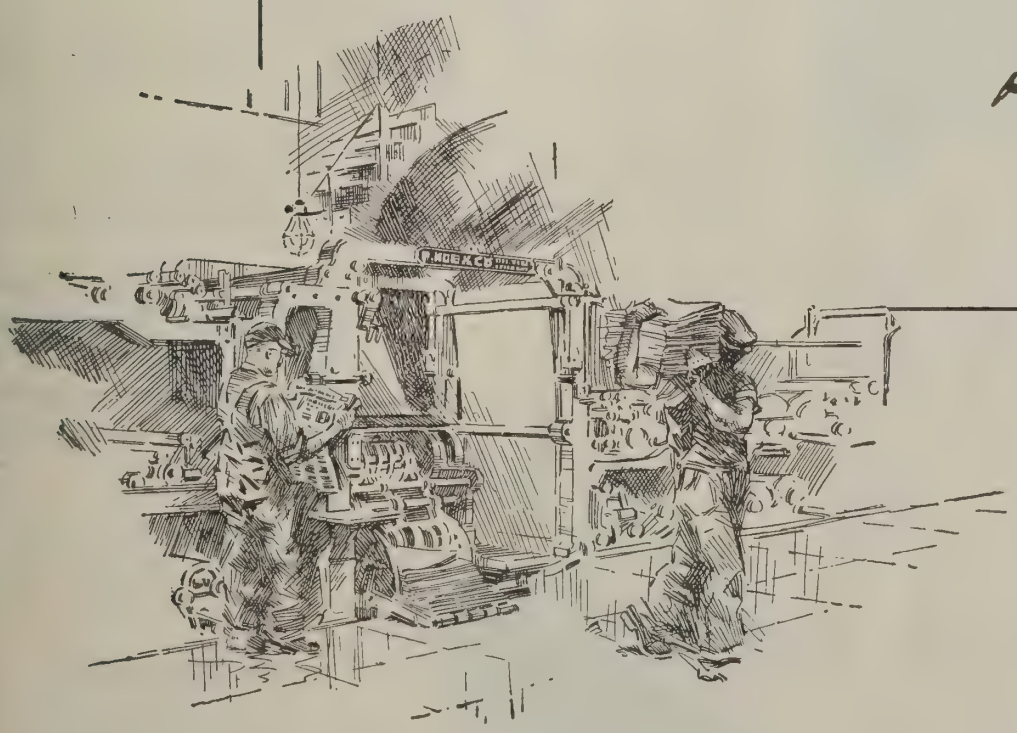
We are celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of The Daily Star this month, which is also the sixth anniversary of the installation of our Hoe Simplex Quad. So well pleased are we with what this press has done in these six years that I am taking the liberty to tell you how splendidly it has met our expanding requirements.

In 1920 The Star was printing about 13,000 eight-page papers daily. Today our average press run is over 26,000 with the size of the paper averaging nearly fifteen pages. Thus our product has just about doubled in both number of impressions and size of paper in six years.

Only a press capable of standing the strain of sustained maximum speed could satisfactorily meet this growth in circulation and quantity of product. And as to quality of product, I am willing to put The Star alongside of any paper printed in the country--especially any newspaper in The Star's circulation class.

We regularly run this press at a speed which would be unsafe for an ordinary press, but even when we are doing over 34,000 an hour there is practically no vibration of the frame, so sturdily is the machine built and so well is it balanced.

The Simplex certainly delivers the goods.



The Star Building, at Star Square, is not far from your office in Manhattan, so whenever you have a customer who wants to see what a Simplex will do under pressure, bring him over here.

Visitors are always welcome at our recently remodelled and enlarged plant, which, we have been informed by people who have seen many other plants, is the best equipped--for its size--in this part of the country.

Very truly yours,

LeRoy L. Smith

Publisher

R. Hoe & Co., Inc., heartily endorses Mr. Smith's invitation to Publishers who may wish to see the Simplex Press in operation during the Convention. The DAILY STAR plant in Long Island City is only 15 minutes from 34th Street on the B. M. T. Subway.

San Luis Obispo (Cal.) Daily Telegram Purchased from Easton and Hoyt at Price Near $200,000

The San Luis Obispo (Cal.) Daily Telegram and Morning Tribune-Herald, the only newspapers published in San Luis Obispo, were sold this week by J. A. Easton, publisher, and R. C. Hoyt, manufacturer of Oakland, to the Pacific Coast group of Scripps newspapers, represented by Mrs. James G. Scripps, B. H. Canfield and J. W. Curts, at a price said to be in the neighborhood of $200,000. E. C. Rogers, formerly of Burlingame, Cal., and prior to that located in Provo, Utah, also became a minority stockholder and will take charge of the property as general manager. It is understood there will be no change in the rest of the organization

B. H. Canfield

James A. Easton

This sale is the outgrowth of a reorganization and consolidation program conceived and executed by J. A. Easton, formerly New York state publisher, and prior to that for many years an executive of the Hearst organization.

When the program was initiated there were three daily and two semi-weeklies in San Luis Obispo. Easton and Hoyt purchased all the papers and consolidated them in October, 1925, representing a total investment slightly in excess of $100,000.

The Scripps organization plans further improvements in the newspapers, which incidentally are located in the home county of William R. Hearst, his great ranch, consisting of many hundreds of thousands of acres, being located in San Luis Obispo county, where he has already spent approximately $9,000,000 on buildings and improvements.

Easton has announced no future plans but is taking a cottage for the summer at Carmel, on the Monterey Peninsula.

GERMANY COVERS GENEVA

56 Writers Sent to Report Recent League of Nations Session

Fifty-six German journalists were sent to Geneva to report the recent Assembly of the League of Nations when the question of the admission of Germany came up for discussion and ended by being postponed until the September meeting.

They were all examples of German thoroughness, and could, with few exceptions, speak at least two languages beside their own. Every morning they were received first by the members of the German delegation, and if afterwards during the day they were asked their views on the situation generally they all had the same replies ready, surprisingly alike. All were most affable, and all keen on the jump to get the news away, fast on the telegraph and the telephone.

The Berliner Tageblatt had three correspondents at Geneva reporting the Assembly, the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung two, and Wolff Bureau two. There were two German women journalists present, one representing Der Gemeinnützige, and the other the Frankfurter Volksstimme.

The number of German journalists was greater than that of any other country represented.

William J. Pape

"BILL" PAPE, publisher of the Waterbury (Conn.) Republican-American is a hiker. Keeping in motion by the use of a sturdy pair of legs is his favorite pastime. He doesn't know how much they have increased trolley fares or how many miles an automobile speedometer would register in the long distance between his home and the plant of the Republican-American, for he always swings between these two places on foot.

And winter or summer, when he wants a good time, he loads his back with a heavy pack and hits out for the trails of the White Mountains or the Green mountains, spending days climbing.

The picture herewith was taken in the middle of last May at a high point on the Munro Skyline trail of the Green Mountains of Vermont. Spring was in the valleys, but winter clung to the places that Pape chose for hiking.

He dropped down from the trail while on this hike to make a call on the late Col. John Coolidge, the President's father, at his home in Plymouth.

HARRY HANSEN JOINS N. Y. WORLD STAFF

Chicago Daily News Literary Editor Taking Similar Post in New York, May 1—Preston Succeeds Him in Chicago

Harry Hansen, for many years a staff writer and foreign correspondent for the Chicago Daily News, and for the last six years literary editor, has resigned, effective May 1, to become literary editor of the New York World.

Keith Preston, now conducting the "Hit or Miss" column of the News and the "Periscope" column in the weekly literary section, will succeed Mr. Hansen, according to present plans, without relinquishing the column conducting.

Hansen was born in Davenport, Ia., in 1884 and received his Ph. B. degree from the University of Chicago in 1909, entering newspaper work in Chicago in that year. He became Berlin correspondent of the News in 1914, reaching the Belgian border two days before war was declared. He continued with the Belgian army until the retreat to Antwerp. He then went with the Germany army, remaining with them until the Battle of the Marne. In 1915, he was News correspondent in Italy and Austria-Hungary, the following year in the Scandinavian countries and the Baltic zone.

He was again sent abroad for the News in 1918-19, covering the Paris peace conference. In 1920 became literary editor of the News and in 1923, he became book critic for Harper's Magazine.

Hansen is the author of "A Peace Conference of Intrigue" (Vienna 1915), "Adventures of the Fourteen Points," and "Midwest Portraits."

Preston, who succeeds Hansen, took his bachelor's degree at Northwestern University, his M. A. and Ph. D. at the University of Chicago. Before coming to the News, he was a member of the faculty of the University of Chicago, of Indiana State and Northwestern Universities. He is the author of a number of monographs on Latin and Greek and has published several volumes of light verse.

GROUP BUYING INCREASES

Arthur Thompson, H. D. Roosen Company, Reports on Co-operative Idea

Co-operative buying by small newspaper publishers throughout the country is rapidly increasing, according to Arthur Thompson, sales manager of the H. D. Roosen Company, ink manufacturers, who returned to New York last week from a trip to the Pacific Coast.

"Publishers are learning they can save at least 10 per cent on purchases of ink, paper and metal if they form special groups among themselves for co-operative buying," he said.

"When newspapers unite in sending in orders for supplies, the cost of freight handling is lowered, and better service results all around."

The co-operative movement is particularly active in the south and southwest, Mr. Thompson said.

NEWARK A. M. LEDGER CHANGED TO TABLOID

Daily Appepars in Abbreviated Size With Six Columns — Masters Formerly of Daily News Is M. E.

The Newark (N. J.) Morning Ledger appeared April 16 as a six-column tabloid paper, with page 1 devoted solely to pictures. Pages two and three carried Associated Press dispatches and local news.

New equipment has been purchased for installation in the paper's new building on Bank street, which will be ready for occupancy within a few weeks, it was stated by L. T. Russell, publisher of the Ledger since its establishment in 1916.

W. J. Masters, former city editor of the New York Daily News, has been appointed managing editor. Jack McCollough and Hal Stone have been placed on the city desk and Stanley Worrus is in charge of the Sunday feature department, assisted by Julia Blanchard and Robert J. Campbell. The camera staff has been doubled, it is stated.

The Sunday issue will be composed of five sections totalling 100 pages, four 24-page tabloid sections and four pages of regular size colored comics.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM
Philip L. Jackson

THROUGH the charm of its mountains and seashore, the Oregon country is fast growing in importance as a summer playground.

"Why not a winter playground?" asks Philip L. Jackson, of Portland, Ore., president of the Oregon Journal, who with Mrs. Jackson returned to New York recently after a three months' tour of Europe. The manifold thrills of the winter sports in the Swiss Alps which Mr. and Mrs. Jackson enjoyed suggest the possibilities of winter activities in the Mount Hood region adjacent to Portland, where a new Cloud Cap Inn at an elevation of 6000 feet is to be built this summer.

"The United States Forest Service is completing a road from the main highway to Cloud Cap at a cost of $200,000," said Mr. Jackson. "For years this region has been a rendezvous for a few ardent enthusiasts who were willing to hazard the ardors of a mid-winter journey to this mountain haven."

A new inn and the new road which can be made accessible during the winter season, Mr. Jackson pointed out, will enable the same winter sports that have made the Swiss Alps world famous available on the slopes of Oregon's premier peak.

What Price Advertising Glory

CAN WE HOLD DOWN 1926 ADVERTISING VOLUME?

A Letter to Our National Representatives from the Publisher

Messrs. Story, Brooks & Finley,
New York, Philadelphia, Chicago.

Gentlemen:

Thanks for your congratulations on the Camden Courier's 12,000,000 lines total for 1925,—

—and I'm sure you mean it kindly when you predict that, at the rate we're going, the Courier will pass the 20,000,000 mark in 1926.

But are you wishing us well?

Should a six-day evening paper carry more than 20,000,000 lines a year?

I have grave doubts whether development of a better newspaper lies along those lines,—and that is the Courier's goal,—a better newspaper, qualitative rather than quantitative success.

Figure it out for yourself. A six-day evening newspaper publishes 311 issues a year. If it limits its size to 48 pages, it will average 40 pages per day, or 12,440 pages per year. Not more than two-thirds of its space can be advertising,—that is less than 20,000,000 lines,—19,940,000 to be exact.

Should a weekday evening paper run larger than 48 pages?

I don't think so. It becomes a nuisance to many readers who hesitate to "wade through" so many pages. It strains reader attention as well as editorial ingenuity to scatter news and features among so many pages, crowded with advertising. The reasonable limit of evening newspaper size is 48 pages.

If the Courier is headed towards a 24,000,000 line total in 1926, it is time that we change our advertising policy.

If newspaper making is a profession it is about time that it emerges from the "so big" infant stage.

How about the other professions?

Imagine your doctor sending you an announcement that he had written 11,234 prescriptions for 4,389 patients during 1925, an increase of 42% over the pre-prohibition period.

Or your minister taking a page in the church bulletin to impress you with "Souls saved during 1925, 2,859, an increase of 22% over 1924."

We expect every other trade and profession to limit itself to what it can do well. The Courier cannot carry more than 20,000,000 lines of advertising in any one year if it is to give service to its advertisers and satisfaction to its readers.

I look forward to the millennium when The Camden Courier can pick its advertising as it picks news. The advertising manager will become the advertising editor. He'll turn to his copy desk:—

"Have you a neat lightface ad with a tasty line cut to fill this hole on the woman's page? Send this ad back to the agency to be rewritten. Tell them I don't like so many superlatives. That's not Courier style."

While we're working towards the millenium LET'S ADOPT A FEW SIMPLE RULES SO THAT WE WON'T RUN TOO MUCH ADVERTISING IN 1926. Not more than two pages to any advertiser on any one day. No copy set to imitate reading matter. No copy which appeals to the gullibility rather than to the intelligence of our readers, etc.

Let's see how good a newspaper, instead of how big a newspaper, we can publish in 1926.

Of course, I'm glad we carried 12,000,000 lines during 1925,—and I appreciate the big part your splendid organization played in attaining that total. But I'd rather have you impressed with the unusually able staff of newspaper men we have been gathering and their news and editorial service to all South Jersey. I would like you to notice that, editorially, we have continued to stand foursquare against bigotry and intolerance. I am happier that we have been swamped by letters to the editor than by advertising orders.

If I'm taking the enthusiasm out of your organization by telling you that the CAMDEN COURIER DOES NOT WANT TOO MUCH ADVERTISING IN 1926, there's still room for growth on the Morning Post, only three months old, but showing surprising promise for a youngster. Yours sincerely,

COURIER-POST COMPANY,
J. David Stern, Editor and Publisher.

POWERFUL CANADIAN GROUPS ASKING A TARIFF ON AMERICAN MAGAZINES

10 Cents a Pound Levy on "Overflow" Circulation of U. S. Periodicals Being Urged as Aid to Local Business and Publishing

By A CANADIAN

AMERICAN advertisers who figure on covering the Canadian market by means of the "overflow" circulation of United States magazines in Canada will perhaps find it necessary to re-cast their plans in the future, for it is not outside the bounds of possibility that the Canadian government, yielding to the pressure of Canadian magazine men, will put an import duty of 10 cents per pound upon imported periodicals. If they do so, the Canadian magazine purchaser will no doubt have to absorb the duty; and in the experience of the Saturday Evening Post, in raising its Canadian street-price to 10 cents, was that a loss of circulation was immediately felt, until subsequently the price was again reduced to 5 cents.

So much pressure has been brought to bear upon the Canadian Government, by patriotic societies, business men's organizations and publishers, to impose this tariff that it may perhaps be of interest to the American publisher to realize the motives behind the agitation. First of all, a few statistics of the "overflow" will illustrate the reason for the demand.

More than 40,000,000 American magazines enter Canada each year, free of duty. For every copy of a magazine printed and produced in Canada, eight American magazines circulate. The value of the foreign magazines and newspapers imported into Canada for the fiscal year 1924-5 was $2,775,885. Twenty-five American magazines circulate about half this number.

The largest Canadian magazine has a circulation of only—according to the A. B. C. figures—80,426 per issue.

Please do not mix "tariff" with exclusion. Two United States publications, Liberty and the New York Daily Mirror, were recently banned by the Canadian Customs Department, but these were upon grounds of alleged indecency. The ban on Liberty was subsequently lifted. The Canadian admires the American magazine, both for its wonderful make-up and for its exceedingly good value. None of his native publications can match either of those characteristics. What he objects to, primarily, is that they pay no duty.

The Canadian publisher, if he imports any of the raw materials which enter into the manufacture of a magazine, pays the full tariff. Paper, ink, machinery—everything is assessed; but the same paper, when covered with the same ink, provided it is classed as a "magazine" and not as "advertising" or "printed" matter, pays nothing. If it did, according to the above calculations, the Canadian Government would be the richer each year from a 10 cents per pound tariff of about $2,500,000. Under present conditions, a Canadian publisher could print his periodical in Buffalo or Detroit, and ship it into Canada, cheaper than he could print in Toronto or Montreal.

No one—please remember that I am writing as a Canadian—will contend that this is good for the Canadian magazine business. It tends, on the contrary, to suffocate it. The potential magazine market in Canada is so small yet, because of the difference in population, that the Canadian publisher with a total circulation of less than the overflow circulation must pay the first production costs with overflow circulation escapes.

The Canadian manufacturer is behind the agitation because he contends that the home industry cannot compete with the volume of advertising contained in the United States magazines. The United States sells a tremendous quantity of manufactured commodities to Canada, whereas Canada sells practically nothing to the United States except raw material. At the annual meeting of the Ontario Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade, at Kingston, Ont., a few weeks ago, the following resolution was passed:

"Whereas the advertising in American magazines creates a large Canadian demand for a variety of American-made goods; and whereas there is a duty of 15 cents per pound on all advertising matter coming into Canada from the United States; and whereas some American magazines are largely advertising matter, but, as magazines, enter this country free of duty; Resolved that the Ontario Associated Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce urge that the Dominion Government consider this situation and the advisability of a duty on magazines in proportion to the amount of advertising contained therein."

In moving this resolution, Mr. Newman, Chairman of the Picton, (Ont.) Board of Trade said:

"I might mention the County of Prince Edward is putting out about one-half of the canned vegetables manufactured in the Dominion of Canada. The County of Prince Edward puts out the best tomato in the world. Yet we are using 10 or 20 times the amount of American-made Campbell's tomato soup, which our country is so famous for producing. The Canadian canners put up a tomato soup the equal of any other, but the American soup is purchased because of the large full-page color advertisements in the American magazines."

Somewhat similar resolutions have been adopted by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Association of Canadian Clubs, the National Council of Women, and other organizations.

The Canadian advertising agency, as one would expect, is in accord with the agitation for a tariff. A tariff would possibly mean the development of new accounts, or the enlargement of old ones; but in one direction there would, it is alleged, be quicker results. A large number of United States manufacturers now have branch factories in Canada, but in a great many cases the advertising is independent. It is handled, in some cases, from headquarters, generally placed by an American agency; but in many more there is no Canadian advertising. When Canadian circulation is obtainable by overflow circulation—when, for example, a single line at the foot of a full page to the effect that the article is manufactured in Canada, by Such-and-Such Subsidiary Company, Ltd., draws the attention to Canadian distribution—why, argues the manufacturer, should I advertise in Canada at all? It is said that about $500,000 is charged each year by American advertisers against Canadian branches to cover Canadian advertising, not a cent of which is spent in Canada.

Because advertising matter entering Canada from the United States pays a duty of 15 cents a pound, the demand for duty (as suggested by the resolution quoted above) was at first made upon the same basis. But to assess such a tax against the advertising section of a magazine would be difficult, and hence the request is now for a flat 10 cents per pound upon the entire magazine.

The Montreal Publicity Association has just passed a resolution appointing a special committee to investigate the effects of the American magazine upon the national and economic life of Canada. A few days ago a delegation from the Magazine Publishers Association of Canada interviewed Premier King, at Ottawa, and laid before him their demand for the imposition of this tariff. It is said that both the party in power and the party in opposition are for once united in opinion upon this matter

Paul Patterson

IF you ask Paul Patterson, the president of the A. S. Abell Company, what the chief distinguishing characteristics of the papers he directs are he will probably answer:

"The fact that they are not standardized newspapers; the fact that they have individuality."

He will not discuss details, but those who are familiar with what has been done since he has been the president of the company know that there are details.

They concern the Evening Sun, just 16 years old, the Sun and the Sunday Sun, much older. All have developed special services and features which make that individuality to which Mr. Patterson refers.

Here are some of them: the daily articles on politics, public affairs and Washington statecraft by Frank R. Kent published in the Sun; daily articles by Henry M. Hyde published in the Evening Sun; the "Good Morning" column by Folger McKinsey daily in the Sun; the "Good Evening" column published daily in the Evening Sun and written by Clark S. Hobbs; the foreign service acquired through arrangement with the Manchester (Eng.) Guardian and through special correspondents; special features of the Sunday Sun.

Efforts have been made to persuade the A. S. Abell Company to distribute its features through syndicates. They have insisted on keeping them for the entertainment of the readers of the Sunpapers exclusively.

"Fight standardization" is almost a creed with the A. A. Abell Company.

84 PAGES ON WEEK DAY

St. Louis Post-Dispatch Claims Record Edition on April 9

A claim for a new high world's record for a regular week-day issue of a newspaper was made April 9 by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, which published that day a paper totaling 84 pages in eight sections, and selling at the usual 2-cent price. George M. Burbach is advertising manager.

Heavy retail advertising was the reason for the unusual size, Mr. Burbach said. One department store took 16 pages. The total amount of paid advertising was 542 columns.

The Post-Dispatch's previous record was 76 pages last Oct. 23.

Big Timber Deal On

A Canadian Press dispatch from St. John, N. B., couples the name of the International Paper Company with negotiations for the purchase of the New Brunswick Railway Company's lands, covering 1,650,000 acres in Victoria and Madawaska Counties and comprising the most valuable block of freehold land in Eastern Canada. A price in the vicinity of $10,000,000 is named.

Cobb, Boise Statesman, Hasn't Printed Free Publicity for 10 Years

Calvin Cobb, publisher of the Boise (Idaho) Statesman, laughs at those papers still bothered by free space grabbers. He has won his fight against press agents, he said this week in an interview in New York, where he is visiting.

"We started our fight against free publicity more than 10 years ago," he said. "We haven't printed any free publicity since.

"For awhile, local automobile dealers boycotted the Statesman. We never referred to their action, however; never responded to it, or retaliated in any way.

"Now we get more paid automobile advertising than many papers giving away whole pages free with contracts.

"A publisher doesn't demand his accessories free when he buys an automobile. Why should he give away free space whenever he sells an automobile firm an advertisement? It all sounds like a joke to me."

James H. Skewes

THE fact that the term of James H. Skewes, publisher of the Meridian (Miss.) Star and the Laurel Leader, as president of the Meridian Chamber of Commerce had expired, did not prevent the new directors from continuing the administration of the Meridianite who did so much for the community as head of the central civic organization. The loophole to keep him in office was found in the requirement that officers must serve until their successors are installed.

The pleasing light gray color of concrete pavement will dress up your street

Famous Streets in Los Angeles Carry Flood of Traffic

Los Angeles has more concrete streets than any other city in the country—a total of over 220 miles.

All of these streets are carrying a steadily increasing volume of traffic, and are doing so with very little maintenance.

Some of them are famous thoroughfares representing the most advanced type of paving construction.

They include Vine Street, "The Highway of the Movie Stars;" Franklin Avenue, one of Hollywood's fine residential streets; Cahuenga Avenue, the main artery leading into Los Angeles from the San Fernando Valley; and Hill Street from Washington to Santa Barbara Avenue.

Los Angeles is building more concrete streets every year. The latest of these is Pico Boulevard. This, when completed, will be from 34 to 68 feet wide throughout its entire length of seven miles.

It will pay other cities and towns to make a careful study of Los Angeles' advanced practice in permanent street paving.

Property owners and local authorities are invited to write to this office for the facts. Also ask for your copy of our free booklet on "Concrete Streets."

ADVERTISING AGENCY AFFAIRS

Columbus Agency Consolidates—Goldsmith Joins Frank Kiernan Company—Campbell-Ewald Promotes Hollinshead—New Firm in Portland, Ore.—Transfer in St. Louis

ADVERTISING agencies operated by Herbert Byer and Gus K. Bowman in Columbus, O., have been merged as Byer & Bowman, with new offices in the Continental Building.

Edward J. Pace, graduate of the Pratt Institute, New York, and formerly of the Penton Publishing Company, Cleveland, has been named art director. Joel M. Burghalter, former Youngstown newspaper man has joined the firm as account executive.

Harold S. Goldsmith, at one time head of his own agency in New York, has joined the staff of the Frank Kiernan Advertising Agency, New York, as account executive on copy and plans.

Campbell-Ewald Company, Detroit, has appointed Melvin A. Hollinshead as manager of the agency's retail department. He has been in the advertising business 14 years. Before joining Campbell-Ewald four years ago, he was advertising manager of the Saxon Motor Car Company and the Studebaker Corporation of America.

The Jones Advertising Service is the latest addition to the Portland, Ore., advertising agencies. It is conducted by J. H. Jones who for the past 15 years has been advertising manager of the Olds, Wortman & King department store, Portland.

Robert G. Yost has purchased the interest of Lynn Gratiot in Yost, Gratiot & Co., St. Louis advertising agency. There will be no change in the name or policy of the business which was organized in 1922.

S. J. Schwinn, formerly with the Ralph H. Jones and John Powers advertising agencies, New York, has joined the general advertising staff of Doremus & Co., the same city.

Miss H. O. Wallace, until recently with the art department of Whitehead & Hoag Company, Newark, N. J., has joined the art department of the Robert E. Ramsay Organization, Inc., New York.

H. K. McCann, president of the H. K. McCann Company, left New York this week on a business trip to the Pacific Coast. He will visit company branches in San Francisco and Los Angeles.

William H. Rankin, head of the William H. Rankin Company, New York, speaking over the radio at Miami last week for the Miami Chamber of Commerce, advocated a $2,000,000 advertising campaign for southeastern Florida. The appropriation, he said, should be spent in newspapers exclusively over a 12 months' period.

Paul H. Hartley has joined the staff of the George Batten Company, Inc., New York. Formerly he was with N. W. Ayer & Son.

The New York Advertising Agency announces the election of Albert Seiffer as vice-president. He was formerly with the Charles C. Green Advertising Agency.

Malacky Murray, for the last five years with Thomas F. Logan, Inc., has joined the New York office of Erwin, Wasey & Co. At one time he was with the New York Times.

W. C. Davis, formerly of the Los Angeles Express, is manager of a new advertising business in Los Angeles, Sales by Advertising, Inc.

The New York Advertising Agencies' Baseball League will open its season April 17. On the first day Joseph Richards Company, Inc., plays, Barton, Durstine & Osborne; Calkins & Holden plays J. Walter Thompson Company, Inc.; Ruthrauff & Ryan, Inc., plays Frank Seaman, Inc.; and the H. K. McCann Company plays the Federal Advertising Agency, Inc.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Frank P. MacLennan

A FEW years ago Topeka, the capital city of Kansas, felt its clothes getting tight.

The city was growing and it needed more room, a better sky line, additional attractions.

The newspapers talked about it; the Chamber of Commerce passed resolutions; civic clubs held luncheons and sang about it; but no one seemed disposed to do anything.

Frank P. MacLennan, editor and publisher of the State Journal, decided that the best editorial is one based on facts. So he built a beautiful building on the city's busiest corner—a building of unusual and attractive architecture, yet one that could be used only for his newspaper plant. It was a new motif in the city's lanes of cold business fronts.

The city was given an opportunity to become the home of a nationally known organization which held out a program of an expenditure of several millions for the housing of its membership. Mr. MacLennan turned over his beautiful country home overlooking the magnificent Kaw valley—and the institution was landed.

The capital city needed a new modern fireproof hotel. Mr. MacLennan raised the money and built it—the finest hotel in Kansas. It has become the headquarters for all state meetings and is known as the "Whispering Post" of Kansas politics.

The city needed a modern hospital. Mr. MacLennan was appointed on a hospital board and the structure is under construction.

Since that time Topeka's business district has been beautified with several majestic buildings—buildings of classic architecture, far removed from the stereotyped arts. Another hotel has been built and the third is under construction. Another hospital unit has been completed. Downtown, in the residence districts, in the suburbs—everywhere there is evidence of that new spirit.

The Kansas capital has become a regenerated city in this short period. It needed not only the newspaper support but the leadership of a newspaper publisher who backed up his editorial page with actual activity.

THE SECOND-GREATEST EVENT IN THE HISTORY OF PRINTING

In all the history of printing two events stand forth of supreme importance.

The first was the invention of movable types, presumably about 1450; the second event occurred on July 3, 1886; the place was the Tribune Building, Park Row, New York.

Since the time of Gutenberg, more than four hundred years before, there had been only minor improvements in the original method of setting type. The need of some speedier substitute for the hand of the compositor was generally recognized and scores of inventive minds had devoted themselves to the problem. Millions of dollars and years of endeavor had been expended without result.

A small group of men had been diligently experimenting for years upon the problem of mechanical composition of type. They employed Ottmar Mergenthaler, then a workman in the shops of Hahl & Company, in Baltimore, and backed him unstintingly with their time, their savings and their personal credit. They had persevered in the face of a long succession of disheartening failures; and now came success.

On the 3rd of July, 1886, a machine produced composition on a commercially practical basis for the first time. On that historic occasion a portion of the New York Tribune was actually set on the machine.

But although the Linotype of 1886 was commercially practical, it did not meet all the demands of the publishers, nor satisfy the inventors. The history of the Linotype has been one of continuous development, always trying to meet and anticipate the printer's needs. Every new requirement, mechanical or typographic, of the printing and publishing industry has found the Linotype ready to meet it, because Linotype experiment and research go ceaselessly forward.

From the very first, the men behind the Linotype realized that the future of their business was directly dependent upon the prosperity of the printing and publishing industry. Before the Linotype could bring them any return, it must bring a much greater return to the printer who used it. From its beginning, the Mergenthaler Linotype Company has weighed with equal care two interests in every transaction, the customer's and its own, because in the final analysis they are one and the same.

The Linotype was the first commercially practical composing-machine. It has held that leadership ever since.

1000 ATTEND COAST DIRECT MAIL MEET

Elaborate Program of Speeches Characterizes Four Day Convention in Los Angeles—Sunkist Advertising Described

The direct mail convention, the first ever held in the West, convened in Los Angeles, April 7 to 10, with approximately 1,000 in attendance.

On the opening day after addresses of welcome, Harry B. Kirtland of Cambridge, Mass., talked on how sales had been created through advertising.

Ray N. Fellows, of Chicago, characterized the wrong sort of advertising as the kind in which the sales talk had been carelessly omitted. Don Francisco of Los Angeles, Edward A. Collins, insurance advertising man of New York, Frank L. Pierce of Detroit and Jean Slum of San Francisco, spoke later.

The second day of the convention, Edward H. Gardner, professor of advertising and selling, University of Wisconsin, pointed out the economic phases of an advertising campaign. He declared that advertising tends to cut down costs and to insure increased production.

W. B. Geissinger, of Los Angeles, related the methods used during the last 5 years for marketing the crop of the California Sunkist oranges and lemons in the nation. He stated that in that period the advertising appropriation had increased from $6,000 to $1,000,000.

Departmentals occupied the afternoon session. Homer J. Buckley, of Chicago, had charge of the retail division, with Harry B. Kirtland, Cambridge, Mass., in charge of the house organ division.

The Financial Advertisers was led by Edward A. Collins of New York and the advertising producers by Joseph Meadon.

Other speakers during the morning were John Howie Wright of New York and Homer J. Buckley, Chicago.

"Inject personality into your correspondence, and write as you talk, urged Frank H. Beckman of San Francisco. Herman A. Nater, Los Angeles banker, explained the uses to which banking institutions put business letters. Methods employed by Canadian firms to get business from the United States through correspondence was related by Percy G. Cherry of Toronto.

E. K. Gaylord

LUCK often figures in big newspaper scoops.

It was largely a case of preparedness and that additional element called luck which enabled E. K. Gaylord, publisher of the Daily Oklahoman and Oklahoma City Times, to scoop the Wichita papers and all of Kansas with the Baltimore fire in February, 1904.

E. K. Gaylord

The Russo-Japanese war came to a head in February, 1904, and after Gaylord established himself in Oklahoma City. The Associated Press had advised all members that those who wished might stay on the wire on Sunday because it was probable that the news of a great naval battle might be transmitted on Sunday time. Gaylord thought the chance was big enough to gamble and so he did the unusual thing on that day of keeping the plant open and ready for big news and an extra. The news of the naval battle did come in with it the first bulletins telling of the disastrous Baltimore fire. Gaylord hit the street with the naval battle and the first intimation of the Baltimore fire, and later on the Baltimore fire had grown to such an extent that the fire story took the play away from the naval battle.

Taking advantage of his opening quickly, Gaylord printed papers for all outgoing trains and his extra on the Daily Oklahoman was circulated in exclusive territory as far away as 500 miles on the following morning. In Wichita, for example, the only news of the Baltimore fire and the Russo-Japanese naval battle on Monday morning was carried in the Daily Oklahoman, which had invaded the field of the Murdocks and Henry Allen.

Gaylord is a close friend of Victor and Marcellus Murdock and Henry Allen today, and seldom do these southwestern publishers get together that Gaylord does not chide them about permitting the Daily Oklahoman to scoop them on the biggest story of the decade in an extra printed 200 miles away.

T. R. WILLIAMS PROMOTED

Named Vice-President and Assistant Publisher of Pittsburgh Dailies

Thomas R. Williams has been elected vice-president of the Newspaper Printing Company, owner and publisher of the Pittsburgh Gazette Times and Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph, with the title of assistant publisher. Mr. Williams has been with the George S. Oliver Newspapers during the past year as a member of the executive staff, and his new position entails added responsibilities.

T. R. Williams

Mr. Williams was for many years managing editor and later business manager of the Pittsburgh Press. He served two years as president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association and at present is a director.

Publishers of Sunday Editions may see the while attending the American Newspaper Publishers Convention at New York Week of April 19th

For the accommodation of publishers interested in the machine, headquarters will be maintained during the Convention at

Hotel WALDORF-ASTORIA

MR. CHARLES R. MURRAY in charge

MR. MURRAY is President of the manufacturing and distributing company. He will be pleased to accord every courtesy to publishers desiring to investigate this new machine, which is the only mechanical means of stuffing or gathering and inserting the various sections of the modern multi-section Sunday edition newspaper.

Halvorsen machines have for some time been in use in the plant of THE NEW YORK TIMES and equipment is now being installed for THE WORLD and THE HERALD-TRIBUNE of New York

A visit to New York Convention Week affords an opportunity to investigate, which should not be neglected.

The machine is well adapted to the requirements of publishers issuing multi-section editions of medium circulation, as well as being a real necessity to the metropolitan publisher.

Halvorsen machines are speeding the edition and cutting the cost of stuffing for Sunday newspapers in these representative cities:

Chicago	New York
Milwaukee	Memphis
Saint Paul	Birmingham
San Francisco	Seattle
Los Angeles	Sydney [Australia]

Be sure to get in touch with MR. MURRAY at the Waldorf—and learn about the Halvorsen Stuffing Machine while in New York.

A recommendation of suitable equipment can be made for your plant—if you will have available a copy of your Sunday edition showing the order of assembling the sections, together with a floor plan of the mailing room or other available space.

"SIGN OF THE SEVEN SEERS"

THE attention of Editor & Publisher readers is directed to the interesting and important invention of a substitute for milk-and-water editorials by the editor of Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Republican.

"At the Sign of the Seven Seers" is the title given to this novel local feature. Editor James S. Farquhar, desirous of presenting to his readers editorials of quality, written deliberately and from a detached viewpoint that would tend to reflect average opinion, induced seven capable citizens of his community to write one editorial per week, thus supplying a manuscript for every publication day. These are the "Seven Seers." Their identity is not revealed to the public. Mr. Farquhar, however, informs us that they are men of varied experience, each qualified by education and fine public spirit to write for a newspaper audience.

These seven detached unpaid writers are wholly independent of each other and of the newspaper itself. They write what they believe. They do not always agree on public questions and frequently the column takes the form of a debate. But we are assured that each "seer" firmly stands for free speech and the exercise of fair play and that is good enough editorial platform for any newspaper.

Here, then, is something new, attractive and vitally important in newspaper work. We predict that the idea will sweep the country, and Mr. Farquhar will be generous in lending the idea, as he believes that the old vacuous or straddling editorial space-killer should be shoved aside for the expressions of thoughtful men on the real affairs of life. We do not at all agree with Mr. Farquhar that the enterprise is best suited to the small cities—it is equally good for any metropolitan paper.

Are there seven talented, public-spirited, articulate business and professional men in your city who would undertake to write one editorial each week for your paper? The following might be an ideal staff of seers, in the ordinary community: (1) civil engineer; (2) hard-headed business man; (3) mother of several children, home-maker, dabber in painting or poetry, a woman of heart and comprehension; (4) an intelligent man who earns his living by combined skill and strength of body; (5) retired physician, clergyman or judge; (6) young man interested in the affairs of youth, political causes as distinguished from "politics," cultural developments, city planning, sports, gaiety and beauty; (7) some bewhiskered old scout, advocate of the status-quo, conformist, fearful of modernism, worried half sick about the Red Peril in America, bobbed hair, short skirts, the new spirit of play, discussion of old-time taboos, a sincere Puritan wailer.

This staff would represent a cross-section of wholesome modern society in any city. All must be articulate and take the attitude of the earnest publicist, expressing true convictions, but not using his power to propagandize. Obviously, the problem is to select true "seers." The right people when found will give editorial space high value.

In our opinion the average reader is as much disgusted with greasy sophistry, half-truths snappily stated, as with unctious fence-riding in editorials. But the field is wide open for clean, independent, honest discussion of the controversies and problems of the day either by professional or unprofessional writers. Mr. Farquhar and his "Seven Seers" have made a notable contribution to the journalism of the day.

As editor E. W. Pate, of Hobart (Okla.) Democrat-Chief remarks, E. W. Scripps' elaborate plans for continuance of his newspaper policies testified to his sincerity of purpose.

GOOD BUSINESS CONDITIONS

LEADING bankers and business men over the country, interviewed by Philadelphia Public Ledger, agree that business in the United States is fundamentally sound and that the remainder of 1926 is an excellent prospect. None foresee inflation either in industrial activities or wholesale or retail trade. Every community represented in this survey appears optimistic.

Conditions in the advertising field certainly confirm these opinions.

BUREAU OF STANDARDS

THE important scheduled business of the 40th annual meeting of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, is final action to create a bureau of mechanical standards, long advocated by Editor & Publisher.

This enterprise is in line with modern science. The newspaper has become a technical manufacturing problem of magnitude. It is the one big industry that has not developed standards of practice through engineering analysis. This is strange, as newspaper production problems are duplicated in every city. There is at present stupendous waste. Old faults are perpetrated year after year.

The A. N. P. A. bureau is the way out. It will cost the membership some money, but we can imagine no more worthwhile investment by the organized press. Great will be the benefits of an efficiently conducted bureau. The best engineering talent will be none too good. Every publisher should be able to confidently bring to this bureau any mechanical problem and receive authoritative advice.

Editor & Publisher extends greetings to the 1926 visiting delegates, rejoicing with them in the year's prosperity and unparalleled newspaper popularity. Seed that the newspaper publishers of the United States have been planting in the co-operative field for 40 years is today yielding a bumper crop. In the broad sense A. N. P. A. has just started to function.

Crocus, pussy-willow, yellow evening skies, hurdy-gurdy, circus, the newspaper conventions at the Waldorf—so this is Spring!

THEATRICAL CRITICISMS

AN actress tells Editor & Publisher of her experience with newspapers in some New England towns. Evidently a sincere artist she expected to have some sincere criticisms of her work on the stage, but what she got was publication of a stereotyped press agent "hand-out," in one instance conscientiously labelled by the editor as "adv."

This artist, whose interesting letter appears on another page of this issue, asks if newspapers would not gain reader confidence and at the same time lose nothing in a business way, if they would print criticism that truly mirrors the opinions of the reviewer.

Gain reader confidence? Indeed, they would! But many newspapers are weak and the managers of local theatres are strong, wanting every show and every act puffed in superlative terms that tax public credulity to the limit. And when editors resist some theatrical mogul comes along and cancels his advertising contract. In every instance where a newspaper has accepted this condition and, without malice, has proceeded to report the news of the theatre honestly for readers, the mogul has ultimately swallowed his medicine and been benefited by the dose. However, in too many offices editors who desire to review plays in justice to art and to the public are overruled by advertising executives who think they cannot afford to take even a temporary loss and are content to follow the line of least resistance.

Church memberships in the United States number 46,883,756, a gain of some 800,000 during 1925, according to a "Christian Herald" census, and the fact is that this country is experiencing a remarkable revival in religious interest.

PAN-AMERICANS IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK welcomes the Pan-American jou alists, following their successful first Congre at Washington. Their participation in the a nual newspaper conventions next week will lend inte national significance and afford to them opportuni for intensive study of northern press methods and us further information as to journalism practice the republics of Central and South America.

In view of the excellent exposition of the fac concerning Pan-American journalism, revealed duri the Washington proceedings, there can now be question in the mind of any Editor & Publish reader that a new era has dawned for lively reciproc relations between the peoples of the north and sout journalism in its best form carrying the banner f trade. The Washington congress has given amazing important new impetus to the movement, justifyi by a thousandfold the ambitions of its promote Pan-Americanism has significant meaning amo hundreds of thousands of influential people toda whereas two weeks ago it was to many but a ha name.

Fiction, oldest and most consistent American newspaper feature, is now published in greater volume in the daily and weekly press than at any time in this generation.

RESPONDING TO PUBLIC OPINION

A BULLETIN issued by the Foreign Policy Ass ciation calls attention to the "trend towa bureaucratic reticence" in the Department State at Washington since the passage of the Rog Bill in 1924, placing the overwhelming proportion all positions in the diplomatic and consular serv upon a "career" basis, so that personal favoritism a political patronage might be removed from the co duct of American foreign affairs.

While a professionalized foreign service brings higher calibre men, assures larger experience a makes for competent and stable technical organizati it is pointed out that "these makers of the fut American foreign policy will tend, in the nature the case, to be unresponsive to public opinion." It argued that as they owe their appointments to su cessful competitive examinations and cannot be moved from office except for misbehavior, they w be little disposed to heed popular criticism and State Department staff will become a skilled a urbane bureaucracy, disposed to discount the abil of the public to judge international questions. other words, we are building up an organization able technicians, rather than broad statesmen.

This appeals to reason and unquestionably accou for the increasing difficulty correspondents are havi in covering the department for news and views. deed, skepticism of the ability of the people to r themselves is increasingly prevalent among techni executives in all departments of our governme accounting in large measure for their attitude contempt for the free press which is the main feed of public opinion. Is democratic government des able? If not, a way to kill it is to keep the pub in ignorance of public affairs.

What if the drys would demand a recount of the newspaper straw vote?

A. N. P. A. AND PRESS AGENTS

THAT the A. N. P. A. will put teeth in legislati to govern commercial space grafting during ne week's convention is devoutly to be hoped.

Commercial press agentry has become the m destructive agency at work against our press. It v lates not only a high journalistic principle but the l governing plain labelling of advertising. It is a ru less deception of readers. It often smacks of rebati and rate cutting. It breeds contempt—as do all "fr services. It wastes good material. No one is rea served by it save a coterie of badly deceived advert ing agents and a few irresponsible press agents.

That the organized press of the United States a Canada can eliminate the commercial space graf is best testified to by the fact that an increasing nu ber of newspapers, both large and small, have s ceeded in doing so by independent action.

Marcellus Murdock

MARCELLUS MURDOCK, publisher of the Wichita (Kan.) Eagle, has two hobbies—a bigger Wichita and a better Eagle. While yet in his early forties, Mr. Murdock has served long apprenticeships in both departments of his paper. In early life he was in the editorial department. Upon the death of his father, Col. M. M. Murdock, he took over the business management. In spite of his many duties as head of a big business he still finds time to devote to many civic enterprises.

Recently he became head of the library board, and will put into effect many improvements in the affairs of the city's public library. He has been active in Community Chest work, is a member of the executive committee for the establishment of a municipal university, has had long service in the city's air program and the establishment of air mail routes. He is a prominent Rotarian.

Mr. Murdock keeps in close touch with every department of his paper, meeting his department heads in daily conferences, and injecting into the management of the paper his almost unlimited energy and enthusiasm.

A News-Mat Service Just Doesn't Keep on Growing by Accident

FIVE news-mat services have been started since April, 1925, but Central Press KEEPS ON GROWING, adding new clients, improving the quality of its service.

Central Press' complete and exclusive daily illustrated news and feature service is now satisfying the needs of more than four hundred newspapers.

The World's Best Picture Page, a Central Press product, is now appearing in more papers than ever before; it is used by more papers than any other daily pictorial.

And Central Press weekly full-page sports pictorial is growing in popularity and proving itself what we always have claimed it to be: the Best Sports Feature.

Let us send you proofs and mats.

WITH THE GENERAL ADVERTISERS

Cigar Appropriation Doubled—Wedding Ring Copy for Rotogravure Sections—Lumber Men Discuss $1,000,000 Campaign—Nolan Joins United Artists

NEWSPAPERS in three states will be used in a campaign to start in May promoting the Van Dam cigar, product of the Tunis Johnson Cigar Company, Grand Rapids, Mich. The cigar concern has doubled its advertising appropriation this year. The White Advertising Agency, Grand Rapids, is directing the account. States in which the advertising will appear are Illinois, Indiana, and Michigan.

Prospective June bridegrooms will be told about wedding rings in space purchased in newspaper rotogravure sections by Byard F. Brogan, Philadelphia, manufacturing jeweler. The Charles C. Green Advertising Agency, Inc., Philadelphia office, has been appointed to direct the campaign.

Members of the National-American Wholesale Lumber Association are to be asked to finance a $1,000,000 co-operative advertising campaign, when they meet at Atlantic City, Ambassador Hotel, April 15-17. The drive is to be urged to combat the inroads which substitutes are making in the lumber business.

Warren Nolan, former moving picture critic of the New York Evening Telegram, has joined the advertising staff of United Artists, Inc., New York. Before joining the Telegram, Nolan was for four years on the New York Times.

James M. Muldoon has been appointed advertising manager of the New York State department of the Tide Water Oil Sales Corporation. At one time he was with the Hearst newspaper, and had been an account executive of Frank Kiernan & Co., New York advertising agency.

The Lamson Ice Maid refrigerator, made by the Lamson Company, Syracuse, New York, will be advertised in newspapers this season. Service branches are to be opened in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, and St. Louis to sell direct to consumers. Advertising will be extended as branches are opened. C. S. Bigsby is sales manager. The account is handled by Moser & Cotins, Utica.

Foreign Trade Convention, April 28

Various advertising associations are co-operating in drawing up a program for an advertising session to be held at the Foreign Trade Convention, Charleston, S. C., April 28. Among them are the American Association of Advertising Agencies, the Association of National Advertisers, and the Advertising Club of New York. James S. Martin, foreign publicity director of the Remington Typewriter Company, will preside. James A. Farrell, president of the United States Steel Corporation, will speak on "The Foreign Trade Outlook."

Magee to Speak at Iowa School

Carl C. Magee, editor of the Albuquerque (N. M.) State Tribune, who is an alumnus of Teachers' College, Cedar Falls, Ia., has accepted an invitation to make the presentation speech for the memorial camp at the Teachers' College, May 31, in behalf of the alumni association. Mr. Magee was graduated in 1894.

Oscar G. Foellinger

LIKE many other newspapers during the World War, the Fort Wayne News was threatened with the necessity of suspending publication. There was only a few days' supply of white paper on hand. Clarence F. Bicknell, at that time publisher of the News, was desperate. Paper had been shipped from the mills in Canada, but the car had been lost and was several days past due. Finally, the car was located in the yards in Detroit. Fort Wayne railroad officials were unable to get it out.

Bicknell called Oscar G. Foellinger, now president and genral manager of the News Publishing Company, into his office.

"Oscar, I want you to take the first train for Detroit and see if you can get that car of paper out of the yards and started on its way to Fort Wayne," Bicknell said. "Otherwise we will have to quit business."

Foellinger took the first train to Detroit. He consulted with the railroad officials there, but was given little satisfaction. They could give him no assurance as to when the car would be shipped.

Foellinger then took things in his own hands. He had the car number and in his youth he had had a little experience in railroading. He went to the yards of the Canadian Pacific in Windsor, Canada. After several hours' search he found his car. Then he hunted up the superintendent of the yards. He was a rough fellow and suspicious of everyone. His vocabulary consisted largely of profanity.

"What in —— do you want?" he asked.

Foellinger explained the situation. He wanted to get a car of paper routed to Fort Wayne on the first train out. He insisted that unless he would be considerate enough to grant his request his paper would have to suspend publication.

"Well, that doesn't mean anything in my young life," the superintendent indifferently replied. "What's your name?"

Foellinger told him.

"That name doesn't sound good to me," the superintendent said. "There is nothing that I can do for you."

But Foellinger was not dismayed. He insisted, he threatened, and he swore. Finally, the superintendent told him that if he could be assured that he had given his correct name and that he was really representing the News Publishing Company of Fort Wayne he would get the car out on the first train. As a result Foellinger had to telegraph Bicknell and Bicknell had to telegraph the superintendent assuring him that Foellinger was a bona-fide name and that he was a representative of the News Publishing Company.

But the worst was yet to come. Foellinger was in Canada. The war was on. All railroads were guarded. He wanted to get back to Detroit the shortest route. And so he started to walk down one of the tracks leading to the tunnel under the Detroit river. He had not proceeded far when he was stopped by two soldiers.

"Where are you going?" he was asked.

"I have a car of paper in the yards here about ready to leave and I want to get back to Detroit before it gets over there."

"Tell it to the sergeant," one of the soldiers told him.

At the points of two bayonets Foellinger was marched to the guard house to await the pleasure of the sergeant. The sergeant wasn't in any particular hurry. Eventually, he made an appearance.

"What are you doing here?" the sergeant asked.

Foellinger repeated the story he had related to the two soldiers.

"What's your name?" the sergeant asked.

Foellinger's heart sank. He felt that if he gave his name he would be shot at sunrise. Foellinger is a German name and he was in Canada. However, he mustered up sufficient courage to tell him. The sergeant became more inquisitive.

"Where are you going?"

"I'm going to Detroit through that tunnel," Foellinger answered.

"You are not," the sergeant insisted.

Just then an electric engine with several freight cars passed by. Foellinger saw his car of paper and without further ceremony he jumped on the train and was on his way to Detroit before the sergeant realized what had happened. He waved his hand at the astonished sergeant just as the train disappeared in the tunnel.

Foellinger believes with Shakespeare that "a rose by any other name would smell as sweet."

However, his paper did not have to suspend publication.

Chester W. Lyman Dead

Chester W. Lyman, 64, formerly vice-president of the International Paper Company, died April 7, in a Boston, Mass., hospital. He started his career as a paper manufacturer in 1885 with the firm of W. H. Parsons & Co., New York. In 1890 he joined the Herkimer Paper Company. On the absorption of this business by the International Paper Company in 1898, he began his long association with the largest organization.

EUGENE L. BERTRAND

Veteran of N. Y. World and Friend of Eugene Field Dies in Aurora

Eugene L. Bertrand, 65, associated with Eugene Field on the Denver Post, and widely known as a newspaper writer and editor, died April 7, at his home, Aurora, Ill., where he had resided the last two years. Prior to his return to Aurora he had been in the editorial department of the New York World. Mr. Bertrand was born Sept. 5, 1860, in Superior, Wis., and when he was eight years old his family moved to Clinton, Ia., where he gained his first newspaper experience as a printer's devil. When he was 19 he became a reporter on a Leadville, Colo., paper and later went to Denver, where he was city editor of the Post, when Eugene Field occupied a desk in the office. Mr. Bertrand was special correspondent in Washington, D. C., for the San Francisco Chronicle from 1890-1892, covered the Republican convention in Minneapolis, where his paper was a Blaine supporter. Bertrand's mild manner gaining for him the sobriquet of "Bertie, the Lamb," which remained with him throughout his life. He was for many years Sunday editor of the Chicago Tribune and had been with the New York World 14 years. The widow, three brothers and two sisters survive.

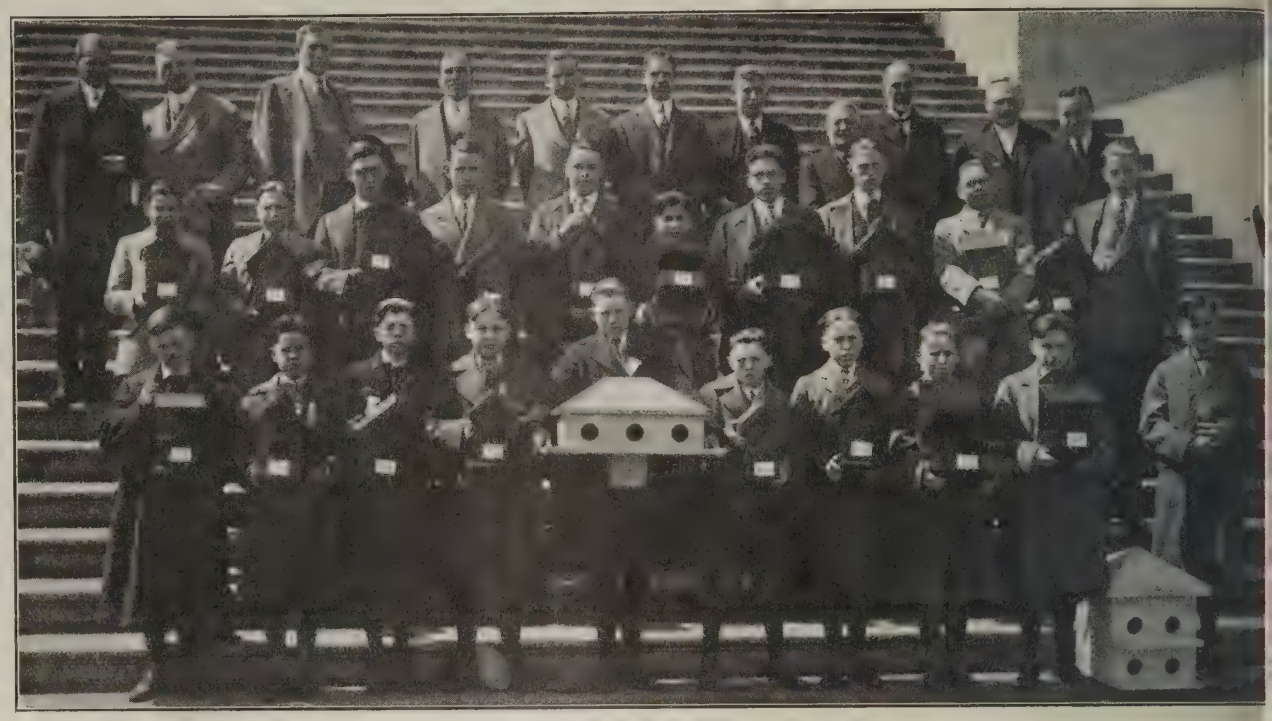
16,000 BOYS AND GIRLS IN DAILY'S CONTEST

Forty 5-Day Trips to Washington Among the 668 Prizes Competed for by School Children in Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph's Bird House and Sewing Contest

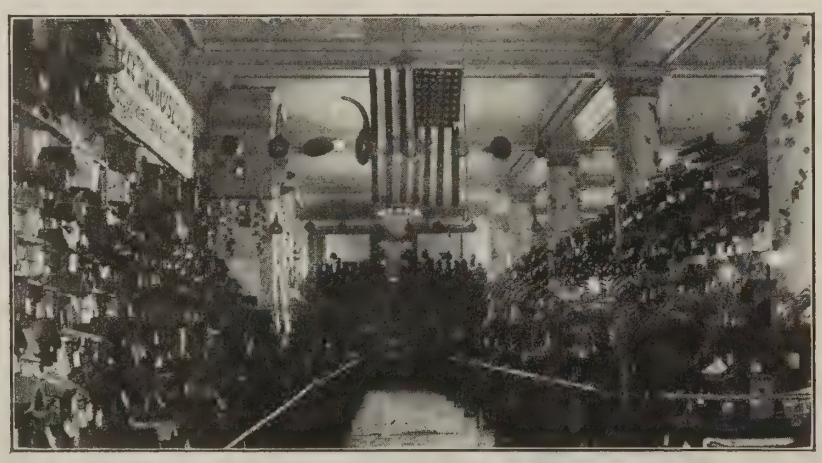
By JOSEPH M. AYLWARD

A RECORD for newspaper contests in the United States, requiring a general knowledge of art, manual training and household economy, was established by the Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph in its tenth annual bird house contest, which enrolled 16,140 entrants. They were boys and girls, aged 10 to 16 years, divided into three groups according to age for purposes of competition. The boys built bird houses, feeding stations, bird baths and made bird houses of gourds grown by them from seeds distributed last Spring by the paper, while the girls made princess slips and gingham frocks. The list of 668 prizes acted as a magnet. Chief among the prizes were 40 free five-day tours of Washington and its environs, for as many boys and girls, winners in Group B, for contestants aged 12 and 13 years, and Group C for contestants aged 14 and 16 years. Besides there were prizes of tool chests, beaded bags, binoculars, field glasses, double deck pencil boxes, bicyclets and cameras.



The contestants were given seven weeks in which to make and enter their specimens. Judging of the specimens began immediately after the close of the contest. This task was in charge of naturalists and manual training instructors in the boys' division, and household economy instructors in the girls' division. An affidavit from parent, guardian or teacher was required of each boy or girl chosen by the judges as a winner before he or she was eligible for a prize. This affidavit was to the effect that all the work on the specimen was done by the boy or the girl. The contestants under the contest rules were permitted to obtain all the suggestions possible, but they were required to do all the actual work on their specimens themselves.

The specimens were displayed in a large storeroom in the heart of downtown Pittsburgh and for two weeks the public flocked to see them. The visitors numbered thousands. Parents, educators and men in public life came, including Senator George Wharton Pepper, and former Governor John K. Tener of Pennsylvania.



The enterprise received alike the endorsement of educators, artisans and the general public. The work of the boys and the girls was highly praised. A mother, after viewing the thousands of specimens, was moved to declare that the "future of the nation is safe with the boys and the girls engaged in such gainful endeavor." The spirit of fair play, initiative, self-reliance and kindness to birds and animals were among the contest's objectives. The specimens all reflected high standard of workmanship, this feature being especially commented on by the judges, many of whom had watched the Bird House contests grow from a small beginning, ten years ago, into an enterprise engaging the interest and activity of thousands of boys and girls of the tri-state district.

The contests were inaugurated in 1916, with the thought in mind to help further the interest of the younger generation in the protection of native birds. In 1916, about 900 boys entered specimens. In the contests to date the boys of Western Pennsylvania have constructed more than 40,000 bird houses. A remarkable feature is that in the construction of these houses is that 85 per cent of them have been placed to advantage in providing nesting places for birds that inhabit Western Pennsylvania.

As their reward, 40 boys and girls, 20 from municipal Pittsburgh and 20 from other places in Western Pennsylvania, winners in Groups B and C, for contestants aged 12 to 16 years, were taken on a free five-day tour of Washington and its historic environs. The party left Pittsburgh by Pullman over the Baltimore and Ohio railroad Wednesday night, March 31, and returned Monday, April 5 by daylight over the picturesque route along the Potomac River, through Harper's Ferry, W. Va., and the famous Sand Patch tunnel, more than a mile long, at the crest of the Allegheny Mountains.

"Tele" bird house contest boy winners holding their prize bird houses which they presented to the Mercersburg Academy as memorials to Calvin Collidge, Jr., who was a student th ere. The presentation took place on the steps of the Capitol at Washington, D. C., during the five-day free tour of the national capital which was the boys' reward for their success. Prominent government officials and educators in back row.

Thousands viewed the public exhibition of bird houses entered in the tenth annual bird house contest of Pittsburgh (Pa.) Chronicle Telegraph, of which the photograph shows one section.

The party was in charge of the writer Miss Irene E. McDermott, director of household economy of the Pittsburgh schools, and assistants from her department were chaperons. Employes of The Chronicle Telegraph were in charge of the boys. The young people were divided into groups of three and four, each group in charge of an adult. In addition, there was a graduate nurse and a physician in the party.

There was no sickness, and all through the trip the tourists, everyone of them, were fine and fit for the full enjoyment of every feature of the tour.

Nothing was left undone in Washington for the entertainment and educational enlightenment of the young people. The program included sightseeing trips through Washington's residential and public districts by motor bus, visits to Georgetown, Mount Vernon, Alexandria, Va., Arlington Cemetery, tomb of the Unknown Soldier, the Capitol, the White House, Congressional Library, the Museums, Pan-American Building, the Washington Monument, the United States Naval-Air Station, Bolling Field, the Monastery, the National Cathedral and other places.

A high spot of the tour was on Friday, April 2, when the 20 boys presented the prize bird houses to the Mercersburg Academy as memorials to Calvin Coolidge, Jr., who was a student there. The presentation was marked by impressive ceremonies on the steps of the United States Capitol, attended by Congressmen from Allegheny and Westmoreland counties, Pennsylvania, and prominent Washingtonians, including David Lynn, architect of the Capitol, and Dr. T. S. Palmer, biologist of the Biological Survey. John M. Phillips, former game commissioner of Pennsylvania, presided. Joseph H. Speer, director of industrial education of the Pittsburgh schols, made the presentation on behalf of the boys.

Emory J. Middour, assistant to the Head Master at Mercersburg Academy accepted the bird houses on behalf of the Academy.

Solemn faces of the boy and girl tourists, who were representatives of thousands of other boys and girls in the Pittsburgh district, showed that they were sensitive to the high honor that was theirs in presenting the memorials. The bird houses were embellished with plates aluminum plates inscribed with the name of the boy donor, the date, and the occasion.

Morning Newspapers!

Morning Newspapers have peculiar strength with WOMEN

LET US disarm criticism right at the start!

Morning newspapers ARE NOT for any mysterious reason the sole and sufficient guide to the feminine buyers of this country.

They do not own, to the exclusion of all other newspapers, a passport to woman's secret consciousness.

But they do maintain, positively and beyond question, a minimum TEN HOURS contact each day in the home where buying impulse generates. And this contact is maintained during daylight, open-store hours.

Therein lies their peculiar strength with the family purchasing agents of America.

It is something for the alert space-buyer to consider thoughtfully.

The mounting lineage records of morning newspapers prove that such thoughtful consideration exists and is increasing.

DANIELS ATTACKS CONSOLIDATIONS, URGES STRICT PROFESSIONAL STATUS FOR PRESS

(Excerpts from an address on "Newspaper Ethics" by Hon. Josephus Daniels, publisher of the Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer, before the First Pan American Congress of Journalists, Washington, April 7-13.)

IS the newspaper of today an institution established to serve and lead the public, or is it a business institution set up and directed to earn dividends for those who own the title to the plant? This is no academic question, propounded for diversion of intellectuals, or to provoke discussion by business men and chambers of commerce or as the topic for debate by the Pan-American or other Congresses of journalists.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS

Primarily as journalists we must meet this question and answer it. If we fail to fix the true status of our journals let us not doubt that the reader will make the correct appraisement.

If the newspaper is a public institution, holding the relation as partaking partly of an educator and partly a public service corporation, it is fitting that journalists should set up and maintain a code of ethics such as have always been held fitting for professions as they are different from commerce and trade. If, however, a newspaper is property, having something to sell in the marts of trade as its chief mission, it is governed by business ethics.

There is a wide difference between business ethics and professional ethics, chiefly in the fact that the primary purpose of the business world is to realize profit by catering to the public needs or the public tastes. The ethics of the profession changes the emphasis. Whereas both serve a good purpose, the profession requires its members first of all to serve the common need and find their chief reward as public servants, accepting compensation honorarium or fees. The highest expression illustrative of a profession, which is an institution rather than business, is that "he that preaches the gospel must live by the gospel," which means that the lawyer, who is an officer of the court, is charged with the duty of seeing that a client obtains all his legal rights. The fee must be a secondary matter, and if the client has no money, the lawyer must defend him as zealously as if the money compensation was large. The physician degrades his profession who permits the size of his fee to affect the exercise of his highest skill to save or cure his patient. In like manner, if the journalist belongs to a profession he must pour out his soul in the columns of his journal and be true to his righteous convictions "unawed by influence and unbribed by gain." If he has no convictions, he would die for, he is no editor, even though he may write with the pen of a Greeley or a Pulitzer. The best definition ever given of an editor is that he is a man who, rising in the morning to read of what transpired in the world on the previous day, is moved to righteous indignation against wrong or injustice, and goes forth to combat it with all the power of a crusader. If wrong and injustice do not summon him to fight the "wrongs that need resistance," he may be the owner or editor of a journal, rich and widely circulated, but he has no more right in the sanctum than a facing-both-ways Christian has place in the pulpit. The doctrine of noblesse oblige must guide the journalist who belongs to a profession rather than to a trade.

It must be recognized that journalism of our era must combine the office or teacher with the practices of the business world. There was a time when any writer who felt he had a message or felt the call to write could establish a newspaper if he could command a handkerchief full of type and a $150 hand press. Oftener than otherwise, such men were concerned with questions of government. Politics governed in most sanctums. When the Hamiltonian theories were expounded by John Fenno's journal, the Jeffersonians stood behind Philip Frennean's. Party journals often descended to bitterness and sometimes to Billingsgate. Editors in past generations sometimes depended on political patronage for bread and butter, and fell into disrepute when they became the mere organs of ambitious men or the hired exponents of selfish interests. But as a rule, the precarious livelihood of editors attracted to journalism only those who felt the compulsion of a medium to reach and influence the public for policies and principles they deemed essential. If the scant advertising and the small number of subscribers brought enough to keep the wolf from the door, the editor felt recompensed. It was true in the days when Nathaniel Macon, Speaker of the House, wrote to John Randolph, of Roanoke when that eccentric Virginian was lambasted by the papers, "A government of editors would be a government of the hungry."

No such condition exists today. The newspaper in a city of large population brings large money returns. The temptation to accept dictation by direct money contribution no longer exists. Financial independence, greatly increased by larger reading constituencies and a new faith in printer's ink by advertisers, has lifted all newspaper owners to economic independence and some to wealth. Has this freedom from financial worry brought the newspaper up to a larger and more unselfish devotion to the common weal? Or has it tended to make newspaper owners share the views of other recipients of large incomes and influence their editorial utterances? If an issue has been raised —as is now debated in the United States: Shall the burden of taxation be first reduced on what the toilers must buy, or shall the earliest and largest tax reductions be given to those in receipt of large incomes?—if that is presented, will publishers be influenced to advocate the course that reduces their own tax along with the other favored classes, or will they throw the weight of their influence to the immediate relief of those least able to pay the cost of government? The answer to this question challenges the supreme test which every journalist should apply to themselves.

The day when a man with small capital could establish or buy a newspaper, has gone, more's the pity for that journalistic debate which keeps the current of opinion active and clear. Plant and other expense of running a daily newspaper makes starting a new one so hazardous that we are now in an era of consolidating rather than founding new papers. If Mr. Munsey had lived and kept up his gait, we might have come to the day in New York as in St. Louis and Detroit, where there would be a single morning daily in our metropoli[s]. Mr. Curtis has reduced the number in Philadelphia. Most consolidations have come about because the mounting costs of publication have made it an economic necessity. Even then the tendency is to be deplored, and it is a calamity when consolidations have no basis except the desire to increase profits and dividends to the owners or the publishers. It is debasing to journalism when consolidations are made to deny open discussion and end the life of a journal whose policy was not agreeable to the powers that be. Such journalism has no ethics. It is not even journalism. It is trade and barter in what should be the palladium of the people's rights, and, when a journal changes hands to douse the light or to strangle utterances not acceptable to any selfish interest, business or political, the transaction destroys by that much the freedom of the press, guaranteed by the Constitution.

The fact that a newspaper has a large field, comparatively free from competition, imposes a responsibility that must compel acceptance of the truth that the publisher must not conduct his paper with the main idea of profit. He should regard his paper as a public institution, himself as a trustee of the property for the public weal, and regard ownership as a necessary incident to public service. In every real respect the journal should belong to the public. If it is afflicted with the itch for large profits, and its policy influenced by such desire, it is a menace and not a blessing to the community in which it is published. Recen[t] there was a conspicuous example of the extreme acceptance of the fact that a journal belongs to the public. Many years ago William R. Nelson, without money, landed in Kansas City. He had enough money to buy a handful of type and a press. He started a newspaper and conducted it along original lines. He added an afternoon paper. It helped Kansas City to grow and the growth of Kansas City brought him great riches. In his will Mr. Nelson provided that his two papers should go to his only daughter, but at her death should belong to the people of Kansas City. The earnings are estimated at a million dollars a year. Upon the death of his daughter a few days ago, this Kansas City newspaper property worth $10,000,000, became the property of all the people of Kansas City. However "Old Bill Nelson," as he was familiarly called, had no illusions about the ability of political agents to run great newspapers. The property is to be held by the president of three universities as trustees and conducted by them for two years. Then it is to be sold and the income from the amount realized to be spent for paintings, sculpture, tapestries and other works of art for installation in a municipal art museum, the building having already been provided i[n] his wife.

To be sure, a newspaper of today has a business side, and its importance is not to be minimized, or the ability to successfully conduct the business department underrated. Upon its successful conduct depends the ability of the paper to furnish the latest news and best features and secure the best talent so the journal may be interesting, instructive and useful. Advertising has become an integral part of the paper and dependence on business information make advertising essential to its readers. The proper display and attractive writing of advertisement has demanded talent of high order. But there the mission of the business side ends. If it dominates in any degree the editor's policy, if the income desired affects the paper's utterance, the journal becomes a trade or a business, and has no right to claim the ethics of a profession or the honor paid to a public institution.

There ought to be—there must be—close cooperation between all who make a modern journal, and in the truly great newspaper the able advertising and business management has come to appreciat[e] quite as well as the writers that the cha[r]acter and independence and public ser[v]ice is its only permanent asset. A news[-]paper cannot retain its character b[y] favoritism or supression or poisoning i[ts] news any more than by substituting co[m]mercialism for public duty. An ab[le] journalist recently said that a newspap[er] "can no more afford to poison its new[s] than a dairyman can afford to put pruss[ic] acid in his milk," and he added: "Th[e] newspaper which poisons its produ[ct] poisons itself. Suppression of importa[nt] or pertinent facts in the interest of popu[-]larity, class, gang, clique or self-intere[st] is the equivalent of a death warrant [if] persisted in. Of this the toll of dea[d] newspapers is sufficient testimony."

There is no other institution—or bus[i]ness—if it is a business—which enjoy[s] such privileges and rights as the pres[s]. All free countries feel that a free pres[s] is the mudsill upon which popular govern[-]ment rests. "If the choice were give[n] me," said Jefferson, "of a free press or [a] free government, I would choose a fre[e] press, for where the press is free fre[e] government will be secured," or words t[o] that effect.

It was that conviction that caused Mr[.] Jefferson to request North Carolina an[d] other colonies to refuse to ratify the Con[-]stitution and enter the Union until the Bi[ll] of Rights, freedom of religion, and free[-]dom of the press were incorporated int[o] that American Magna Charta. "Congres[s] shall make no laws," says the Constitution "abridging the freedom of speech or o[f] the press."

If journalism is a trade and publishin[g] a paper is a business they have no mor[e] right to constitutional protection tha[n] selling fish or dry goods. It is certai[n] Jefferson would not have written fro[m] France and insisted upon security of free[-]dom of the press if he had supposed th[at] journal would be other than a publi[c] institution, set up to serve the public and would keep free the channel of dis[-]cussion, which he believed would so in[-]fluence the people that government woul[d] become responsive to the popular will[.] That high obligation upon journalists i[n] the United States and all other America[n] journals in North and South America should cause us here and now to recon[-]secrate ourselves and rededicate ou[r] journals to the service of the whol[e] people. If any of us yield to the tempta[-]tion of putting profit above promotin[g] the common weal, what moral right hav[e] we to invoke the protection of the Con[-]stitution enacted only to insure a fre[e] press? It is no longer free to serv[e] humanity if the paramount aim is to mak[e] large dividends.

More than that: if the trend in tha[t] direction, which cannot be denied, shoul[d] become general, if newspapers are chiefly business concerns, not only will powe[r] go out from us, but the people will look for help and deliverance from othe[r] sources, and the sceptre will depart from the press and should depart from it.

France has about reached the poin[t] where nothing will help so much as a good cry.—Spartanburg Herald.

COMPLETE NEWSPAPER SHOULD TOUCH ALL PHASES OF CONTEMPORARY LIFE

(Extracts from an address on "The Complete Newspaper" by Ogden Reid, editor of the New York Herald Tribune, before the First Pan-American Congress of Journalists, Washington, April 7-13.)

THE past generation has seen a considerable change in the character of editorial opinion. On the whole, newspapers today are less partisan than formerly and feel a greater responsibility to their readers. Editorials are more informative and judicial in tone. Cartoons are probably more effective now than ever before. They frequently explain a situation and paint a moral at a glance where a written opinion would require considerable length to convey the same idea.

Ogden Reid

Newspaper columns are often a forum for debate, and influential dailies are glad to publish letters from readers expressing opinions at variance with their own. Furthermore, they frequently publish signed articles by people of prominence whose opinions are of interest to the public, though they may not necessarily agree with those held by the paper in which they are printed.

Another modern development, which has on many papers required the services of a special department, is the enormous number of letters from readers asking for information and advice on every conceivable subject. They want to know how to invest their money, how to make out their income tax returns, how to build their houses, how to make their clothes and cook their meals. These questions, as far as possible, are answered by highly trained specialists, who conduct regular news departments on these subjects. This service to the readers forms a personal relationship that could probably not be obtained in any other way.

While the main business of a newspaper is to print the news to help all worthy causes so far as its facilities permit, there are occasions when it can make a special effort for a particular purpose. Many papers have some form of welfare work which they promote at regular intervals. There are fresh air funds for children, ice funds, coal funds, substantial Christmas presents—either money or food—and various other forms of help for those who cannot entirely take care of themselves. Most of these endeavors carried on purely as charities, could not afford to maintain an organization all the year round and yet could not build anew an efficient organization every year when the time came to start work. But papers, with their accounting, news and other departments working all the time, and the aid of a minimum permanent force can act quickly and do a tremendous amount of good, which would otherwise be left undone.

More and more the modern newspaper is becoming the product of a highly organized group of experts acting under one management. No editor can be a master of all departments. He must select expert assistants and harmonize the various groups so that a well balanced paper can be produced. His dominating though, however, must always be that nothing human is alien to a newspaper.

John S. Cohen

THOMAS J. HAMILTON, editor of the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, in a speech to a press convention at Waynesboro the other day modestly but proudly proclaimed that the Chronicle, dating from 1785, is the oldest newspaper in the South and that a distinguished triumvirate of Southern editors cut their eye teeth in the Chronicle school of journalism.

"It so happens that the Augusta Chronicle has been the training school for some of the South's great editors and publishers," Mr. Hamilton said. "Within the past 40 years, three Chronicle reporters left their mother newspaper to build their fortunes in other cities. Pleasant A. Stovall, late minister to Switzerland, bought the Savannah Press; Edward W. Barrett acquired the Birmingham Age-Herald; and John S. Cohen became a reporter on the Atlanta Journal."

After recounting briefly the success of Messrs. Stovall and Barrett, at Savannah and Birmingham, Mr. Hamilton added that "the third member of this triumvirate—John S. Cohen—is now president and editor of the Atlanta Journal, which to my mind is the South's greatest newspaper."

Jack Cohen began at the very bottom of the ladder as a reporter of the Atlanta Journal, but his instinctive newspaper talent won him steady advancement through various stages to his present position. His experience embraces all fields of reportorial activity, from police courts to Washington and war correspondence, with a liberal allotment of editorial writing.

He entered the Spanish-American War as a special correspondent of the Atlanta Journal, and "scooped" the universe on the location of Sampson's fleet when there was much mystery as to its whereabouts. He came out of the war as a full fledged Major of Infantry, having been advanced from a lieutenancy in the only Georgia regiment of volunteers that saw service in Cuba.

At the close of the war, Major Cohen returned to Atlanta and resumed his connection with the Atlanta Journal as managing editor. At the death of the late James R. Gray, he succeeded to the presidency and editorship of the newspaper.

Major Cohen is Democratic National Committeeman from Georgia, and holds an LL.D., degree from Washington and Lee University.

Hoover to Address Iowa Editors

The Iowa Press Association will hold its annual meeting at the Hotel Fort Des Moines, Des Moines, Ia., May 6, 7 and 8. The first day's program will be devoted largely to daily newspapers; the other sessions to all newspapers of the state. Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover is scheduled to be the chief speaker.

Average net paid Suburban Circulation	21,559
Average net paid City and Suburban	55,952
Average net paid Country Circulation	9,374
TOTAL AVERAGE NET PAID CIRCULATION	65,326

The postoffice statement of the second Syracuse newspaper (morning) is 55,034 and the third Syracuse newspaper (evening) is 47,884.

The Journal leads the second paper by 10,292.

The Journal leads the third paper by 17,442.

The Journal's city and suburban circulation is more than 1,000 greater than the total circulation of the second paper and over 7,000 more than the third paper has all told!

The Journal has the largest daily circulation ever attained by any Syracuse newspaper.

And the Syracuse Sunday American tops each of the other Syracuse Sunday newspapers in circulation. For the six months ending March 31 it was 78,873. For March, 1926 the Syracuse Sunday American was over 82,000.

How to Sell Your Audience!

Newspaper advertising space is the sale of white paper to reach an audience.

The nature and extent of that audience is largely determined by editorial appeal and journalistic skill.

O. C. Harn, of the National Lead Company, and President of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, recently wrote an article directed to advertisers, stressing the importance of "buying your audience," through careful study of A. B. C. reports and the study of correlating data.

Woolworth made millions by mass production and mass selling. The Tiffany fortune was accumulated by contrary methods. In between are many classes of successful merchandisers who are neither Tiffanys nor Woolworths.

Use the whole of your A. B. C. reports in "selling your audience" and selling your market.

One of the greatest achievements of the A. B. C. has been its assistance to publishers in this "selling of audiences."*

HIGH CABLE AND RADIO RATES BARRING PROGRESS IN WORLD NEWS TRANSMISSION

(Excerpts of an address on "Gathering and Dissemination of News" by M. Koenigsberg, president of the International News Service before the First Pan-American Congress of Journalists, Washington, April 7-13.)

IN our domestic gathering of news and its distribution we are employing some of the modern means of communication. The automatic electric typewriter is taking the place of the Morse operator. Channels capable of transmitting 60 words a minute to that mechanical marvel are replacing the old channels with less than half that speed. As a result, we have doubled the volume and promptness of our news reports without increased cost.

In the foreign field, however, in communication between the continents, we are practically at a standstill. The news associations and the newspapers are deprived of the great benefits of modern invention because of greed, or inefficiency or political jugglery or monopoly or international agreement. An international agreement makes it impossible for radio stations in China to operate across the Pacific. They can't send or receive.

The Japanese Government holds to a minimum 30 cent press rate for radio service, while the United States Navy Station at San Diego can give better service for six cents a word. We can get that service to Manila, but we cannot use it to Japan. I might go on indefinitely.

The American Publishers' Committee on Radio Communications owns a radio station in Halifax. We have a receiving station and a sending station. We have a satisfactory receiving arrangement. British, French and German stations send to us at Halifax at preferred rates. But our transmitting station, built for sending to England, is largely idle, because the Marconi company insists on its monopoly in eastward traffic from Canada.

Cable press rates to Europe remain unchanged, 7 cents to London, 10 cents to Paris and 14 cents to Berlin. Urgent rates are anywhere from three to four and one-half times as high. Press cable rates to South America are more reasonable, at 10 cents and 12 cents a word, with urgents, however, at $1.50 a word. Press rates to the Orient are ridiculous. Thirty-five cents a word press rate to China; 34¼ cents a word to Japan, with urgents at $2.76 a word and $2.16 a word respectively.

And urgents are used more and more frequently, as the competition between newspapers and press associations grows keener and as international events become matters of deeper public interest throughout the world. Years ago an urgent message was a rarity in foreign news gathering. Only the other day we used urgents exclusively in covering a tennis match between two young women in Cannes, France.

Years ago, when a wire was a wire and carried one message, there might have been some justification for these new high rates. But today, when science has shown how numerous messages may be transmitted simultaneously over the many channels to be found in one wire—and even over phantom channels between wires—today there should be a revision of cable rates to facilitate the dissemination of news over the world.

Look over the field of news communication as differentiated from the field of commercial messages and you will find that by some coincidence radio press rates are nearly identical with cable press rates—when radio is available at all.

In spite of tremendous stations standing in New York, available at practically all the American important news centers, and similar stations available at all the important South American, European and Oriental news centers, radio press rates to South America, for instance, are 10 cents a word, with the report from the Radio Corporation "that they cannot yet recommend the service for use by newspapers."

To Europe, the radio rate is practically the same as the cable rate and very much slower. To the Orient the press rate is 5 cents less per word to Tokio, with no service to Shanghai or Manila. Thirty cents is the radio rate to Tokio. The United States Naval Station, serving American press associations at cost, for transmission of messages to Manila, charges six cents a word. It does not cost one cent less to send a message to Manila over the radio than it does to send it to Tokio. Why the difference of 24 cents a word? Is a profit of 400 per cent necessary?

In wireless lies the future communication of newspapers and press associations. In wireless lies all our hope for that great forward step—a press association or two or three press associations combining together the peoples of the great republics of North and South America into one great union of knowledge.

Boundaries have their place but in this hemisphere at least they should not be allowed to serve as barriers to information. If we all can do our part toward the creation of economical channels of communication between all the peoples of the North and South—we shall have created a greater preventive of misunderstanding than all the diplomatic conferences that can be assembled.

We all know that radio communication has gone beyond the field of experiment. We know that radio and the automatic typewriter together can make the transmission of news so cheap that the newspapers of North America, through their press association, will be able to afford to gather the news of South America and the newspapers of South America will be able to afford to gather the news of North America in as great detail as they wish.

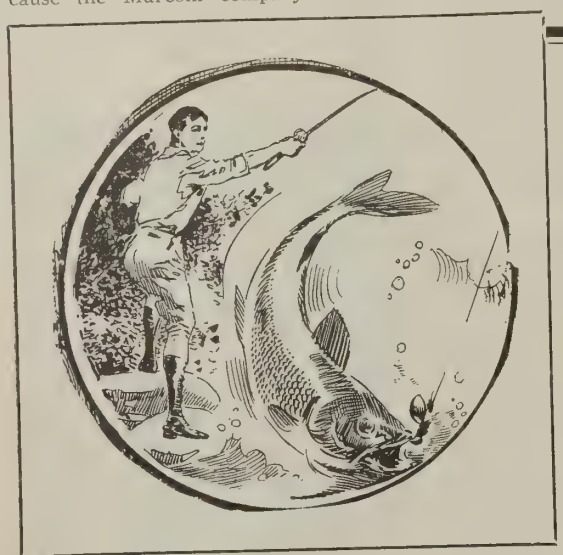
Every mail brings in more editorial comments from newspapers the country over, pertaining to the Times-Picayune Chair of Journalism at Tulane University, the great college of New Orleans.

LEONARD K. NICHOLSON



The Times-Picayune is celebrating its ninetieth anniversary by appropriating the sum of $6,000 annually for ten years to establish this department at Tulane.

The purpose of the foundation is to establish a course in "economics, literature, history, languages and possibly commercial law," in addition to the course in Newspaper writing under the best and most practical newspapermen possible to secure to head the department. The Times-Picayune has offered, also to assist by allowing some members of its newspaper organization to give practical help to students enrolled.

Tulane has accepted the gift from the newspaper, and the course will be functioning in September 1926; it will be in full running order when the Times-Picayune achieves its ninetieth birthday in January, 1927.

NO FISH STORY!

The Press-Guardian of Paterson, N. J. is the best advertising medium in the City

Prove it? Why certainly—

1. It is a clean, wholesome up-to-date newspaper that can be safely read by every member of the family.
2. It is the leading evening newspaper in an evening paper territory—4 evenings to one morning.
3. It is edited and managed by newspaper men with experience and with no political axes to grind. Its policy, which has been absolutely independent and fair, has brought it reader confidence unsurpassed by any other local newspaper.
4. It was the first and only choice of The 100,000 Group of American Cities, Inc.
5. It was Jason Rogers' first choice in Paterson because it gave the most intensive single coverage of the greatest purchasing power.
6. The Press-Guardian reaches and STAYS in more homes in Paterson and thriving suburbs than any other newspaper.
7. It has the highest local rate of any paper in Paterson.
8. It is the only paper that has shown a consistent growth in circulation during the past five years, while its morning competitor has not only stood still, but has dropped circulation in the past two years and its evening competitor, after spending $20,000 in an automobile contest, showed a slight gain, but not large enough to keep it from being the last in the field.
9. It was the only newspaper in Paterson, N. J., to show lineage gains in all three major classifications—Local, National and Classified in 1925 over 1924.
10. It is not obsessed, however, with building up lineage simply for lineage's sake, but refuses thousands of lines yearly because of poor credit ratings, etc.
11. During the past six months, October to March inclusive, The Press-Guardian carried more National lineage than either of its competitors.
12. The Press-Guardian is a member of the Associated Press and carries the complete NEA Feature Service.
13. The Press-Guardian is now installing a modern low unit type sextuple Duplex printing press to meet its growing needs and has recently purchased a 3-story corner building adjacent to its present property for expansion purposes.
14. The Press-Guardian established the first Merchandising Service Department in Passaic County and has route lists for all retail outlets for advertised goods available.

UNETHICAL PRACTICE OF "LIFTING" ARTICLES DENOUNCED BY MEXICAN EDITOR

(Extracts from a report on "Newspaper Ethics," presented by Dr. Juan José Tablada, director of El Universal, Mexico City, before the First Pan American Congress of Journalists Meeting in Washington, April 7-13).

NEWSPAPERS have the supreme function and indisputable privilege of being the disseminators par excellence of human thought. This supremacy cannot even be contested by recent inventions, such as the motion picture and the radio which need rather the newspaper to assure their efficacy. The advertisements of motion pictures and the broadcasting programs which the papers publish daily are conclusive evidence of this fact.

Newspapers are, therefore, the multipliers and accelerators of thought. Ideas or inventions destined to influence the moral or material world may be born in the laboratory, in the university, in the lecture-room or in a book, but without the newspaper to take up these ideas, multiply them, put them within reach of the masses and carry them to the farthest corners, the march of human thought across Time and Space would be slow and haphazard.

To this enormous force belongs a proportional responsibility, and this force and this responsibility are generated and ruled by two essential conditions which the press must have, conditions which cannot be valued one above the other or subjected one to the other, but which are interdependent and complementary.

These essential attributes are:

1. The Freedom of the Press.
2. Newspaper Ethics.

From these two attributes the newspaper derives its force and its authority: a periodical organ cannot exist which lacks either one or the other.

The newspaper which puts itself at the service of interests which are not directly related to the public interest and the welfare of society loses its quality and fails in proportion as it departs from this ideal.

Although I am glad to say that we are all pilgrims along the straight and open road, I believe that it is pertinent, for the sake of the prestige of the Latin American Press, to urge this enlightened Assembly to co-operate for the firm establishment of journalistic ethics and to fight for its unconditional acceptance and practice without any exception.

And now let us point out, quickly, certain deviations that should be rectified and which are due to lack of suitable preparation rather than deceit.

In our countries no preparation is necessary to be a journalist. Not only is it sometimes a career thoughtlessly chosen, but in many cases it is an activity engaged in by those who have failed in other fields, men who do not bring to the new enterprise any altruistic purpose, but merely a despairing desire for subsistence, for pecuniary success, or notoriety, and in many cases this results in anti-social impulses. All well organized societies have schools of journalism, schools that are urgent, necessary, whose establishment is recommended by the very program of this Congress, and in our countries we have done without these schools until now, with fatal results for the fundamental ethics of our profession.

This lack of preparation, this blind ignorance, this total unconsciousness, gives rise to breaches of ethics of which we professional journalists are the first victims.

I had thought of submitting a paper to this Assembly on an aspect of this topic of ethics: Respect for intellectual property, with the purpose of preventing this wrong of which we are made the victims by those who call themselves our colleagues. Doubtless there is not a single author here present whose name enjoys prestige who has not seen his productions reprinted without his permission in journals foreign to him. There is not a single important and reputable newspaper represented here that has not suffered from the plagiarism of articles for which it has paid, by unscrupulous newspapers. For my part I can say that among the papers that have taken my writings one has even dared to state that I was their special correspondent in New York, systematically appropriating the articles I had prepared for a reputable newspaper that remunerated my work.

The victims of these reprehensible practices are the authors, who are plundered of their property, "the most legitimate kind of property, intellectual," and respectable newspapers with which the unscrupulous compete without any difficulty.

Having in their hand, unknowingly, the enormous force which the newspaper signifies, some of these men, with no schooling and no notion of responsibility, are able to find their way into the enormous personnel of the big dailies and it is easy to see the dangers with which they can beset it.

Through the great desire for opportunity and pretext of sensationalism, news that appears innocuous, figures that seem truthful to the censor who is always under pressure of the incessant vortex of the daily paper, alarm is sown and panic spread, with grievous results; for you well know what laborious work it is to build and how easy it is, on the other hand, to destroy what has been built.

So these activities, which we might call reflex actions of the journalistic organism, are a constant threat to the results attained by the constructive elements.

Norman E. Mack

But he is more than that. More thoroughly than most men has he cultivated that quality which is called "knack"—the aptitude for political understanding and the art of politics.

Do newspapers sufficiently stress the importance of interesting young men and women in public affairs—in politics? Do publishers realize that today's dearth of public men of fine performance is largely due to somebody's failure to interest them in political, even party, affairs at an early age? Norman E. Mack speaks on a subject very close to his heart when he says:

"Interest young men and women in political affairs. We shall need them 25 years from now. One party or the other will need them. The nation will need them. Yet we are neglecting the very kindergarten.

"I came to Buffalo as a very young man. That night I followed the crowd to a political rally. The great leaders of the State were there in preparation for the state convention at Syracuse the next week. I was thrilled beyond description. I lived frugally the next few days and went to the Syracuse convention 'on my own.' Again I was thrilled by this making and unmaking of men. Right there an interest was born that has remained with me all my life. It has been my greatest diversion, a great joy, an interesting study, the source of superlative friendships.

"Political interest is a duty of citizenship. Don't confuse it with personal gain. Some wag once said: 'No man who went into politics for his health, ever showed much improvement.' He uttered a great truth if he used the word 'health' as a synonym for material things. I launched my newspaper for a livelihood but my interest in politics has always been a great leaven."

Although Mr. Mack has risen to great influence in the Democratic party, he has declined many proffers of office in favor of his first interest, newspaper publishing

LA NACION PAYS HIGHEST ASSESSMENT IN A. P., PRESIDENT NOYES SAYS

(Abstract of remarks by Frank B. Noyes, president of the Associated Press, and publisher of the Washington Evening Star, on "Gathering and Dissemination of News," before First Pan-American Congress of Journalists, Washington, April 7-13.)

THE news arm of the Associated Press is a far-reaching one, extending to the most remote corners of the globe and frequently bringing forth a thrilling story from the most unexpected, unlikely and sometimes hitherto unheard-of quarters. Only the other day it brought out from a small place in the Costa Rican hinterland the tragic news of a railway bridge collapsing under a heavily loaded passenger train, precipitating more than 200 persons to a sudden death. Again it reaches to the Asiatic steppes and reveals the finding of records and remains of ancient civilizations there, and sweeps over the wilds of Africa to report the progress of an explorer, or the news of a native uprising.

This vast reach is possible not alone through the staff and string correspondents which the Associated Press maintains at strategic points all over the world, but through its close touch with the network of affiliated news agencies whose services are at its disposal, as its home news field is open to them through their connection with it. Let some big news development be rumored in any quarter of the globe, and it is a question only of telegraphic, cable or wireless speed in transmission to put the Associated Press' news finger on the spot to press the key that will release the facts of the situation, whatever they may be, and lay them before its members for immediate use in the columns of their newspapers.

These things are interesting as showing the scope, the great reach, of the news-gathering end of the organization.

Both by cable and wireless the news is flashed across the water. All available means are employed, with the fastest and most reliable naturally getting the bulk of the transmission. Sometimes conditions are highly favorable to the use of wireless, and the radio then is extensively used. At other times, the signs of trouble being experienced along the air route, the shift is the other way, to the as yet more stable under-water means of transmission. On highly important bulletins, nothing is left to chance, and the big developments are flashed by both radio and cable, and frequently not only over one cable but by all cable routes, with the fastest in action getting the news in first and winning the honor.

In this way, duplicated, triplicated, quadrupled, comes the news of the crash of cabinets, the outbreaking of rebellions the fall of dynasties, and not infrequently the winning of high international honors in the world of aviation or in the field of sports. Frequently, the time of transmission from London or Paris is two, or three, or four minutes, and brief flashes have been known to come even in seconds. The relay to the Associated Press wire system is almost instantaneous, and not infrequently a flash is put on the wires in the New York Cable Room before the sheet on which it is received has been timed and pulled from the receiving operator's machine.

To discuss intelligently the expenditures of the Associated Press I must describe in a few words, the nature of that organization.

It is a co-operative, non-profit making association of more than 1,200 newspapers formed to exchange news between its members and to gather news independently for them and for them only, no service being sold, though agreements for the exchange of news have existed for many years with the Allied News Agencies headed by Reuter and Havas and the Canadian Press, which in its organization is closely akin to the Associated Press.

Its membership is mainly in territory under the American flag though many of the important newspapers of Latin America are full members.

With very few exceptions all the important newspapers of the United States are members.

I mention this for the reason that it has an important bearing on the question of expenditures as each member is obligated to furnish to his co-members in other places the news of his vicinity and this puts in the service of the organization an army of news gatherers who are not on the pay rolls of the Association, which, of course, greatly reduces its expenditures as an Association.

With this explanation, I may say that the average daily amount expended by The Associated Press in the collection and distribution of the world's news during 1925 was $20,049 reaching a total for that year of $7,317,956.59.

Of the total expenditures, the domestic news service absorbed approximately 80 per cent; 10 per cent of the entire sum covered the cost of the foreign news service, while administrative expenses absorbed 10 per cent.

Of the domestic expenditures $1,084,-223.19 was for rental of 117,656 miles of telegraph and telephone wires necessary to make the distribution to and collect the news from the members in the continental United States; $3,822,816.05 comprised the salaries of 1,125 Morse telegraphers and approximately 300 editors to man and file these wires. To serve the member newspapers not connected to the leased wire system, but receiving service by commercial telegraph or telephone companies or by cable and wireless to Latin America, Alaska, Hawaii and the Philippine Islands, $413,786.86 was expended for tolls alone. The state mail and other state services, exclusive of wire service, required an outlay of $526,-709.10, while telegraph tolls on gathered in news amounted to $92,058.84.

The foreign service cost $700,000 of which $300,000 was expended in payment of salaries to staff correspondents and part time men in that field, the balance was paid to cable and wireless companies for tolls on news brought in from abroad and for incidental expenses.

Administrative expenses included $388,-183.17 for salaries and $295,921.66 for rentals, furniture and the purchase of automatic printer equipment.

European news can be brought to New York at press rates of from 5 to 13½ cents a word, according to the capital from which it is sent, whereas it cannot for example, be delivered in Buenos Aires for less than from 17 to 23½ cents a word. Whether relayed at New York or sent direct by the ocean cables to South America, the tolls are either the same or cheaper by the New York route.

My information is that two cable companies are now operating between the United States and South America and one between Europe and South America with another projected. Three cable companies operating 13 cables and one commercial wireless company operate between Europe and the United States. Wireless communication with South America is not yet as dependable as between Europe and the United States.

The news sent by the Associated Press to its members in South and Central America is distributed chiefly by the All American Cables over a route extending 6,000 miles between New York and Buenos Aires. News to Mexico and Cuba is sent telegraphically, and the cost is relatively cheap.

The news is filed from the New York headquarters under the supervision of the Latin American Department.

The press rate from New York to Buenos Aires is 10 cents a word. A charge of ½ cent a word additional is made by the cable company for delivering dispatches at any point en route so that certain quotas of news that are delivered to ten or a dozen points carry a rate of 15 or 16 cents a word.

But considering only the basic press rate of 10 cents a word between New York and Buenos Aires and combining it with the press rates from Europe, it costs 17 cents a word to transmit a dispatch from London to Buenos Aires, 20 cents from Paris to Buenos Aires, 20 cents from Rome, and 23½ cents from Madrid.

Notwithstanding the tendency of these high rates to restrict the quantity of news, the maximum number of words sent to the principal members of the Associated Press in South America is nearly 5,000 words daily, and it can be safely said that, as a group, South American newspapers pay more for their news than any other group of equal number in the world. Indeed, La Nacion of Buenos Aires represented here today by its head, Jorge Mitre, pays much the largest single assessment in our organization.

The present rates to South America, however, represent a material reduction from what they were in years past and have made possible within the last seven years of an interchange of information between South America and the rest of the world that is immeasurably greater than existed previously.

This flow each way of legitimate, truthful news between two continents including Central America, Cuba and Porto Rico has served to bring us into much closer contact with each other and is, I think, helpful in the highest degree to the welfare of this hemisphere.

Newspictures for Newspapers!

VIRTUALLY every large or important newspaper in this country has accepted and now uses the picture as a news vehicle. The old time photographer has given way to the new style cameraman—the pictorial reporter. The American public, due to the movies and the use of pictures in publications, has become picture minded. And the progressive editor of today thinks in terms of pictures as well as in terms of text.

Consequently, the best picture service is a modern essential in the news room. This four year old organization, founded and maintained by the Chicago Tribune and the New York News, literally gives news service with pictures! Every news center is covered with a working staff, and P & A gets the cream of pictures from two thousand correspondents who serve P & A first.

Every means of quick and certain transmission of pictures is employed, regardless of expense—cable and telephone, planes and when necessary, special cars and special trains. So the publisher using P & A service is not only protected at all times, but constantly gets the best and newsiest pictures first. At least one paper in every large city is a P & A client!

This service, moreover, is relatively far less expensive than straight news service. P & A print services represent the best value in the field today. P & A mat services make the output and resources of this organization available to even the smallest papers for a few dollars a week. Wire any branch office, or see a P & A representative in New York during the A.N.P.A. Convention.

89 P & A cameramen cover principal cities

In addition to 2,000 correspondents stationed all over the United States, branch offices in principal European cities, P & A covers ten cities with adequate photographic staffs. The entire output of these staffs is exclusively P & A pictures.

DEVELOPING "WORLD-MIND" IN STUDENTS IS TASK OF JOURNALISM SCHOOLS

(Following, in part, is a report on "Schools of Journalism," presented April 13, by Prof. Roscoe C. E. Brown, acting director, Columbia University School of Journalism, before the First Pan Congress of Journalists meeting in Washington.)

WHILE schools of journalism originated in the United States and have spread here with great rapidity, we should be far from offering them as a perfect model for other countries that may desire to develop systematic training for the press. A useful school of journalism must shape its policy according to the character of the newspapers for which it prepares workers.

In the United States the predominant interest is domestic news, and what is called in office slang "entertainment copy," with the latter constantly pushing the former off the pages as the result of our peculiar "mass circulation" struggle. The existence of a vast public given to habits of at least rudimentary reading has stimulated the seekers for great circulations to publish large quantities of trival matter and to lay stress on sensational methods of presentation. This pressure for "mass circulation" concentrates attention in many quarters, on the technique of psychological appeal, on ways of putting things strikingly, somewhat to the sacrifice of attention to the substance and soundness of what is published.

Latin American seems on the whole to be free from that struggle for "mass circulation," which means reaching out to capture the interest of the less intelligent parts of the community. Perhaps the corresponding elements in the southern countries are not newspaper readers. At any rate a greater tendency appears there than here to be content with moderate-sized class circulations among the more intelligent and leading citizens. Typographical display is minimized. Omniverous news hunger is not the sole or chief appetite. The editorial, the feuilleton, the essay have a leading place. The record of great events in the outside world is not buried by local trivialities.

Now school training for such a journalism need never fall under the delusion that its job is to teach tricks of a trade and equip for technical dexterity in stimulating factitious interest. It may not fairly be supposed that such a delusion prevails in the United States. Yet, with the rapid springing up of so-called journalism courses, even in high schools, many persons have gathered the notion that facility to write in the current reportorial style is the essence of journalism. But all of the leading schools adhere firmly to the teaching that the essential equipment of the journalist is knowledge and more knowledge, and that his essential vocation is prophetic, to understand life in all its phases, and interpret it to his fellows.

A great deal of confusion has been caused by discussion of the relative merits of cultural or informational and technical study for journalism. What study is cultural and what technical? Is there anything impractically academic in the study of psychology that fructifies in understanding how to reach the minds of men in the mass? Is it trade school training to make the student of economic principles apply them to the actual working of the financial world of today? Is it technical or cultural to approach domestic and foreign politics from a contemporary point of view, to search out the historic background of present problems, to make the past furnish guidance for the present and at the same time make the present give vitality of interest to the study of the past?

Indeed, the very training in the practical matter of writing and editing with facility and accuracy is itself a part of the newspaper man's culture. Perfection of technique lies at the end of art and at the beginning of science.

When we recall how Michelson's interferometer opened the door for Einstein's philosophical imagination, we shall find no reason to fuss over attention to technique in professional training. As well complain that a medical college is a trade school because the surgeon teaches dexterity and skill in the use of instruments as to complain of a school of journalism because it focusses attention on the best use of the newspaper man's instrument, expression, for the special needs of a newspaper.

The School of Journalism of Columbia University has from the outset maintained this ideal of broad culture directed to meet with knowledge and power the problems of the world of today. Experience shows that its graduates are equipped for the everyday, practical work of their calling as well as with the something beyond that marks cultural leadership in a profession. Joseph Pulitzer, to whose foresight and benefaction it owes its existence, was interested, not at all in making skillful journeymen, but in developing a race of intelligent, conscientious statesmen of the Fourth Estate. We have sought to make practical and cultural training one. We have tried to develop in our students a world-mind.

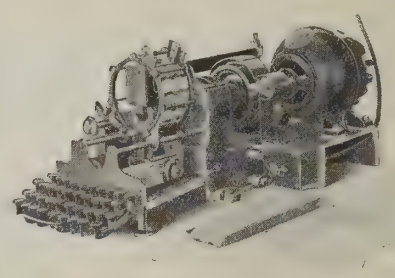
Addressing and Mailing Machines For Newspapers

The greatest system ever devised for handling mailing lists of any size for any purpose. All operations are done at high speed and printing process is done over a rotary drum, assuring perfect printing and keeping down the cost of addressing and mailing.

With this system the Circulation Manager has the lists under his personal observation and supervision—every new name, renewal, change of address, stop, etc., is taken care of up to within an hour of going to press or office closing time.



Get away from the old galley system; use your linotype machine for other purposes; increase the efficiency of both the circulation and mail room departments.

Ask any of the following newspapers who use the Pollard-Alling system to tell you what they think of it.

Imperial Plus Metal Plan Becomes Standard Practice

THOUSANDS of publishers now consider the Imperial Plus Metal Plan as standard practice in their shops.

Experience has taught them that the Plus Plan is the best means of keeping their type metal at its highest point of efficiency at all times, thereby adding years of working life to their metal. They find it economical and dependable. Many publishers tell us the Plus Plan has improved the appearance of the paper. These are the reasons why publishers consider the Plus Plan standard practice.

Here are the mastheads of a few of the thousands of newspapers that use the Plus Plan as standard practice in their shops. Please remember that no paper is too large or too small, either in size of shop or circulation for the Plus Plan to service its type metal economically.

If you are not using the Plus Plan, write and let us send you a copy, or better still, talk to our representative when next he calls.

FAKING BY FOREIGN CORRESPONDENTS AND UNRELIABLE NEWS SOURCES SCORED

(Abstract of remarks on "Newspaper Ethics," by John H. Fahey, publisher of the Worcester (Mass.) Evening Post, before First Pan-American Congress of Journalists, Washington, April 9).

THE greatest single influence on international relations today is that of the press. It is greater now than it ever has been and it will be greater in the future than in the past.

JOHN H. FAHEY

The war demonstrated the tremendous power of the press as never before in history it revealed great undeveloped reservoirs of power, which, even those most familiar with the mysteries of its influence, did not understand. It represents now the greatest single institution in existence, having opportunity to influence the peoples of the world for right or wrong. The daily newspaper is the popular university for millions of people.

I wonder sometimes if we fully realize as reporters, editors and publishers, the responsibility which rests upon us—the effect upon the public mind and on human happiness of our daily efforts. Are we discharging this responsibility, in the international field, as well as we should? I regret to say I do not think we are.

Of all of the factors which make for better understandings or for misunderstandings between the people of different nations, the character of the news exchanged and of editorial comment, undoubtedly, has the most important influence. It is the duty of those of us who participate in this conference, to constantly exert our efforts to consolidate the victories of peace we have already won. There is no public service we can render of such importance.

For these reasons it seems to me that the question of adherence to the highest ethical standards of journalism in correspondence concerning European conditions and the relations of the Western Hemisphere and Europe, is worthy of special consideration.

I do not wish to be unduly critical, but nevertheless, it is my firm conviction as a newspaper man, that the general character of the correspondence which has come to this country from Europe since the war and especially during the last six years, as well as that which has gone to Europe from the United States, is far from creditable to our profession and is susceptible of great improvement. I speak only of Europe and the United States, because, perhaps, there is less risk of being misunderstood. It is also true that my knowledge of news conditions as between Europe and the Central and South American countries is very limited.

I am well aware that the service rendered to North American newspapers from Europe by some of the responsible press associations has been excellent. Indeed, I think they offer very little room for criticism. I have a profound respect, too, for the careful work of a limited number of experienced special correspondents. Nevertheless, it is my opinion that the writings of an undue proportion of correspondents serving the North American papers from Europe, has been irresponsible, sensational, and superficial in extreme. Too many of them have devoted themselves to striving for first page "stories" where none existed, and manufacturing suspicions out of half truths when any calm examination of the facts would prove the falsity of their statements. I believe that most of this is due to lack of training, ignorance on the part of the correspondents of the problems concerning which they write, and unwillingness to really work and study the questions they are assigned to cover.

Abroad, there are too many newspaper men who are dealing with the great affairs of nations and peoples with a carelessness and abandon that would never be permitted by their editors in work under closer supervision. It is possible to perpetrate comparatively harmless "fakes" at home, although self-respecting publishers refuse to tolerate them, but the circulation by the press of falsehoods and unwarranted insinuations cabled from abroad, the only effect which is to produce ill feeling, too often brings results far beyond the first reaction. Our public is victimized by the constant use of words and phrases employed by our correspondents without due consideration. All too frequently when an important international conference is in progress, the representative of one nation who quietly sits down with another in an attempt to get his point of view is pictured as engaged in "intrigue" or "secret diplomacy." The necessary discussion in committee sessions of different points of view is constantly described as "bickering." The unwillingness of statesmen charged with grave responsibilities to sit in open convention in the presence of three or four hundred newspaper men when attempting to negotiate understandings, is concealment of important facts from the public. That old time friend "it is believed in official circles" covers a multitude of sins in the work of many correspondents and too often it happens that our journalistic experts on foreign affairs interview each other and then interpret the minds of political leaders with that well worn introduction "it may be stated authoritatively."

If more of our American and European publishers would attend a few important international conferences and observe for themselves coldly and without prejudice the activities of a considerable number of the foreign correspondents, they would have no difficulty in understanding the distrust of their work which exists amongst many statesmen.

Responsibility for international prejudices and misunderstandings does not, of course, rest entirely with the faking correspondent, culpable as he is. The sensational politician, sometimes self-seeking and sometimes merely ill-informed, is one of the chief factors. He can almost always be stampeded by a clever reporter into a hasty and unwarranted statement about the methods and motives of political leaders of another nation. The correspondents covering international political events well know the temperamental characteristics of some so-called statesmen whom they can usually goad into "making a story" out of very thin material and the result seldom conduces to international friendship and good will.

We are all equally familiar with the trick of quoting the sensational editorial utterances of an unimportant newspaper and making it appear as a serious expression of national sentiment.

I am well aware that there is often a twilight zone between the fields of legitimate and illegitimate news. There are times when some of the things to which I have referred represent news factors of unquestioned legitimacy to some degree, but I maintain that there are today too many correspondents who overstep the lines of legitimacy with reckless disregard of the ethics of this profession. For one, I believe that many practices still prevalent in international correspondence are unjustifiable and should be discouraged if the newspapers of the world intend to serve the pressing needs of humanity and to aid in constructive, useful upbuilding of tolerance and good will.

In the United States at least, exaggerated competition and undue haste, which provoke inaccuracy, are the chief causes of such unsatisfactory conditions as exist.

Finally the responsibility for better service rests not with the correspondents in foreign lands, often poorly paid and inadequately instructed, but with the editors and publishers at home whose duty it is to see that the news from abroad is as truthful and dependable as that gathered in the local field.

We have a right to take pride in the great gains we have made in the last generation but we should not be satisfied until as a result of better planning, better training, greater vision and more thorough study we have made international news and comment incomparably superior to that of the present day.

The world needs and craves friendship, confidence and prosperity. There is no force on earth which can do more to make them possible than the press. In this new day now dawning, therefore, let us resolve to recognize and remedy our own shortcomings; let us lead the way toward better understandings between all peoples and insist that no profession shall maintain higher principles of ethics and morality.

EXPANSION DRIVE PROGRESSES

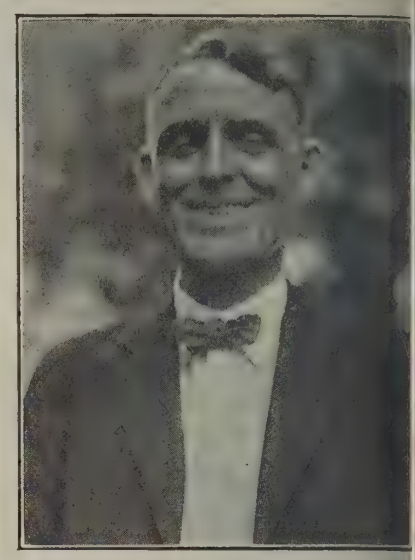
Local Advertising Clubs Rallying to Support A. A. C. W.

Local advertising clubs throughout the country are rallying to support the expansion campaign of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, Earl Pearson, A. A. C. W. manager, announced this week. An appropriation of $500,000 is sought.

The Advertising Club of Boston, of which W. F. Rogers, advertising director of the Boston Transcript, is president, held a banquet April 14, to discuss means of raising the minimum of $10,000 this local group has pledged to aid the parent association. The Advertising Club of New York has started raising a $100,000 fund.

This week the Advertising Club of Hartford, Conn., pledged itself to raise $3,000.

Mr. Pearson and Ed Green, director of the National Better Business Bureaus, Inc., are scheduled to attend a joint meeting of the directors of the Adcraft Club, Detroit, and the Detroit Better Business Bureau to be held April 22-23 to discuss the expansion campaign.



Western N. Y. Publishers Meeting

Members of the Western New York Publishers' Association were to hold a two-day convention in Rochester on Friday and Saturday of this week. J. Harvey Bachus of the Andover News was to speak on "Printing Costs" and Bristow Adams of the New York State College of Agriculture was to give an analysis of newspapers of the district included in the association. Entertainment was to be provided at the Eastman Kodak plant.

And thereby hangs tale.

When Capper was governor of Kan sas he took up golf. The Topeka Coun try club maintained about a dozen caddie at that time. One day late in Decembe the governor told the grounds keeper t have each of the caddies come to th state house the day before Christmas t receive a little present with his com pliments.

On the appointed day he laid in a sup ply of $2 bills and told his secretary t "send in" any boys that showed up durin the day. Soon thereafter the boys bega to drift in, at first one at a time, then i pairs, then in platoons. The boys range in ages from 3 to 30 years. They al admitted they were caddies at the Coun try club. The governor, every few min utes, would send down to his newspape plant for a new supply of $2 bills.

Finally when the office doors wer closed for the day the clerks cast u the figures and found that 486 caddie had tapped the governor for Christma presents. Governor Capper stood th gaff; he even smiled about it. But sinc that time he has been handing out hi Christmas remembrances to the caddie right on the golf links.

JOURNALISM SCHOOLS SHOULD DEVELOP TRAINED INVESTIGATORS SEEKING FACTS

(Excerpts from an address on "Objectives of the Schools of Journalism" by Nelson Antrim Crawford before First Pan American Congress of Journalists, Washington, April 7-13.)

THE school of journalism, in stating its objectives, often encounters misunderstanding from at least two quarters.

N. A. CRAWFORD

The university faculty, or at least the older and more conservative members of it, feel that it is too practical, too much concerned with technique, too greatly inclined to teach students how to make a living rather than how to live. On the other hand, practicing newspaper men criticize the school of journalism on the ground that it is theoretical, that it sends out men and women who are upholders of fine-spun theories rather than "merely good reporters."

The school of journalism must have as one of its objectives sound training in the technique of journalism.

What the technique of journalism comprises, is not wholly clear to many who argue about it, especially in academic halls. It is often discussed as if it consisted wholly in the technique of writing. "Why not merely give the student good training in the English department, instead of a course in journalism?" is a question often asked. It is true that ability to write is essential to the journalist. Moreover, he must be able to write in certain well-defined forms, such as the news story, the feature article, the editorial.

The technique of journalism, however, involves much more than merely the technique of writing and editing. Essential to useful journalism are incontrovertible facts and sound conclusions from those facts. The journalist is no mere repeater of talk; he is, or should be, a trained investigator seeking facts. This means that the school of journalism must train the student in standards of evidence, in order that he may be able to separate the true from the false, the sound from the specious. It must also insure that he shall gain a broad familiarity with subjects of human signficance and interest, including the social sciences, the natural sciences, and the arts, in order that he may not be led by ignorance into inaccurate or even ludicrous comment.

Nor is it too much to expect that the school of journalism shall, so far as a school can do so, strive to develop in the student the qualities necessary for successful converse with people, since the journalist must obtain the mass of his current information through direct contact with people and since the success of his work is measurable by his ability to reach the public with the truth.

A further objective of the school of journalism consists in the development of the professional spirit on the part of its students. To this end the history of journalism, the biographies of great journalists, and the ethical principles that should govern the profession, are emphasized. An effort is made to show the student that in his career he cannot be merely an individualist, upholding what personal principles he can, but that there must be a professional esprit de corps, that the individual must function as an integral part of an organism dedicated to the maintenance of specific standards and the upholding of specific ideals, and that in turn he shall be able to draw upon the resources of this organism. Individuality is a precious possession of the journalist, as it is of the lawyer, the physician, or the artist, but individuality is heightened, not lessened, by the maintenance of professional standards and the professional spirit.

The objectives of the school of journalism, whether directed to the present and future members of the profession or to the public, have human connotations far beyond the immediate relations of the press. No one who observes the trend of the times can fail to appreciate that the steady growth of contemporary civilization is retarded chiefly by unwillingness to face facts. The popular tendency is to apply the test of tradition, not the test of authenticity or the test of experiment. The average citizen today bases his politics, his religion, his social views, his economic attitude, on what his parents have held, or in some cases, on the opposite of what his parents have held. He rationalizes instead of thinking things out, whereas the only useful type of thinking, the only type that will direct active life into productive channels, is that which faces the world as it is. The press has an unequaled opportunity to re-educate the public on this realistic basis. Here, indeed, is an ultimate objective to which the day-by-day objectives of the school of journalism in cooperation with the press steadily tend. This ultimate objective is a world which realistically and courageously faces facts.

What makes the farm-relief crisis so cruel in the lives of Congressmen is that they used to be able to stall such things off with free garden seed.—Dallas News.

CANADA NEWSPRINT GROWTH A TRADE MARVE

Expansion So Rapid Conservative Elements Fear Overproduction — 25 Mills Now Operating Ha 5,700 Ton Capacity Per Day—To Add 17 New Machines This Year

EXPANSION in the newsprint manufacturing industry in Canada is one of the phenomena of the day in the industrial life of the Dominion. Viewed for a time by Canadians with a certain amount of confidence and pride, there is perhaps a tendency at present among the more conservative element in the country to question the wisdom of the rapid development now going on and in prospect. This has two angles, the one of perhaps more immediate interest connected with the effect of increased production on prices and consequently on the financial standing of the industry; the other of more remote, yet none the less serious consequence, bearing on the question of ultimate wood supply.

The physical position of the industry at the present time may be briefly summarized. There are approximately 25 mills manufacturing newsprint in Canada and these had at January 1, 1926, a combined capacity of 5,700 tons a day. Additions scheduled for 1926 include 17 machines with a capacity of 1,640 tons. These are being installed by the following companies:

	No.	Capacity		Date
Canadian International Paper Co.	1	85	tons	February
Canadian International Paper Co.	1	85	"	March
Canadian International Paper Co.	2	170	"	April
Keewatin Lumber Co., Kenora	1	125	"	March
Port Alfred Pulp & Paper Corp.	1	100	"	May
Port Alfred Pulp & Paper Corp.	1	100	"	August
Port Alfred Pulp & Paper Corp.	1	100	"	October
Port Alfred Pulp & Paper Corp.	1	100	"	December
Powell River Co., Limited	1	100	"	July
Powell River Co., Limited	1	100	"	September
Belgo Canadian Paper Co.	1	100	"	October
Belgo Canadian Paper Co.	1	100	"	December
Manitoba Paper Co.	1	100	"	December
St. Lawrence Paper Mills	2	150	"	December
Fort Frances Pulp & Paper Co.	1	125	"	December

By the addition of these machines the capacity of the industry will be brought up to 7,340 tons a day. Beyond this point, information becomes rather vague, though the indications are that in 1927 nearly as many machines will be installed. The Canadian International Paper Company are well ahead with their 400-ton mill at West Templeton, Que., and are concluding arrangements for the establishment of a large mill in the vicinity of Grand Falls, N. B. Associated with them in the development of Grand Falls will be the Fraser Companies Limited, who also propose to enter the newsprint manufacturing field. The Bathurst Company, Limited, have plans to enlarge their mill at Bathurst, N. B., from 65 to 265 tons, while another Maritime Province development that is talked about is the establishment at Liverpool, N. S., by the McLeod Pulp & Paper Company of a large newsprint mill. The Thunder Bay Paper Company, Limited, in Northern Ontario are expected to have at least one of four 100-ton machines in operation in 1927. Developments are also expected in the case of the Great Lakes Paper Company, Limited, Fort William, and more capacity will be in operation at Kenora. The Manitoba Paper Company's 250-ton mill will be completed. On the Pacific Coast, at least two projects for paper mills are in contemplation

It was the view of the president of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, Frank W. Clarke, at the last annual meeting of that organization in January, that there was no real reason for viewing the situation with concern. He said: "There is a tendency on the part of some to confuse the ratio of increased production in Canada with the ratio of world production, while, as a matter of fact, the increase of newsprint production outside of Canada is very considerably less than the increased rate of consumption. This, I believe, accounts for the fact that the often-expressed fear of an over-production of newsprint has in the past not been realized. It is true that at one time during the year the demand for newsprint fell off somewhat, but a reaction followed during the last quarter and conditions so improved as to absorb the entire output. The immediate future offers good promise of continued absorption. It has been demonstrated more and more every day that investments in advertising space are very profitable, and with the volume of advertising now carried by the newspapers showing no signs of diminishing, there is little reason to fear any immediate trouble from over-production so far as the newsprint mills of this country are concerned."

On the other hand and more recently the Pulp and Paper Magazine of Canada, which may be regarded as the unofficial mouthpiece of the paper manufacturers of the Dominion, sees cause for anxiety in the manner in which increasing production is leading to price-cutting. It said editorially on April 1: "A great deal of the underlying cause of price uncertainty, and the troubles that come with price-cutting could be avoided if the increase in production were kept somewhere within the limits of the known or probable increase in demand. When we consider that practically all of the additional newsprint will come from extensions to mills now operating, it seems rather foolish that the managers of these mills have not come together and arrived at some kind of an arrangement that would stabilize the development of the industry. And it is in the best interest of the country that they should do so."

Unquestionably the industry is expanding on the strength of expectations of ever-increasing demand from American publishers. Production in 1925 amounted to 1,522,217 tons, which compared with 1,530,318 tons by U. S. mills. Of this total 1,401,655 tons were exported, 1,320,602 tons or 94 per cent going to the United States. This was an increase of 127,971 tons over the amount shipped to the U. S. in 1924. While it is true that a certain amount of paper is being shipped to other countries and that this may be increased somewhat, it is regarded as doubtful whether an outlet for more than 150,000 tons can be found in this direction. As for the domestic market, Canada's consumption only runs to about 130,000 tons per annum and, owing to lack of expansion in business, there has been no increase for several years and there is little immediate prospect of any great growth in demand. It is therefore to the United States that the Canadian industry must look for the absorption of the rapidly increasing tonnage. Will United States newspapers continue to grow in size, in numbers and in circulation sufficiently to warrant the expansion? That is the problem.

In the meantime, Canadian newsprint manufacturers have been seriously canvassing the price situation. The cut from $70 to $65 a ton, effective this year, is held to have been both foolish and unnecessary. To quote the Pulp and Paper Magazine again,—"This ill-considered cut, that took effect on January 1, means that many companies can only meet the figure by cutting expenses at every possible point. This will mean the discharge of men whose services are not altogether measured in present production, but largely in future productivity. It means abandoning long term plans for forest management, and the spoiling of many acres of timberland to get cheap pulpwood for present needs. It means making the price of newsprint to the consumer inevitably higher than would ultimately be the case if a fairly high and satisfactory price were maintained from year to year, and an increasing, or at least a definite, proportion of this were invested in forest conservation."

The drop from $70 to $65 means a loss to the paper manufacturers of over seven million dollars a year and this, it is claimed, will prevent the setting aside of proper amounts for depreciation and wood maintenance, as well as making it difficult for some companies to pay dividends. Emphasis is laid on the importance of conserving the wood supply as a protection not alone to the paper manufacturer but to the publisher with his large investment in plant, machinery and goodwill, and this, it is asserted, is being jeopardized through price reduction.

There is exported from Canada annually to the United States a considerable quantity of pulpwood and for some time there has been an argument as to the desirability of taking steps, by imposing an embargo or an export tax, to put a stop to this export, reserving the wood for Canadian mills. It is wood that is cut from privately-owned lands, the various provinces having long since prohibited the export of wood cut on crown lands. It will be recalled that a Royal Commission investigated the question a year or two ago but made no definite recommendations, declaring that it was a matter for the Government to decide. The Canadian Pulp and Paper Association went on record in 1925 in favor of an adequate export duty on all logs and pulpwood exported from Canada, the proceeds of such tax to be devoted as far as possible to the conservation and protection of forests; this resolution was reaffirmed in 1926. Then to meet the agitation for an embargo or export tax, the Canadian Pulpwood Association was formed, with a membership made up principally of pulpwood exporters, and this organization has been carrying on propaganda work of an aggressive character during the past two years.

The situation today is that, while a few advocates of an embargo continue to carry on an agitation through letters to the press, the question is not a live issue. So far as the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association is concerned, it has taken no further action to bring its resolution officially to the attention of the Government. The belief is fairly widespread that, with the increase in the number of pulp and paper mills in Canada and the consequent enlarged demand for pulpwood, exports will gradually diminish without the application of any artificial means of restriction. As it is, the quantity of pulpwood is not increasing to any alarming extent. The following shows the movement, in cords:—

	Production	Used in Canada	Exported
1908	1,325,085	482,777	842,308
1913	2,144,064	1,109,034	1,035,030
1918	3,560,280	2,210,744	1,349,536
1919	3,498,981	2,428,706	1,070,275
1920	4,024,826	2,777,422	1,247,404
1921	3,273,131	2,180,578	1,092,553
1922	3,923,940	2,912,608	1,011,332
1923	4,648,663	3,264,433	1,384,230
1924	4,647,201	3,316,951	1,330,250
1925	(not available)		1,423,502

So far as Canada's resources in pulpwood are concerned, the Royal Commission appointed two years ago to investigate the subject reported a total stand of species ordinarily used for pulp of 1,418 million cords, but of this only 630 cords were considered accessible. This amount would supply the present annual cut of 4,650,000 cords for 135 years, leaving ample time for renewal. The estimate, however, includes 194 million cords poplar and Jack pine, very little of wh is now used in Canadian mills, and pr ably only half this quantity will utilized for pulp. Assuming that so new sources may meanwhile be m accessible, it is doubtful whether m than 600 million cords of usable pulpw are in sight at present, disregard natural increment. In the meantime, t supply is being annually depleted by f insects, decay and cutting for other p poses, so that there is an annual de tion exceeding 20 million cords. If t continues, 30 years will see the last the present merchantable stand. But cutting of pulpwood is expanding and d ing the last 17 years it has increased an average rate of 210,000 cords per num. If this rate of increase contin the cut in 1930 will be 5,750,000 cords in 1940, 7,850,000 cords.

On the other hand, Roland D. Craig the Dominion Forestry service says, "C ada is fortunate in having more t sufficient land to meet any demands wh are likely to be made on them, if t are properly handled. About 1,200, square miles is primarily forest land of this about one-half is so located t the timber can be economically grown utilized. An annual increment of onl cubic feet per acre on this accessible a would supply our present industrial domestic requirements. Fifteen cubic f per acre should leave a sufficient mar for unavoidable loss from fire, insects disease. Twenty-five cubic feet wo allow for a very large increase in consumption. . . . . The forests of C ada have wonderful recuperative pow in spite of the use and misuse to wh they have been subjected."

Some progress is being made towa the application of improved silvicult practice. Old Dominion forest reser every timber sale is now made un specific cutting regulations and four serves have been placed under work plans to be operated on a felling bud determined by rate of growth. In Brit Columbia, complete utilization, which the best means of securing desirable production, is required on all timber sa In Quebec, and Ontario all recent sa limit the cut to a proportion of the e mated annual growth. Pulp and pa companies are gradually and system cally adopting improved methods wh will ensure adequate reproduction each year sees more attention paid fire protection. The work of such ganizations as the Dominion Fores Association, the Dominion Fire Prev tion Association and various provinc bodies is unquestionably having an fluence for good and tending to bri about a strong public opinion on the s ject.

JUDGE LIMITS WRITERS THEN RELENTS

Order Forbidding Reporters to Print Names of Jurors in Pueblo Trial Rescinded When Case Opened

Newspaper men, covering the cases against bankers prosecuted in connection with the failure of the Globe National Bank of Denver, were given instructions by U. S. Judge Foster J. Symes not to publish names of jurors, even after the juries are selected, and to make no comment whatever on the cases except to state the bare facts as revealed in the courtroom.

However, when the case was called April 12, Judge Symes freely gave out to newspaper men the complete panel of jurors after the case was under way. The reason for this reversal of the Judge's earlier order was not learned. Reporters meticulously observed, however, the Judge's further order that editorial comment be omitted from their stories and that only the facts in the case as brought out in court be published. The cases, through the upshot of a Denver bank failure, are being tried in the district court at Pueblo, Col., "as a precaution to make certain that the Denver bankers will have a fair and impartial trial," Judge Symes announced. The unusual newspaper ruling issued to reporters was inspired by the same desire for fairness to the accused, it was stated.

Judge Symes intimated also that any reporter who disobeyed the court's instructions in the reporting of the case, would be barred from the courtroom. He also intimated that he would cite editors before him for contempt in case of violation of the order.

This New Service to The Nation's Press

THE editor who constantly studies his paper to see how he can turn out a better sheet realizes that its quality reflects the average of ability of his staff. He will improve his paper most noticeably not so much by the adoption of more progressive policies as by increasing the average of ability of the men who write his front page each day, or each week.

A paper is no better than its editorial staff. Since editors frequently have their days occupied with more varied duties and civic demands than even the mayor has, they do not have time to train their staffs as they would like to. And with business interests and other papers constantly picking off the best reporters and copyreaders, the proper training of new men presents a serious problem.

Men who come to the staff with some journalistic education, if they also have some natural ability, sometimes develop very well. Most new reporters, however, have not been able to get practical training of any sort and so commence as cubs; and in a busy shop most of their coaching comes in the form of reproof for mistakes.

When the Newspaper Institute, a few months ago, announced its home study course in Newspaper Writing in the New York manner by the Copy Desk Method, it believed that most of the demand for this training would come from men and women outside the business who desired either to enter newspaper work or to become more proficient at general literary endeavors.

Greatly to our surprise we have had many active newspaper men make inquiry about our course, have received much commendation for it from newspaper men, and have enrolled not a few who are studying it. This response has been indeed gratifying. We have been told that this crystallization of the best methods and manners of the New York press, assembled in this course for the first time they have been recorded anywhere, is regarded as an extremely valuable training and lexicon for the press at large.

We have the indorsement and co-operation of leading members of the New York press in the administration of this course and desire that this newly-available training be made as useful as possible to the press everywhere.

A. N. P. A. delegates are cordially invited to visit the Institute's offices at Suite 1108, 25 West 45th Street, to examine the course, to meet our officers and to ask for information regarding our plans and purposes.

tures in Exports" (Saturday Evening Post, April 10) calls lumber export a "romance"; its activities encircle the globe, our Federal Lumber Export Service is the largest in the world. We have a dozen commercial softwoods, two-thirds of our total lumber is of the lower grades and will increase as the logs grow smaller. Lumber export developed mainly since the war. Lumber Division of Export Service makes reports that are textbooks for the loggers and millmen. It establishes connection for the trade and "helps combat propaganda circulated among foreign dealers that our forest resources will soon be exhausted," and so forth.

Marcosson further shows that since 1922 we have come to dominate foreign markets with our doors, have grown rapidly in export trade of wooden boxes (wooden boxes are now said to take 8,000,000,000 cubic feet of our cut, more than twice the entire demand of our whole paper industry). We have more than one thousand exporters. Activity increased greatly when the service got us into the door export business.

Marcosson ventures to state that this export business is a strong aid to national reforestation. One at once asks why.

Obviously Marcosson does not state this ironically. The writer ventures to recall that one editor dared to write ironically that increase of slums and infant mortality would be a good thing since it would bring about elimination of slums by a burst of popular indignation.

Yes, speeding up this export might work beneficially for reforestation, provided it roused our demand for proper handling of the lands and proper cutting and preservation of the forests. But why be so fatuous? The present writer does ask, both seriously and ironically, "Isn't this sport, this burning the ship to make it go faster?"

Returning to Donovan once more. He does point out the real solution of the timber destruction matter. He quotes a logger.

"I wonder if it is so important that we slaughter the last of these trees? Substitutes have been found. Twenty to twenty-five years from now, except for interiors, I doubt if lumber will be used. Must we go ahead and destroy all these remaining watersheds and playing places just when America is learning how to play? We must quit sometime. When we quit there will be just as many investments to be lost as there are now.

"Serious things do not interest many of us, unless they touch our pocketbooks. Well, pretty soon, we may have a revolt of the playing children of the land. While we can replace lumber in building, we cannot put God's own acres of hills and trees in place. Not in a generation or two generations.

"Grays Harbor ships a billion feet a year and boasts of it. Half the shippers lose money. They celebrate the billionth foot. They ought to hang up mourning for it."

Comment such as this from the so called "front line" merits acceptance.

How can we reduce excessive cut of forest reserves?

Hubert Work, Secretary of the Interior, asks that all sale of government-owned timber be stopped for ten years. That's interesting. The government timber supplies but five per cent or less of our lumber cut. While we would have better control of the then final reserves, this would cripple the management of our Forest Service and remove the one real example of well-managed forests cutting only the matured crops.

The remedy is to be found only in a much more drastic and rapid reduction in forest cut now and henceforward.

Dr. George Otis Smith, director of the U. S. Geological Survey, pointed out the one really hopeful side of protection of forests by increasing use of the mineral products and steel. (EDITOR & PUBLISHER, April 18, 1925, Pp. 74-75.)

Dr. Smith pointed out that had it not been for the change from the former large dependence on wood for engineering and construction, we should have far smaller forest reserves than we have even now.

He made clear that we were revamping our material civilization by these newer products; that great increase of mechanical power and machine handling had given us the mastery and management of these materials. He showed that these materials fitted our growing demands and were far more permanent, that this demand was for permanency and fire safety so far as possible.

Director Smith, speaking on the growth of mechanical power, first by coal and then by oil and water power, stated that our transportation, our engineering and our structural works were rebuilt entirely by the available power translated into terms of steel and the minerals. On the fuel item alone he gave credit to coal for having saved the forests from complete extinction like China's. He said that were we to return to wood fuel for locomotive power only we would consume all the standing cordwood and merchantable timber in thirteen years.

He spoke of the thousands of everyday utensils that were once made almost entirely of wood that are now of the metals, showed that the real solution of the forest supply would be economic rather than merely political and urged, "Speed the day when we wake up to a full realization of the power of the mineral world to save the vegetable world from the vast burden of trying to house our nation." He asked that we save our forests for the higher needs or higher utilization of that tree vegetable cellulose which supplies our greatest and most economic store of raw material for the new and marvelous uses that chemistry is unloosing for our growing social and economic needs.

In 1915 studies made by the Forest Products Laboratory of the Forest Service showed rates of change and gave fundamental and economic reason for the progress of change. Those are still good today and can be brought up to date by any thoughtful reader.

The general tendency of the economic and other factors is apparently to decrease the use of lumber in building construction. Lumber consumed in building in 1915 was 71 per cent of the total. It had fallen off fifteen per cent in total volume since 1907. Per capita consumption had fallen from 516 board feet to about 375.

President Coolidge told us recently that it had now fallen to below 300 board feet and in some Eastern sections to 160 board feet.

Continuing, the Forest Service report of 1915, on the causes of change fro lumber and wood use, states substa tially that:

The safety-first idea caused the chan to steel cars and has spread wide from that.

In building construction highly i creased demands for service in i broadest sense, growing recognition the common fire menace and growi insistence on safety in building constru tion are leading reasons for the chang

The use of competing materials w ultimately depend mostly upon the utility, or service and ultimate cost compared with wood.

More than 75 per cent of the replac ment of lumber has taken place in spi of the higher initial cost of the cor peting materials. This holds true ge erally in transportation, ships, furnitu building construction and many oth fields.

The growth in use of competing m terials is said to be due largely to th aggressive advertising and telling t people.

Lumber is suffering the competition competing materials such as pulpwo for paper being able to outbid it for t timber supply. This increases the lu berman's difficulties.

The recent progress and change c be summed up by quoting a current par graph that covers the last fifteen yea This statement comes from within t lumber industry and from an autho tative source:

"In the last fifteen years act physical volume of building has creased 100 per cent, lumber has fal off ten per cent in the softwoods a 30 per cent in the hardwoods, wher

SCHOOL IN CHURCH ADVERTISING

ASSOCIATED ADVERTISING CLUBS OF THE WORLD — TRUTH

—Don't fail to attend—

Eminent men will discuss church advertising methods at the departmental sessions of the Associated Advertising Clubs convention in Philadelphia, June 19-24, 1926.

One advertising expert will demonstrate and explain actual samples of church advertising copy.

Time has been set aside, also, for an open forum when there will be opportunity for questions and answers.

brick has increased 100 per cent, cement 130 per cent, structural steel 140 per cent, prepared roofing 300 per cent, steel frames and sash 400 per cent and wall board 300 per cent. In the last five years wood shingles have fallen off 25 per cent while tile roofing has increased 323 per cent."

Adding this to the previous report of the Forest Service about brings this phase of the subject down to date. Mr. Donovan's logger friend would like to read the above paragraph. It might prove a ray of hope to him, and a promise of stoppage to the riotous waste of the effort to hold down costs and so hold markets by the practices now used in lumbering, leaving so much behind and destroying the growing forest because the industry cannot carry the burden of sustaining itself in this fierce struggle.

One more reference to the power of turning public sentiment or rather the awakening of public common sense to action is here given.

In the Dec. 26 issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER was published an item regarding the interest in New York City in the danger of conflagration from excessive areas of wooden buildings.

This condition roused public interest during the general public hearing on the housing question. The architects, fire department officials, insurance engineers, financing agencies and the State Housing Commission, too, stand strongly against this vast growth of massed frame construction. They have asked for new zoning rules to stop future similar growth. It was shown that over thirty thousand such buildings were erected each year, that the excessive risks both to the invested capital and the income-return strength of this capital was forcing excessive insurance margins, both against fire and for return of capital.

This example of public interest is just one more indication of how the change of economic practices can work and does work out in large way the needed readjustment between forest drain and forest restoration. While there is no thought of effort to save forests, there is a manifest determination that it will be unwise to burn the forests in the form of square miles of city dwellings.

No such outburst of public interest can go unheeded. It is believed by the groups named that the correction will be secured. The far-reaching influence of such moves cannot be easily told. New York is builder of one-tenth of the country's total. Others would follow.

The advent of further competitors for wood pulp should be given brief notice here and should be thoughtfully considered by those who wish to understand influences affecting the forest industries.

"Rayon activity," it was recently stated by a paper mill executive, "has boosted our prices on sulphite considerably. The effect of this new industry may well be large."

A few condensed facts on rayon follow: World growth has been from ,000 tons in 1912 to 63,000 tons in 1924. The United States growth has been from 00 tons in 1912 to 27,500 tons in 1925. World output for 1926 is calculated at 0 per cent above 1925. Actual capacity f European mills is stated to be planned be doubled during 1926.

Thirty-eight per cent of the rayon tal volume uses cotton linters; the ther 68 per cent uses spruce sulphite r its raw material.

Rayon takes 2,000 pounds of sulphite d turns out 1,500 pounds of rayon. he sulphite pulp, at about four cents a ound, is turned into three-fourths of pound of rayon worth about $2 a ound.

The most enthusiastic predicters of yon growth have been surpassed by e actual growth.

Hark back if possible to what was e public and the industries expectation paper use for wood pulp 50 years ago. nd now look at the industry and its sition as regards pulpwood supplies.

The demands or askings for reforestaon have been beggarly. Therefore: ngress has not yet learned to respect restry projects as it could and should d would.

Just why the representatives of the wood-using industries should be so modest is not evident.

The two main Census Groups of Industries, "Paper and its Re-Manufacturers" and "Lumber and Its Re-Manufactures," have combined capital investment of $5,000,000,000; employ 1,350,000 wage earners; pay wages in excess of $1,400,000,000; include 75,000 establishments and create an annual product valued at $5,578,055,000.

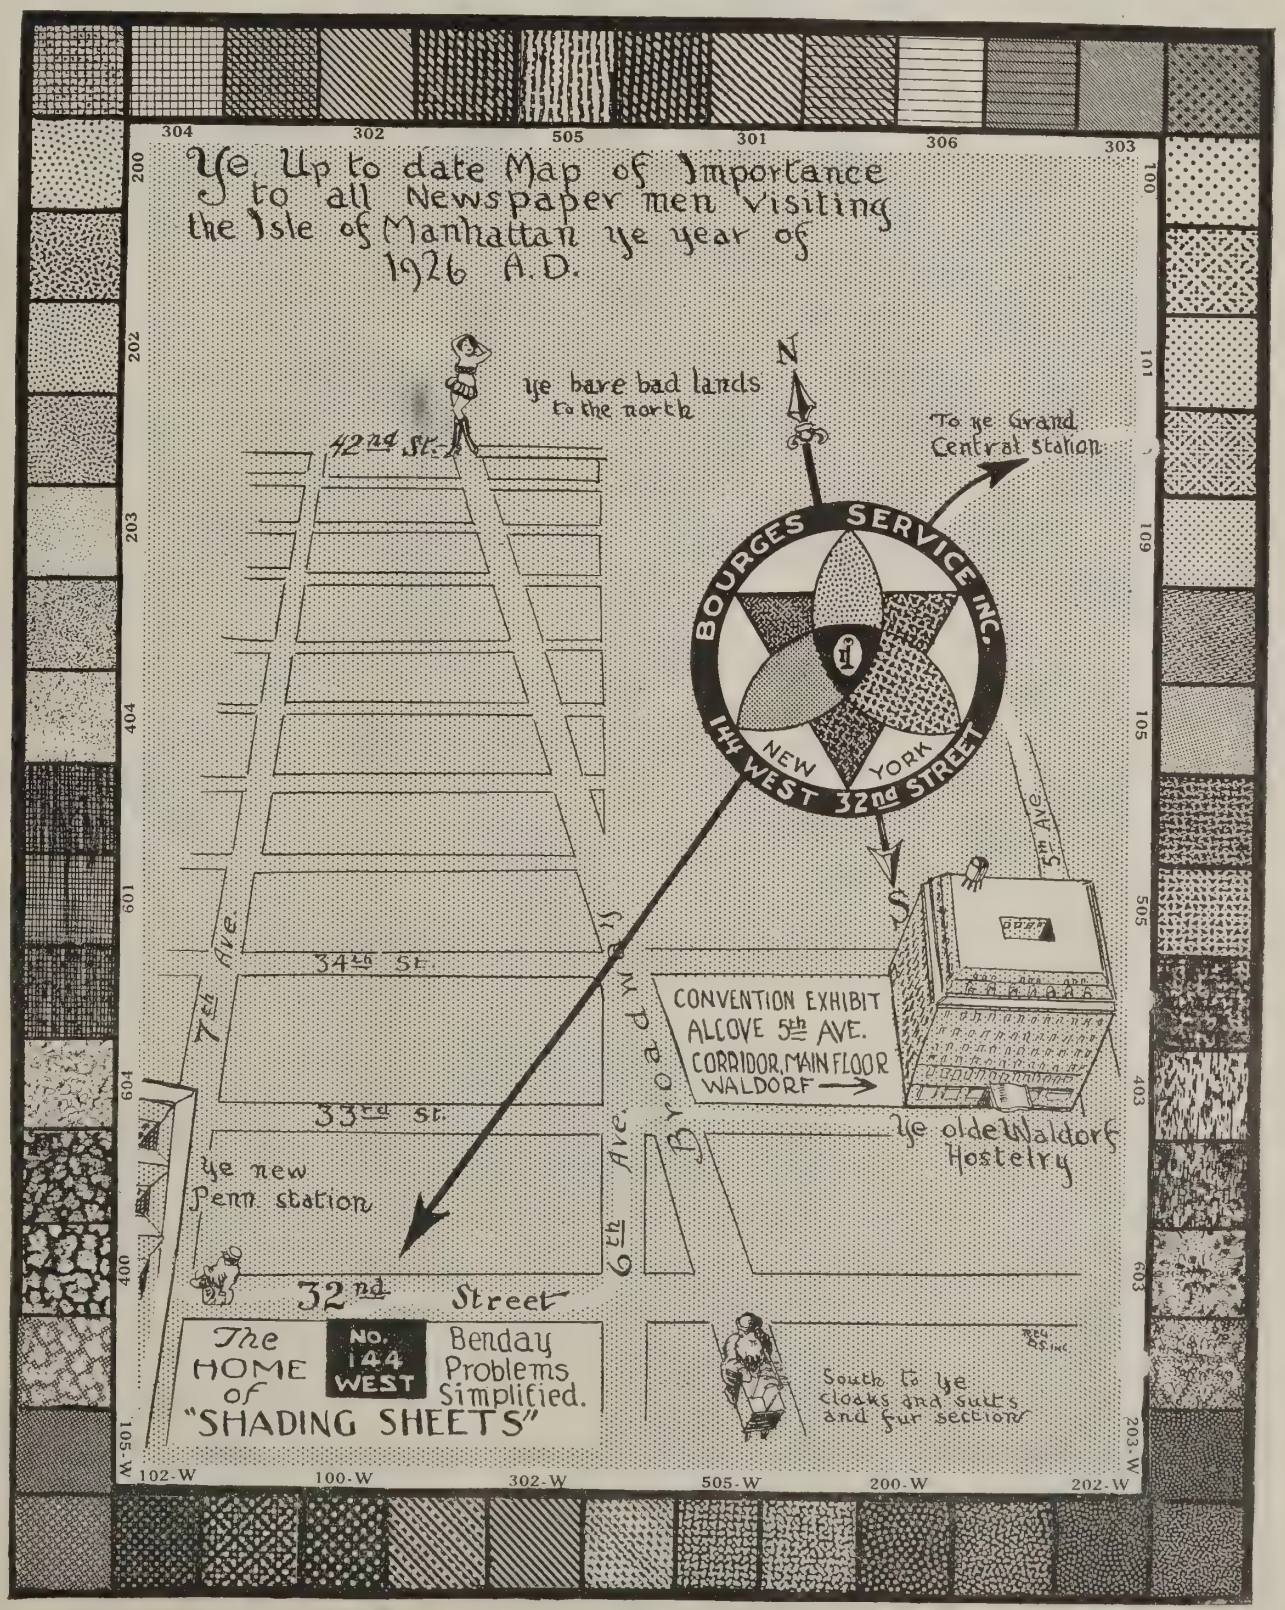
But the chosen representatives of these groups go timidly to Washington and spend days asking for a paltry $40,000,000 for a ten year new forest project. All are agreed that the very life of these industries depends upon a big program of new forests. All agree that the Federal policy and program sets the pace and is the real core of the whole movement. State and private policies follow the national.

Congressman Haugen is justified in asking what the whole thing is going to cost. Any business man demands to know what he is entering upon when a business project is put up to him. Haugen does try to inoculate legislation and appropriations with some bacteria of business sense.

There can be but one of two conclusions drawn. The first is that the advocates of reforestation do not know what they want and therefore do not ask for it. The other is, that they do not dare to ask for it because the request would be so large that they fear failure.

Puttering around on this project of interesting the United States in reforestation will not get us far. We will be decades in getting a worth while definite program and policy established. It is high time for real reforestation friends to know what they want, recognize that the job is a big one and admit it; then get on the job and ask for a national policy and program that will get results.

Although the writer has shown that the total results to date are negligible, he does not make any criticism of those who have obtained that progress. More credit to those few who have done it. They have worked in face of all the initial difficulties, the principal one being the inertia of the very industries they seek to aid.



That the business interest and the moral responsibility of the publishers is second to none is obvious. Their opportunity to study and know the subject and then tell their readers about it, is still more obvious. This is Forestry Week.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

o EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Is it perned for one who is not in the newsr business to make a remark or ? Your publication happens to be in home every week, and reading it one not be other than impressed with the derful standards of propriety (or l we call it a code of ethics) that y governs the newspaper world. We nothing like it in my profession—trical.

ut what prompted me to write you is ecent experience of mine in some England cities like Holyoke and fisfield, Mass.; Waterbury, New Lono and Meriden, Conn. Breaking in a act in vaudeville one naturally buys newspapers to read the criticisms to out the public's reaction. But this hat I found in all these places—the cisms were written by the theater's s department. In places where there e more than one newspaper the critiis were always the same, though in a while one would find a paraph slightly changed. But the most hem did not even take that trouble. y one newspaper had the honesty to its readers know that the review was sponsored by its editorial depart-t, for it frankly placed "Adv." at end.

would seem to me that these newsers would gain reader confidence, and the same time lose practically nothing business way if they would print trical criticisms that truly mirrored thoughts of the reviewer they choose end.

Sincerely yours,
BESSIE WYNN.

Sylvester Appeal Not Dismissed

In the April 3 issue, EDITOR & PUBLISHER stated that the $25,000 suit of E. Rodgers Sylvester against New York Herald Company publisher of the New York Telegram had been dismissed by the Court of Appeals at Albany. This was erroneous, the case being argued at that time on appeal from a dismissal by a lower court. The decision of the Court of Appeals will probably be rendered shortly after May 3, when the Court reconvenes after an adjournment, Otto Sommerich, attorney for Mr. Sylvester stated. Sylvester sued when a booklet, "History of Classified Advertising," written by him while in the employ of the Telegram, was issued under the name of Gilbert Gunderson, then classified manager.

"Newspapers," he explained, "are supported by the people, and should, I think, assist them in obtaining an education in part payment for that support. We should, of course, attend to our business of presenting the news of each day thoroughly, but we can also add to the culture of our readers; and that is what I am trying to do."

Three years ago El Comercio completed a new six-story marble home. On the second floor is a spacious auditorium in which everything but politics may be discussed. It is used for discussion of labor problems. Prominent speakers come there to talk on matters of public thought. It is a center for social welfare work, for philanthropies.

"We offer this auditorium as one place where human ideas may be diffused," Dr. Quesada said. "But we also regularly give space in our paper for the same purpose.

"We have one special page every Sunday which we give over to our readers as a sort of newsprint auditorium. On that page they can talk among themselves—ask each other questions, of history, perhaps, on literary subjects, legal matters, philosophy.

"I myself have been particularly interested in the mental tests originated in this country. During the last seven months I have written a series of weekly articles on this subject, telling their history and the application of these tests to education. Teachers of Peru have shown considerable interest and I hope while I am here to obtain more details to give them."

Dr. Quesada said El Comercio hoped soon to establish a medical clinic, to offer its services free to readers of the paper.

"The public service a newspaper performs pays for itself in increased circulation," he said. "We depend upon our circulation for support. Advertising has not been developed in Peru to the extent it has in this country.

"Our paper sells for 5 cents daily, which corresponds to two cents here. We average between 12 and 14 pages in our morning and evening editions, with between 16 and 20 pages on Sundays. We sell our newspapers to the newsboys at four cents a copy. About a third of our circulation, which is about 28,000 for the morning edition and 22,000 for the afternoon, are regular subscribers to whose homes the paper is distributed.

"Even without large-scale advertising support, we are able to make money, because our production costs are so much lower than they are in the United States."

Dr. Quesada pointed out that his paper was "united with North America, through its equipment." A new Hoe press was recently installed; the paper has long been set by linotypes and monotypes manufactured in the United States; and the newsprint is also imported from this country.

El Comercio is one of the oldest newspapers in Peru, having been established in 1839. Fifty years ago, Josi A. Miro Quesada, father of the present director, became its owner. At present it is managed by four brothers, three of whom, in addition to Dr. Quesada, are professors in the University of Lima.

Peruvians believe in holding fast to old traditions. The exterior of El Comercio's plant, therefore, is of pure Spanish architecture. Within, however, it is as modern in every detail as the best equipped North American newspaper structure. The entire building is used by El Comercio. The first floor houses the editorial rooms, composing rooms, and press room, arranged so as to avoid loss of time and wasted motion in production. On the third floor a photo-engraving department has recently been installed.

One interesting room in the building, as it was described by Dr. Quesada, is bare of all furniture with the exception of one ornate cabinet which stands in a corner and is filled with swords.

"We use this room for fencing practice," he explained. "While dueling is no longer legal in Peru, it is permitted by custom."

He hastened to add that he himself had never been forced to fight in defense of his honor, but, he said, he has acted as a second on numerous occasions.

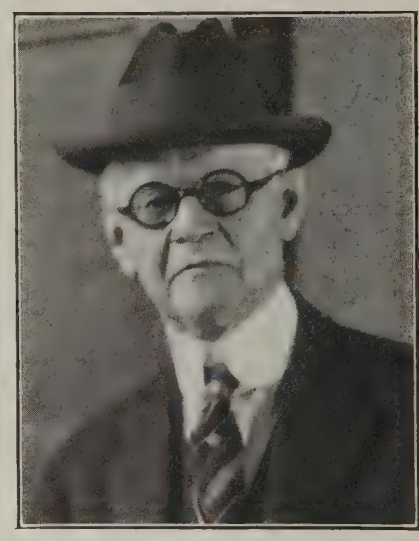
Dr. Quesada was once Mayor of Lima. He refused, however, to discuss Peruvian politics, when interviewed, declining even to talk on the Tacna-Arica question for publication.

He addressed the First Pan-American Congress of Journalists in Washington, April 12, on "Newspaper Organization."

NEWCOMBE BILL OPPOSED

Publishers Attack Measure Making It Felony to Print Women's Names

Frederick H. Keefe, publisher of the Newburgh (N. Y.) News, representing the New York State Publishers' Association, the New York Associated Dailies, the New York Press Association and the Publishers' Association of New York City, appeared before the joint codes committee of the legislature at Albany, recently, to oppose the bill making it a felony to publish the names of women in criminal assault cases. He declared there is no necessity for the proposed legislation as newspapers are exercising a voluntary censorship under which victims of such crimes as the bill is designed to cover are amply protected.



The bill was drafted by Richard S. Newcombe, district attorney of Queens county, and was supported by delegations of women's organizations. Mr. Newcombe said the bill "is the only way to reach the very small group of publishers who haven't the decency to stop printing such stuff."

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Frank H. Burgess

"THE Insect," as Frank H. Burgess is known to the newspaper fraternity, weighs 103 pounds when he has been not-eating. Which is what adds poignancy to this drama of real life which took place recently in the office of the McCross (Wis.) Tribune.

"I want to see the boss," demanded a pompous individual with an impressive and compelling personality—one of these high-pressure go-getters, you know, with a wonderful front."

"Yes, sir. What can I do for you?" said Burgess, who really is a good head taller than the counter in the business office.

"Say, kid, don't get fresh with me!" exclaimed the visitor. "I said I wanted to see the boss—get me? The boss!"

Well—that's all, unless you count the appearance of the erstwhile go-getter a few minutes later as he went slowly out of the front door. He was astonished. Yes, he was astonished, to put it mildly. And there was nothing new in his order book.

Roster Leaves Corpus Christi (Tex.) Caller to Handle Community Drive

Charles Roster, advertising manager, Corpus Christi (Tex.) Caller, has resigned to open a branch office of Coulter & Payne, Inc., San Antonio advertising agency.

Mr. Roster is succeeded by George E. Smith as advertising manager. Gilbert F. Vetters has been transferred to the advertising department from the circulation department. A. P. Herndon, formerly news and telegraph editor, will divide his time between the editorial and advertising departments, while Victor H. Herold has taken over the telegraph desk of the Caller.

Mr. Roster will conduct the Chamber of Commerce advertising campaign during the coming year, using Middle Western newspapers as media. A budget of $60,000 is being raised for the Chamber of Commerce, approximately $45,000 of which will be expended in newspaper advertising.

eliminated" from news stories while another deplored the tendency of crime news writers to make a hero of a criminal.

Another suggestion smothered under was that the A. P. experiment on "a conservative basis" in "producing a news picture service such as we now buy from other concerns and similar to such services furnished by other telegraph news organizations." Vote opposing this stood 76 to 38.

In answer to the question "What outstanding news accomplishments of the Associated Press within the past year merit special mention in the advisory board's report to the board of directors?" the following were listed:

World Series, Santa Barbara, Cal., earthquake, Collins cave story, P. N.-9 flight, Missouri tornado, death of William Jennings Bryan, and the election machinery set up by Kent Cooper for reporting state political campaign results.

Eighty-three voted for continuance of the A. P.'s plan to run gratis advertisements on the association, compared to 32 opposed.

The middle western editors showed themselves favorable to the amount of foreign news now being carried on the wires. Asked if too much foreign news was being carried 88 replied no, and 30, yes. It was recommended that dispatches from European countries be made more interpretative.

It was suggested to the directors by members in this district answering the questionnaire that the A. P. add to its service a weekly Washington news letter, a New York letter, and a market letter. One specific request was made that the style of the A. P. writers be "livened up."

A total of 113 as opposed to 6 advised caution to the recommendation that magazine features be supplied at cost "by our co-operative organization."

FINED FOR BEATING NEWSIE

Buffalo Citizen Must Pay Boy $870—Objected to His Cries

A newsboy has a right to cry his wares in public and in the performance of a lawful vocation is entitled to police protection. This is the substance of the decision given last week in Supreme Court at Buffalo, in the case of Francis Crotty, 15 years old, against Adam S. Hobert.

The boy presented evidence to show that he had been attacked and beaten by Mr. Hobert after the latter had warned him not to sell papers in the vicinity of the Hobert home if it were necessary to accompany the sale with the usual cries. The defense contended the practice was a most annoying one and that after the warning the newsboy should have discontinued his shouting.

The jury, after brief deliberation, awarded the newsboy $870 for his injuries.

TO FREDERICK E. MURPHY

These Herbert Kaufman editorials re-inspire me with what we have been feeling for forty years about the great Northwest.

Through good times and bad our faith has never altered. We have never stopped spending on the development of our business here, because nothing could shake confidence in (as Kaufman puts it), "this Croesusly rich Ninth Reserve District."

Old settlers will remember, how during the days of the panic, Maurice L Rothschild then The Palace Clothing Co., piled twenty thousand silver dollars in the window as our bet on local solvency, and invited everybody who couldn't get his pay check cashed anywhere else to come in and have the money without discount.

We are still cashing thousands of dollars worth of pay checks each month at full face value. I am still selling the Northwest wherever I go, and also without discount.

You are spending so much for community benefit that we wish to spend at least the cost of this advertising space, to tell Minneapolis how much respect is owed a newspaper which sets a national example in journalistic enterprise.

I am proud of The Tribune's courage and I am proud to be the friend of a publisher who weighs no expense against the opportunity to render helpful service.

Please add to your editorial optimism, my mercantile judgment that the Northwest has not yet started to work out its possibilities. Business is good—times are good—big things are coming this way. The Northwest can feed half America and offer advantages to industry that no longer exist elsewhere.

I speak both as a retailer and as a manufacturer. I speak from personal and recent knowledge of conditions generally. And I speak from my heart when I say that the Northwest needs only vision, self-confidence and pulling together.

Bringing Herbert Kaufman here, is just one episode in a continuous example of good citizenship on your part that is always invigorating, helpful, enterprising and sound.

high that publishers have had to turn elsewhere for distribution, but also that the government is depending too much on the railroads for transportation instead of using motor trucks over new hard roads.

Always a major convention problem, labor is also scheduled for considerable discussion. Harvey J. Kelly, chairman of the special standing committee, makes his first report this year. Charles A. Webb, Asheville Citizen, is chairman of the committee on the open shop division.

Discussion of all topics, it is expected, will be given impetus by special work carried out by William B. Bryant, Paterson (N. J.) Press-Guardian, chairman of the topics committee, who handled the White Sulphur Springs convention with outstanding success. Mr. Bryant this year has laid the ground work for membership discussion from the floor, in an effort to bring out general opinion on all important problems.

Convention activities actually begins Saturday April 17. On that day the committee on advertising agencies meets at New York A.N.P.A. headquarters in an all-day executive session. Here, behind closed doors, the Federal Trade Commission's advertising commission complaint will be reviewed and discussed. On Saturday evening the annual meeting of the board of directors is scheduled.

At the directors' meeting, in addition to President Thomason, Mr. Bryan, and Mr. Palmer will be George M. Rogers, Cleveland (O.) Plain Dealer, secretary; Howard Davis, New York Herald Tribune, treasurer; and the following directors: Frank G. Bell, Savannah Morning News; Hilton U. Brown, Indianapolis News; F. J. Burd, Vancouver Daily Province; Edward H. Butler, Buffalo Evening News; Harry Chandler, Los Angeles Times; Paul Patterson, Baltimore Sun; Charles H. Taylor, Boston Globe; and T. R. Williams, Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Golf is an A.N.P.A. specialty. At White Sulphur Springs the game proved a healthy cocktail and appetizer for the ready digestion of serious convention business. Last year the first A.N.P.A. annual golf tournament was inaugurated. It proved popular as a means of cementing association friendships.

"This year," Mr. Palmer said, "it seems as though every one who played last year has brought along a friend."

Seventy contested for last year's prizes and more than 100 have signed up for the tourney this year to be held at the Westchester Biltmore country club, Rye, N. Y., April 19 and 20. Roy C. Holliss, New York Daily News, is chairman of the golf committee.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Lafayette Young

SIXTY years ago, a young editor-printer by the name of Lafe Young made extensive use of the heavy iron side bar which was employed to lock type in the forms. He worked at his editorial desk with one of these bars at his elbow. When burly politicians of the old frontier came in to "lick the editor," they found that the young man who could do some vigorous writing with his pencil could also do some vigorous talking with his iron bar.

The lapse of 60 years reveals this pioneer editor still standing in defense of his opinions; but his surroundings and methods have changed, just as Io has changed. He is on duty daily one of the offices of the Des Moi Capital, and the sign on the door re "Lafayette Young, Editor and P lisher." But there is no iron cudgel his desk or on the big mahogany ta For intruders who might annoy him, has tactics which are fashioned w greater finesse.

"How do I find you this morn Colonel?" was the greeting of a re visitor.

"Quite by accident," was the edit reply. And the interview thus be was soon ended.

In this way, the editor saves his lei time for his friends. They come to not only from Iowa but from ren corners of the world. Long public vice and travel have given him quaintance which is probably wider t that of any other contemporary Iov He was the first native Iowan to si the Iowa senate and, 37 years later, was the first native Iowan to sit in United States senate.

N. Y. TIMES LOSES $25,000 LIBEL SUIT APPEAL

Case Dating Back to Publication of a Letter in 1913 Decided in Favor of Plaintiff by Court of Appeals

The Court of Appeals at Albany, N. Y., before adjourning the term April 1 handed down a decision affirming the lower courts in granting Mrs. Abigail E. Bishop a judgment of $25,000 as damages for an alleged libel printed by the New York Times. A jury in the New York Supreme Court rendered a verdict of $60,000 damages, which Justice Proskauer, the trial judge, reduced to $45,000 and the Appellate Division, First Department on appeal, further reduced to $25,000.

The alleged libel was published in the Sunday issue of the Times, March 2, 1913, and was a letter written by the law firm of O'Gorman, Battle and Marshall to former Governor Charles S. Whitman, when he was district attorney of New York county. Mrs. Bishop had instituted a divorce action against her husband, naming Lelia Gaines Gwathmey, wife of J. Temple Gwathmey, well known financier, as co-respondent. Mrs. Gwathmey was served with a copy of the summons and complaint by a process server who made written representation that he was from the office of her attorneys, O'Gorman, Battle and Marshall, to gain admittance to her apartment. Their letter to the district attorney demanded an investigation as to the commission of the crime of forgery in the service of the process and stated that Mrs. Bishop was mentally unbalanced, had been committed to an insane asylum and was a drug and alcohol addict. Copies of the letter were sent to all the New York papers and Mrs. Bishop's attorney requested that it not be published as it contained false statements.

On the first trial of the action Mrs. Bishop, who has five daughters, testified that the article was read by her youngest child, seven years old, and as to her mental anguish by reason of the effect on the child. The jury awarded her $85,000 damages, which the Court of Appeals reversed because of the admission of this evidence. On the second trial she testified the child read the clipping of the alleged libelous article two years after its publication when nine years old. Counsel for the Times vainly argued that the reading of the clipping was not a proximate result of the publication but an independent and intervening act of the mother in permitting her to read it and required a reversal of the judgment.

Norman B. Black

NORMAN B. BLACK, (right) publisher of the Fargo (N. D.) Forum, among the A. N. P. A., and A. P. convention visitors in New York City, has several hobbies, but transcending all, is his hobby for North Dakota.

"You have heard a lot about our state during the past few years, but the real story of North Dakota—let me tell it," says Mr. Black.

"North Dakota has just passed through a winter season without the semblance of a blizzard. Out there in North Dakota we didn't experience a delay of more than an hour in the time of a single train during the entire winter season, insofar as weather conditions were concerned.

"And are we prosperous?

"Every business condition map issued in the past year has shown a large part of North Dakota in the white area, and the balance of it is only slightly shaded.

"Our farmers, when they were appealed to to join in demands for congressional relief, replied that they were not interested. North Dakota, they said, was getting along, and you'll notice if you check the record that our State isn't now included in the list demanding federal intervention for the 'relief' of agriculture.

"Our bank deposits are at a high mark; there is a great deal of building activity in practically every population center in the state, and we are on the high road to even better things.

"Politics? Yes, we have some. Probably we don't take our politics as seriously now as we did several years ago. You'll recall that North Dakota went for Coolidge in 1924, and that in the face of the fact that practically every 'expert' political observer in the country insisted that we who were on the ground, when we told them North Dakota would be in the Republican column, scoffed at us and insisted we were blind to facts."

Mr. Black is president of the Forum Publishing Company, and publisher of the Fargo Forum, with morning, evening and Sunday editions. He is president also of the Minot (N. D.) Daily News.

Just now the Forum Publishing Company is in the midst of a new building program.

Accompanying Mr. Black to New York are Mrs. Black and their son Norman D. Black, general manager of the Forum, and Mrs. Norman D. Black.

BADGE FOR JOURNALISTS

Lapel Button Adopted for Paris News Writers in Lieu of Police Card

A badge for French journalists, so that in a crowd they may not be mistaken for ordinary onlookers and be molested by the police in case of rioting, has been definitely decided upon by the newspaper men and the Prefecture of Police, Paris.

It is a small shield which buttons into the lapel of the coat. Its colors are those of the town of Paris, blue and red. The corners of the shield are dark red, the border is dark blue, as are the ship and the word "Presse." The rest is light blue, with a white background behind the ship.

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

WILLIAM PRESTON BEAZELL, assistant managing editor of the New York World and instructor in Journalism in the Pulitzer School, opens the Intercollegiate World for April with an intelligent answer to the question "Why Newspaper Work?" The answer is somewhat personal but not egotistical. I want to put ditto marks under what he says about the importance of the reporter and his work:

> But the reporter is the key-man of the newspaper. His are the eyes, the ears, the mind, indeed, that fashion it. It is from his ranks that the executives are drawn. The editors, great or small, who did not begin as reporters, are almost non-existent. What makes a reporter? Practice chiefly. He needs, first of all, curiosity, as the scientist must have it, for no "story" is complete that does not answer every question it provokes in the reader's mind. He must be a lover of truth and fairness for their own sakes; there is no excuse for inaccuracy or injustice that is purposely or carelessly permitted. He must have judgment, lest superficial estimates of men and facts lead him, and his newspaper, on to humiliation and disaster. He ought to have personality, though that lack may be overcome. He ought to take himself and his work seriously; the esteem in which he is held and the success he achieves will be determined chiefly by his own standards.

I also quite agree with Beazell's suggestion that the cub gets his first experience on a small town paper where the work is varied and where he can "familiarize himself with the technique of every aspect of his work." The following specific illustration is given by Mr. Beazell:

> The value of such training is notably demonstrated in New York. On the World, for example, only four of the 15 places of principal executive responsibility are filled by men who started in New York. Among the 81 reporters and copy editors, only 27 started in New York. The others found their training in 43 towns in 26 states. It may be added of the World that every executive began as a reporter, and a majority of them were reporters when they joined its staff.

These words spoken of the New York World in particular apply to metropolitan newspapers in general.

AMERICAN advertisers as well as newspaper men may possibly like to be reminded that "The Advertiser's Annual" (Business Publications Ltd., 66 and 67 Shoe Lane, London) is just out for 1925-26. In addition to being an annual data book for all who are engaged in advertising and selling, it contains a number of special contributions with wide appeal. One of these is the official record of the British Advertising Convention at Harrogate.

Hon. C. Harold Vernon, International Vice-President of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, opens the volume with "What Advertising Is Doing." In addition to a resumé of the newspaper advertising of the year and the periodical advertising of the year there is a section devoted to "Trade and Technical Press Advertising of the Year" by Percival Marshall, chairman of the Trade and Technical Section of the Periodical, Trade, Press, and Weekly Newspaper Proprietors' Association, Ltd.

The volume is a directory of newspapers, periodicals, advertising agencies, printers, engravers, etc. Possibly the most valuable part of the volume is the "Market Data and Survey Section."

Another section that may be noted in passing is "Government Advertising of the Year." For the first time the British government has given practical as well as moral support to the British Industries Fair and has set aside an advance appropriation something like seventy-five thousand dollars. Especially valuable is "British Laws and Regulations Affecting Advertisers" by F. E. Sugden, barrister-at-law.

The volume concludes with a survey of the proceedings at Harrogate where the first British advertising convention was held in July, 1925.

IN the April issue of Chile, a monthly survey of Chilean affairs, edited by Ernesto Montenegro, may be found a review of the history and progress of the Chilean press. It contains a fascimile of the first page of the first number of Aurora De Chile for Thursday, Feb. 13, 1812. With this date journalism in Chile really begins, as is pointed out in the article.

The most valuable part of the article, especially to American advertisers, is the directory of the Chilean press—daily and periodical. Chile, by this time, is printed in English and is published in New York Cty under the management of E. Guzman-Donoso.

A recent chapter in the history of the Chilean press is recorded as follows:

> The the age of cables came, with the same in the double capacity of common carriers and news suppliers. By 1900 El Mercurio had branched out to Santiago, where the bigger place soon helped the sapling to outgrow the mother newspaper of Valparaiso. News and commercial information continued to be the main game the publishers were after. Political partisanship dwindled as general prosperity grew larger. El Diario Ilustrado began publication in 1902. The quality of its newsprint and its make-up were far superior to anything Chile had known before. Acamera was its trademark, and with it the illustrated feature made its first bow in Chilean journalism. The very popularity which greeted the new sheet was also the factor which changed the literary, compact daily into the popular, at times sensationalistic, but always lively newspaper of today.
> La Union of Valparaiso represents the family newspaper, inspired by religious morality as it sees it, but none the less awake to journalistic opportunities. El Sur is another type of newspaper which represents the solid middle class interests of Southern Chile, holding a position similar to that of the Atlanta Constitution or the Los Angeles Times. As to the youngest of them all, La Nacion of Santigao, represents the successful experiment of a group of wealthy or influential Chileans who put youth in the saddle and let them have free rein in the conduct of this venture.

A BOOK review in the New Republic for April 7 is headed "Crime and Journalism." The book reviewed is "The Saga of Billy the Kid" (Doubleday, Page & Co.) by Walter Noble Burns. But the comment is a mirror of newspaper conditions in Chicago with special reference to the old Interocean.

The current issue of the Scholastic Editor prints "The Responsibilities of a Newspaper" by Frank C. Cross. One point which he stresses for the benefit of reporters is worth special quotation:

> Beware that you do not ultimately judge the truth or falsity of any statement or declaration by the reputation of the man who utters it. Truth is truth, whether it comes from the lips of the wise man or the fool, the patriot or the traitor, the saint or the criminal. It cannot be destroyed or changed or tarnished. An atom of truth in a mass of falsehood is like a precious jewel in a pile of refuse, and it is just as worthy of recovery.

FREQUENTLY the practical newspaper man is asked the question, "I want to write. How can I get a start on a newspaper or magazine?" How to answer is a puzzle, but here is a new "first aid," "Women in Journalism" (D. Appleton & Co.) by Genevieve J. Boughner. To recommend it is not just passing the buck, either, for it really answers every question for a beginner, and even goes into the details of what openings exist, what qualifications are needed, and how the articles for different departments are written. It is the most useful and comprehensive book of its kind I have seen, and should prove a service to the writer, the teacher, and even the hard pressed "free lance." The vocational adviser—amateur or professional—will welcome the volume with joy.

The book is specific and practical. Its 18 chapters include advice and instruction on writing for the following departments: Society, Clubs, Home-Making, Fashions, Beauty, Advice, The Inspirational Philosopher, The Column, Politics, Sports, Children, The Shopper's Guide, and Syndicates. It discusses the editor of a woman's page, of a woman's magazine, and the high-school teacher of journalism. And ends up with booklets and magazine make-up. So you see it answ the odd query "What have you?"

Nor is this generous menu made of sketchy generalizations. Each sec goes cold-bloodedly into those basic pr lems: Opportunities, How to Get a St Preparation, and Qualifications. It e suggests details of pay—but perhaps t is another story. The next steps given in full: How to cover the dep ment or field, and how to write the "st —once you get it.

This practical advice on technique se the most valuable part of the book. example, how to handle names in soc reporting is a problem that has wor many a poor beginner to tears. Here given the "Do's" and the "Don'ts" the matter. Again, the author should called blessed for her insistence that ev feature article on home-making sh be preceded by an outline—at least the mind of the author—"to enable he include all the essential points, to forth her facts in a logical manner an

Walter C. Johnson

FEW men under the age of 50 can boast of having been in one line of business continuously for 36 years. Few men who have been engaged in one profession for 36 years can claim the honor of having started at the bottem and reached the top without ever asking for a job or a promotion in their lives. This is the enviable record of Walter C. Johnson, general manager of the Chattanooga (Tenn.) News, and president of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association.

Mr. Johnson is only 48 years of age but he has been in the newspaper profession long enough to see it grow from the days before the linotypes up to its present position.

In April of this year Mr. Johnson celebrated his twentieth anniversary with the Chattanooga News. When he was chosen president of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association last summer, he prepared a definite program for the year, the twelfth one in the list reading thus "To make the S. N. P. A. a real business organization in which every member receives a profitable dividend in service on the investment made in dues and assessments." This has been accomplished.

President Johnson grew up in the newspaper business starting in as a carrier for three Georgia newspapers, the Macon Telegraph, Atlanta Constitution, and Atlanta Journal. Then, upon return of the family to Knoxville, Tenn., (the city in which he was born and lived up to the time when he went to Georgia), he became a carrier for the Sentinel. On the Sentinel his office experience began. He held successively the offices of advertising solicitor, circulation manager, bookkeeper and cashier. The Sentinel owners purchased the Knoxville Tribune and this added to Johnson's responsibilities.

When the Memphis (Tenn.) Morning News was founded in 1902 Mr. Johnson became its treasurer and assistant business manager. Later the paper purchased the Scimitar, merging the two and retaining Mr. Johnson as secretary-treasurer and business manager of the News-Scimitar for a year. His next step was that of general manager of the Chattanooga News.

It is often said of Mr. Johnson that he keeps five or six secretaries busy carrying on different lines of activities with which he is connected. He is a 33d degree Mason, a past commander of the Knights Templar, past president of the Chattanooga Society Scottish Rite of Free Masonry, a charter member of the Chattanooga Rotary club, and at present its president. He is also head of the Chattanooga community advertising campaign.

Rigney Host to Veteran Editors

Col. C. W. Wilson of the Tuscola (Ill.) Review, now in his 51st year as a newspaper man, and L. T. Yeargin of the Oakland (Ill.) Ledger, 50 years in the newspaper field, were guests of honor of Hugh M. Rigney of the Arthur (Ill.) Graphic Clarion at the Inman Hotel, Champaign, last Friday night. Members of the press throughout the district were present.

Writer Proved His Farm Knowledge

Jollied into entering a cattle judging contest at the Waukesha County dairy show, Louis French, special writer for the Milwaukee Journal, turned the joke on his friends by winning second place with a score of 91 per cent. This was but a half of one per cent behind the winning score of 91.5. The contest was judged by W. W. Yapp, Urbana, Illinois, professor at the University of Illinois.

Ogdensburg (N. Y.) News Sold

J. M. Zaremba and Loren Bailey of Syracuse, N. Y., have purchased a controlling interest in the Ogdensburg (N. Y.) Daily News and will take possession in about 30 days. The News is a Democratic morning paper and has been owned for several years by Capt. Henry Holland, former collector of the port of Ogdensburg. Mr. Zaremba is connected with a New York stock brokerage house, while Mr. Bailey is on the staff of a Syracuse paper.

N. Y. American Moves Jersey Office

The Newark branch of the New York American will move from Broad and Market streets, in the center of the city, to the Military Park Building, May 1, it has been announced. A staff of 12 will handle the American's correspondence in Newark and publish a weekly New Jersey section.

Do you know what percentage of errors are made in your Composing Room?

We suggest you go there and take fifty original proofs. Count up the number of lines and the number of errors. Get the percentage of errors to lines.

It takes twice as long to correct an error as it does to make it, so multiply this percentage by three.

Take this resultant percentage and apply it to your total Composing Room payroll for the year. See how much money errors are costing you.

When you find out what they cost you write and tell us the amount. We will show you a source of profit you have never heard of.

DAILIES BATTLE FOR READERS AS ADVERTISING FLOWS

paper business. Advertising, the element that pays the bills, flows inevitably to the newspapers which carry out these fundamental principles.

Competition for the advertiser's dollar has been keener than ever these past few months. Advertisers who hold to the theory that the bigger the space the bigger the return—and some of them prove it—have found the publishers eager to listen when they proposed double-trucks, eight pages, sixteen pages in a single issue. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch last week printed an 84-page Friday edition, in which one department store purchased 16 pages. Most of the issue was devoted to advertising, of course, but the space given to news in that issue exceeded the total pages of many another metropolitan edition.

A veritable whirl of newspaper promotion surrounds the advertising managers and agency executives handling national, or general, accounts. A casual survey of newspaper advertising in other newspapers, in trade papers, of direct-by-mail matter, and of streetcar and outdoor advertising warrants the belief that newspaper promotion has increased about 30 per cent during the past two years. No data exist for an estimate of the increase in the overhead or the personal compensation item for the advertising department, but there is no doubt that while business is more abundant, competition for it is keener, and the cost of getting it into the office has advanced.

So also has the cost of putting it through the office and into the hands of the circulation manager.

Wages paid to composing room employees have increased 11 per cent since 1921, when the average wage paid to evening paper men in 36 representative cities of the United States was $44.41 a week. These men now receive an average of $49.35.

Stereotypers in the same 36 cities (with one exception) have received wage advances which increase their 1921 wage by 9 per cent, to $44.88 from $41.18.

Wages to pressmen-in-charge in 35 cities have increased from an average of $43.57 to $48.30, or slightly less than 11 per cent.

The scale for journeymen pressmen has risen only less rapidly. The average wage in the same 35 cities in 1921 was $39.99. It now averages $43.32, the increase being $3.33, or 7.6 per cent.

Photo-engravers, who now have an average wage in 23 cities of $52.46 per week, had in 1921 an average of $45.86, their gain being $6.60 or 14.3 per cent.

Mailers employed by newspapers in 25 cities now have an average weekly wage of $37.58, against a 1921 scale of $34.41, an increase of $3.17, or 9.2 per cent.

These calculations are based on reports made by publishers to the Special Standing Committee of the A. N. P. A. of their wage scales as contracts are made, changed, or renewed between newspapers and the various unions. Evening paper scales are used because they apply to the greater number of newspapers.

The comparisons are made in terms of dollars per week only, without reference to changes of working hours that may have occurred since the earlier figures were gathered. Reduction of hours or limitations on the period in which work may be performed have been put into effect in several cities since 1922, with the result, of course, that the publishers' cost of production has increased.

Neither do these comparisons indicate the increase in publishers' mechanical costs due to larger working forces or necessity for overtime in assembling large editions.

A safe estimate of the newspapers' mechanical department payroll and departmental expenses (supplies, repairs, power, heat, and light) sets the figure slightly under $200,000,000 a year.

Paper costs have decreased per ton since 1922. The most recent price-cut, which brought the 1926 mill price from $70 to $65 per ton, has been followed by cries of anguish from the paper manufacturers. The reduction was made with the idea of encouraging publishers in their extravagant use of newsprint, and in fear lest an increase create a retrenchment program and a stable price of $70 induce caution. The newspapers consumed about 3,000,000 tons of newsprint last year, worth about $225,000,000 in the newspaper basement. They will use more newsprint than that this year, by present prospects, and the mill men weep in the belief that the $70 price would have been as acceptable this year as it was last. What 1925 did to the paper bills is evident in a recent statement by a metropolitan newspaper that it consumed 27 per cent more newsprint last year than in 1924.

All of these elements pertain strictly to the business of putting out a newspaper. They make no allowance for unusual enterprises outside of the editorial province and productive of no direct immediate return. Insurance policies for employees, full vacation and holiday pay for all workers, unionized or not, homebuilding assistance, medical and dental attention, restaurants serving food at cost, club and assembly rooms—many newspaper staffs now enjoy these accessory comforts provided by publishers. Possibly the newspapers are better because of these free-will offerings. At any rate the publishers who have put thousands of dollars into such intra-mural activities seem satisfied with the investment.

New fields of service to the public in and out of the news and advertising columns are being explored. Some newspapers will procure theatre tickets, book passage on ocean steamships, give road information to motorists for their own territory or anywhere on the continent, and one paper, the Milwaukee Journal, through its public service bureau even obtains driver's licenses for automobiling readers. The Brooklyn Eagle and the Chicago Tribune also have long followed this method of keeping informed on their city's wants and other newspapers are showing interest in their methods and results obtained.

Bearing more directly on the production of revenue is the market information and merchandising service that an ever-increasing number of newspapers are furnishing national advertisers. The cost of these activities is included in the advertising department budget, reference to which has already been made.

Only the tremendous volume of advertising that has come to the newspapers has made these achievements and ambitions possible. Mr. and Mrs. Newspaper Reader are getting four, five, sometimes ten, times as much for their coppers as the newsboy handed their fathers and mothers. Mr. Advertiser buys a volume and a concentration of newspaper circulation that was undreamed of a few years ago. In many cities, large and small, where consolidations have killed off newspapers, he is paying one or two advertising bills instead of four or five.

The national advertiser, buying morning paper space on a 5,000-line contract pays at the rate of $2.66 per line per million circulation. Five years ago, with all business skirting dangerous shoals and proceeding cautiously, the newspapers charged him $2.59 per line per million circulation—the increase is only 2.7 per cent.

Evening paper space sells to contract national advertisers now at $3.39 per line per million circulation. Five years ago, the similar rate was $3.29. The increase is 3 per cent.

Sunday newspaper space sells at a milline rate of $2.32, exactly the same figure that was effective five years ago!

The numerous small increases in advertising rates have barely kept pace with the steady rise of circulation totals. In themselves, the increases are hardly adequate to meet the higher costs of intensified circulation.

It is a well conducted business, indeed, in any line of endeavor, which can assume a horizontal increase of much more than 10 per cent in all operations of production, raise the cost of the unit produced less than three per cent, and still find the net revenues adequate for the return on invested capital and the protection of the future.

It is altogether possible that the latter aspect has not received any too much thought from the mass of newspaper publishers. The immediate past has been pleasantly productive of revenues, the present is even more so, and if the margin of profit is smaller, the amount of net revenues is larger. The future presents no immediate worries for most 1926 publishers.

Yet the future is worrying some newspaper owners whose operations are marked by the highest intelligence and skill and are rewarded with profits adequate by any present newspaper standards.

They see the destruction of North American pulpwood forests hurried to a climax by an annual newsprint production exceeding 3,000,000 tons. They can foresee prices for newsprint higher than those paid by most newspapers during the helter-skelter market of 1920. They envision a public unable to read a 60-[illegible] paper and unwilling to attempt it. [illegible] can see advertisers failing to get re[illegible] from mammoth newspapers which p[illegible] cannot read thoroughly. They see [illegible] recession in business as inevitable [illegible] they wonder what a consequent redu[illegible] of their advertising revenues by 5, 1[illegible] 15 per cent will do to their profits. AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

James Kerney

IN an effort to throw off an acute attack of writer's cramp, and for the purpose of distributing in Europe some of his information, wit and money, James Kerney, editor and publisher of the Trenton (N. J.) Evening Times, has gone East with Mrs. Kerney and their daughters, Katherine and Peggy, leaving another daughter and three sons behind. The holiday began on March 13 and will continue until the early Summer. Upon his return from Europe, Mr. Kerney will take the rest cure at the beautiful Summer home that he maintains at Bay Head, one of the select spots on the Jersey Coast.

Mr. Kerney is making his second trip to Europe, his first having been made during the World War, when President Woodrow Wilson sent him overseas to keep the record of the United States straight among European nations. He made a big success of that mission and acquired, quite readily, some first class French and English words and a fund of knowledge that will stand him in good stead if he ever needs a sideline for some extra cash.

While Mr. Kerney is abroad, the Century Company putting on the market the maiden literary effort of the Trenton editor, "The Political Education of Woodrow Wilson." Century Magazine recently gave a foretaste of the breezy style of the book in two articles entitled "At the End of the Cable." The story deals in part with Wilson and Pershing at their war labors and is an intimate political history of Wilson, written by a man in whom the President had absolute confidence and one with whom intimate relationship was maintained from the time Mr. Wilson became Governor of New Jersey until his death. This period of contact between the late President and Mr. Kerney provided the material upon which "The Political Education of Woodrow Wilson" is based.

As a runner-up for the book about to appear, Mr. Kerney wrote for the Saturday Evening Post a series of articles on "Last Words of Woodrow Wilson," which attracted national and international attention.

There are some things about Mr. Kerney which remind one of President Wilson, chief among them his absolute disregard for hoodoos. The late President was a warm admirer of the almost universally spurned "thirteen." His biographer harbors no misgivings about "thirteen," for he selected Saturday, March 13, to set sail on his present journey, which will include a tour of Continental Europe, with a visit to Rome as a high spot.

ATLANTIC CITY DAILY STARTS

First Issue of Evening Times Printed From Uncompleted Plant

The Atlantic City (N. J.) Times, new evening and Sunday daily was launched Sunday, April 11 on schedule, George F. Goldsmith, president, stated.

Publication was attended with difficulty, building operations being held up by a bricklayers' strike. However, machinery was moved into the uncompleted structure in time to get out the first edition.

Commenting on the support received from the Typographical Union, Mr. Goldsmith said:

"As an instance of the devotion of the Typographical Union to our enterprise, a meeting was held by these men and it was decided that they would place an advertisement in our columns to be charged to them at the full rate, and it was also decided by them to accept no overtime pay on the last day until the paper went to press. They worked like Trojans for twenty-nine hours without sleep, steady on their feet, and gave us the heartiest and most wholesome support.

William Mackenzie, once a well-known figure in Canadian newspaper circles, died at Palo Alto, Cal., on April 7, aged 75. Born in Scotland, he came to Canada in 1874, immediately taking up newspaper work and building up an extensive connection as special writer with the press of Canada, Great Britain and the United States. He was a member of the Press Gallery, Ottawa, for 30 years, retiring to become Secretary of Imperial Correspondence in the Department of External Affairs. He retired about 8 years ago and took up his residence in California.

CIRCULATORS MEET

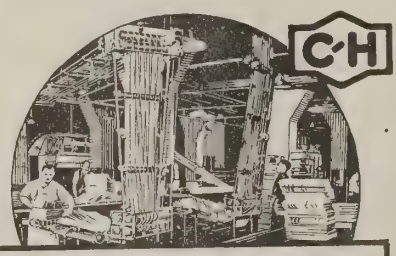
New York State Association Discusses Tabloid

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER*)*

ELMIRA, N. Y., Apr. 14.—The annual fall meeting of the New York State Circulation Managers Association will be held in New York, it was decided as the two-day spring sessions of the organization closed. Officers will be elected then.

C. E. BLEWER

The convention was given over mainly to round-table discussions of various problems which confront the circulators.



Leading among topics discussed was whether the illustrated tabloid would force the old-line newspaper either to copy or take a place at the foot of circulation. It was generally conceded that every newspaper, regardless of kind of news or size, has its field, and that it should conform its style to the demand in that field. James McKernan, an honorary member of the state organization and past president of the International Circulation Managers Association, took an active part in this discussion.

"The importance of small town items" was also an important topic, with the value of such news declared of much value a certain class of papers, particularly these which must look to the small towns for much of their circulation. The metropolitan dailies have given up the idea almost entirely.

Talks were made by B. M. Knight, Syracuse Herald; James McKernan, Kings County Delivery Company, Brooklyn; W. C. Hixson, Syracuse Post-Standard; George Erb, Buffalo News; Glen England, Gloversville-Johnstown Leader-Republican; Harry Baltz, Elmira Sunday Telegram, and W. A. Cockerill, Utica Press. General Discussion covered these topics and also bargain offers and cut rates, value of the paid-in-advance subscriber, premiums as circulation builders, street sales, baggage and bus rates, machine mailing and listing, promotion through city carriers, fundamental causes growth of newspaper circulation, promotion, radio, insurance and features.

C. E. Blewer, president presided. More than 50 circulation managers from various cities of the state attended.

For Sale at a Bargain—Local printing plant. Gross business over $70,000. Returns to owner $10,000. Price $25,000, two-fifths cash. Balance reasonable terms. J. B. Shale, Times Bldg., N. Y. City.

$5000 will secure control of exclusive weekly in desirable Illinois field. $15,000 annual business; over 60% net on investment. Available for short time only. Prop. 951x. The H. F. Henrichs Agency, Litchfield, Ill.

Omar D. Gray, the Sturgeon, Mo., Newspaper Broker with 37 years' experience in the newspaper game, who in the last year sold a quarter million dollars' worth of newspaper property, and who specializes in consolidating newspapers in the same city, writes:

"Glad to report the sale of the Times at Niles, Ohio. It was the toughest daily sale I ever had, but I am sure that James L. Wick, the new owner, will do well there.

"In Oklahoma I have a weekly and job plant doing a business of $32,000 a year, city of 3,400, clearing $10,000 a year, priced at $20,000, $7,500 down. Same owner has another such proposition in city of 15,000, same State, making big money—$22,000, with $7,500 down. When this weekly was started business men signed ad contracts for $20,000. Fine opportunity. I have a weekly in Oklahoma doing business of $700 per month that can be bought for $8,000, with $2,500 down. You short cash fellows ought to grab this. And I have another weekly in same State that can be bought for very little cash down—about $2,200. Paper making good money.

"I have a small daily in Oklahoma. No daily competition within 100 miles—$10,000, with $6,000 down.

"I want to list a million dollar daily for sale. I will handle it to please you. Will, if you prefer, submit all propositions to you and gain your consent before I write a line, or you can write direct to intended purchasers if you prefer.

"I have a $100,000 Arkansas daily to sell. A weekly in same State, with no competition, $10,000—half cash.

"In California I have a weekly within one hour's run of Los Angeles, clear field, with 4,000 population, $9,500 and the owner only cares for $3,000 down. Great buy. The climate is worth half the money.

"I have a Colorado weekly, city of 6,000—$8,500, half cash.

"In Missouri I have a prosperous daily, with building in city of 15,000 for $50,000—half cash. In city of 20,000 I have a daily for $70,000, with 5 Intertypes and a 20-page Goss straightline press, 4,000 circulation, offered at $70,000, with $25,000 down.

"Have a client with $25,000 who wants an Illinois daily.

"Have a client who wants me to find him business manager for daily doing $200,000 business yearly, and who can take a nice block of stock.

"Weekly in Texas clearing $11,000 a year, priced at $27,500, with $15,000 down.

"I want to sell $300,000 worth of papers by the last of August when, if living, I will pull out for Europe with Dr. Walter Williams, president of the Press Congress of the World, and only last week chosen as President of the Pan-American Press Congress. That will be a fine body of 600 or more men and women. One day last week four reservations were made on the steamer Carmania, leaving New York on September 4 for Switzerland for Australia people. They will be in Geneva from every section of the earth. You should not miss. And say, brother, you had better hurry, for Editor James Wright Brown tells me that only two state rooms with baths are left, so if you want a bath on this journey without jumpi the ocean, or chasing across the halls o steamer with the bath steward chasing better hurry and write Mr. Brown at Times Building, New York City.

"As I write these lines I remember t have been on a strict diet for one week about four more weeks of foolishness in ahead of me. I am resting up my stoma that I can enjoy a fried chicken breakfa my home in May, 1926, and have as my g Dean Walter Williams, who only lives 25 south of me and Col. Bill Southern, of pendence, Mo., and then when I get on the I want to be able to eat four meals a da retain my self-respect and other things.

"If you have anything on your mind me. I have a new typewriter and a stenogr who actually loves to work. My business better each month. I am like Coolidg think business is picking up."

NOW is the time to get after the camera and camera supply houses for advertising. A little heavy advertising at this time of year is sure to increase their sales.—C. E. Pellissier, Boston.

Have you been passing up the in-between special page stunts, such as an electrical page for electrical supply firms booming electric wiring, new switches, etc.; garden and yard improvement work with seed merchants, landscape gardeners, foundation builders (for garages), lumber merchants with fencing materials, etc., radio special week of sale ads (end of the season idea). Beauty week with beauty and barber shops represented; and later a Vacation page featuring articles used by campers, trunk merchants, etc.—L. G. D.

"These merchants are proud of the goods they sell; that is why they advertise regularly in the columns of the Star. You will do well to trade with them." Here follows a list of the merchants carrying advertising in the Star and classified according to their particular business. The page advertisement, run once each month, is a wonderful good will builder as well as being a puller for the account of the non-advertiser.—B. A. T.

An attractive page of advertising can be made under the caption "Who's Who In ———." The Halifax Evening Mail carried a page of advertisements under "Who's Who in Halifax" recently which was very attractive and interesting.—V. G. Dawson.

Offer a prize for the best "fish story." Give honorable mention to four others. Then group the stories in the center of a page or double truck. Dealers in fishing tackle, out-board motors, provisions, clothing, etc., can be interested in this feature.—Davis O. Vandivier.

Three months from now will be celebrated the sesqui-centennial of American Independence. About that time an interesting ad feature would be a page containing the advertisements of those stores which were in business during the centennial year, 1876; in other words, those which have endured half a century or more. A careful canvass will show that there are probably many, and some professional men as well. A similar feature was tried rather locally last year, the occasions being the sesqui-centennials of the Battles of Concord, Lexington and Bunker Hill, and proved successful.—E. R. Lowe, Waltham, Mass.

Run a "telephone pole" up the middle of the page, with cross-arms and insulators, over which offer cash prize for the nearest correct guess of number of telephone calls in central exchange on certain day. Half way down the "pole," as though it was nailed on, have a sign bearing the words "Phone for Food." Sell the space each side of the "pole" to grocers.—Chas. H. Cowles, Poteau, Oklahoma.

The Rockford (Ill.) Morning Star has been conducting an "Ad-Rite" contest, whereby 20 or more firms each week gave suggestions for readers to write their ads, which was profitable to both the paper and the firms. A theatre ad suggestion was "Write on why I am going to the Blank theatre to see Blank picture." A suggestion for an ice cream dealer's ad was "Why one should buy brick ice cream in preference to bulk." One hundred dollars and $75 was given for the grand prizes at the close of the series, $50 to the one submitting the most ads and $25 for the best one each week. The interest aroused among the readers was great.—Wilbur Polson, Milwaukee.

PRESSMEN ENTERTAIN PUBLISHERS

Rhode Island Union Men Host to Employers in Providence April 6

Newspaper pressmen of Local No. 12, International Printing Pressmen's Union of America, entertained publishers and managers of Rhode Island newspapers at a banquet and dance in Providence, R. I., on April 6.

The meeting was addressed by Allison Stone, managing editor of the Providence Journal and Evening Bulletin, and Maurice Joy, chief editorial writer, Providence News, on behalf of the publishers, and by Maj. George S. Berry of Tennessee, president of the international union, on behalf of the pressmen. The object of the meeting was to promote closer feeling and co-operation between the owners and mechanical workers of the papers.

Newspapermen on Tariff Board

Two well-known Canadian newspapermen are to have important positions on the Tariff Board now being constituted by the Dominion Government. Hon. George P. Graham, publisher of the Brockville Recorder-Times and until recently Minister of Railways and Canals in the Federal Government, will be chairman and Hector B. Mackinnon, for many years a member of the editorial staff of the Toronto Globe, will be secretary.

ARE there any "white collar" bandits in your town? See bankers, head of a better business bureau, C. of C., police. During the Florida boom there were many who sold sunken lots. Are they still at it? Besides a good story an educational one is found here.—J. H. C.

"Familiar Unknowns," daily vest-pocket features with pictures of public building elevator operators, blind shoestring peddlers and the like, are being used by the Chicago Daily News. Another short feature used by this paper was "Suppressed Ambitions" telling what the mayor, university heads, bankers and others wanted to be. Combination art was used—halftones of the subjects with pen-and-ink sketches showing their desires realized.—T. E. R., Chicago.

Your jeweler can tell you a good story. Back years ago the watches if turned on a side or held upside down would not run. Now they'll run no matter how they are standing.—J. H. C.

The Des Moines Evening Tribune every Saturday carries a strip of eight pictures of persons who have in the week's news attracted attention by some kind, worthy or heroic deed. The pictures which are of uniform size are carried under the caption "The Evening Tribune Takes its Hats off to These——."

For many of us it is impracticable to keep every copy of EDITOR & PUBLISHER on file. At the same time it seems almost sinful to allow them to go into the discard no matter how old they may be. The solution is—keep a scrap book, clipping all items of interest in my end of newspaper work. Advertising men may clip material relating to their department, city room men take articles of interest to the news gathers, etc. Keep a scrap book. Don't throw valuable material like this away.—R. B. S.

The typewriter as a crime detector. Recall the Leopold and Loeb case. Ask a salesman in your city. He'll show you how every "mill" is different. There is more difference in the typewriters than in the handwriting of humans.—J. H. C.

Is the installment sales plan being overworked? Put this question to a banker, a merchant (cash), a merchant (credit), an automobile dealer, a manufacturer, a realtor, and others. You will find that every line of the article will be read closely.—B. A. T.

The Keystone State
Should be the keystone of your advertising campaign!

Build your advertising campaign around the smaller towns, and rural communities of Pennsylvania.

Great in industry, in mining, in agriculture, Pennsylvania is the keystone state in every sense of the word. Its workers make high wages, they buy the luxuries as well as the necessities of life. They own cars and enjoy life. But, they save their money as well.

They look to the daily papers for the news and for things to use in the home and bodily adornments.

The newspapers offer the best medium to reach the buying power of the state. Territorial data and information about the Pennsylvania consumer market is ready for you. Gladly furnished to any one interested.

These Daily papers reach the consumers of Pennsylvania

I expect to motor to Florida March 1st, on my honeymoon for a six weeks' trip. I would greatly appreciate it if you would advise me what wearing apparel is appropriate.
(Miss) M. D., Brooklyn

Will you let me know if I can get a set of plans and specifications for the Spanish Bungalow shown on Woman's Page, March sixth.
(Miss) B. W. A., Englewood, N. J.

I am keenly interested in the sketches by Miss Marion Dismant, and articles accompanying them. We have bought a house on Long Island and they are very helpful in suggestions. M. R. J. C., New York

I should be grateful if you could supply me with various ways to cook and serve oysters. I read your column every day with keen interest and derive much benefit from your delicious recipes.
(Mrs.) C. S., New York

After hearing your interesting talk Monday at WEAF, I have been wondering if you can give me some information about men or women who have been successful in taking up the work of X-Ray technician as a profession.

Assure you of the pleasure and benefit I derive from the food section of The Telegram under your alert and able guidance. (Mrs.) F. McW., New York

I am anxious to travel, but I cannot afford to pay my way. I do not know just how I can get in touch with employment bureaus of Steamship Companies; wonder if you can help me. (Miss) R. E. R., Brooklyn

This is the largest circulation in America

Largest Circulation in America!

THERE HAVE been million circulations before—but not a Million like this! Some magazines have circulations in excess of a million and two million, but these circulations are scattered over the whole country. Some Sunday newspapers have circulations in excess of a million, but draw these from very large territories comprising several states. But never before, in this country at least, has a daily paper attained a million circulation locally, in and around its own city market. So this Million of the Daily News represents the greatest concentration of circulation ever available to any advertiser! Of The News million, 95% is concentrated in New York City and suburbs. Less than 5% is outside the New York market.

To-day, more than two of every five people who buy an English language newspaper in New York City are Daily News buyers. This paper alone reaches at least every other family in New York. It covers the major part of the richest city market in the world.

The News must be reckoned as a new and entirely unique business utility. In addition to the thorough coverage of its tremendous circulation, it affords the advertiser opportunity for more effective presentation of his message. The small thousand-agate-line page insures the highest visibility and greatest reader attention. The small paper, with definitely fixed advertising limits in every issue, assures less advertising competition. The small size, the convenience of handling and reading, the brevity of contents, the variety of makeup—all make this paper thoroughly read. There are no buried advertisements or poor positions or waste pages in The News. And the milline rate is by far the lowest in New York!

Adequate coverage, dense concentration, superior presentation, low cost—all in this one medium. Every advertiser needs The News! Get the facts.

"Multi-Unit" and "Straight-Unit" Presses

"I attribute the truly remarkable growth of the Camden Courier to the fact that we have spared no expense in getting the news and in printing it as quickly as possible," says Mr. David Stern, Editor and Publisher of the Camden Daily Courier.

Six years ago the Courier was housed in a little building 20 by 80 feet with only 30 employees. Its circulation was less than 10,000. Its press equipment consisted of one small 16-page Scott.

Today the Courier occupies buildings with more than 40,000 square feet of floor space. Its employees number more than 300. Its net paid circulation is over 50,000. And its latest press equipment is a Scott "Straight-Unit" Octuple Press, running regularly at a 36,000 per hour speed and capable of 48,000 per hour.

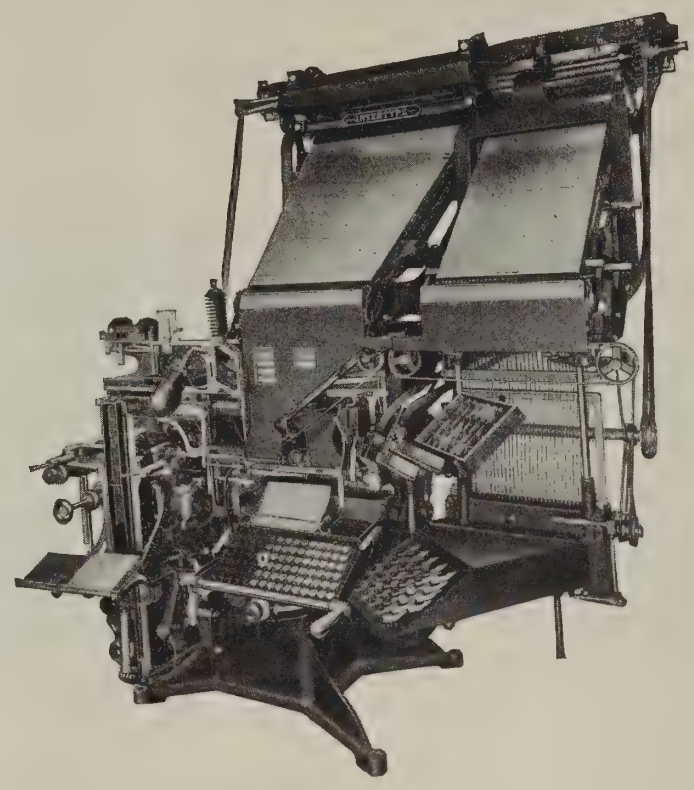
KNOWN CIRCULATION

NEWSPAPER advertising now, more than ever, demonstrates its immediate availability, its instant adaptability, and its speedy responsiveness. You may send your sales message to every nook and corner of this broad land tomorrow if you like, or you may select your spots and sections, a score, a hundred, a thousand cities and towns, as you desire, or as manufacturing and transportation conditions advise.

We are the National Advertising Representatives of Twenty Progressive Newspapers in that many fine cities of the United States.

Our several offices are the offices of each of those publications, where complete files and data of all kinds concerning both field and publication are in readiness for anyone interested. Our traveling representatives are thoroughly familiar with the publications and the fields in which they circulate.

We are at all times prepared—in conjunction with their respective service departments—to provide valuable and useful merchandise surveys and information reports that will assist the manufacturer of any commodity, either in opening up the territory, or in extending distribution already under way.



We bring to the advertising agency an intimate, complete and down-to-the-minute knowledge of market conditions and possibilities and of publicity outlets in the fields we cover, that will enable it to act with the decision, speed and assurance so largely contributing to satisfactory and successful service to its clients.

Estimated cost of all building in Philadelphia, for which permits were issued by the Bureau of Building Inspection in 1925, totalled $170,000,000.

To house the normal increase in Philadelphia's population, a new building is completed every nine minutes in the working day.

Philadelphia is a splendid market for all that builds the house and all that goes into it when completed.

The reader confidence enjoyed by The Evening Bulletin is attested by the fact that The Bulletin's circulation is the largest in Philadelphia and one of the largest in the United States.

The Bulletin goes into practically every home in and around the great city of Philadelphia and makes it possible to reach this huge market of nearly three million people — third largest in America — through one newspaper at one cost.

With a circulation of over half a million copies daily The Bulletin dominates Philadelphia.

Press Is Bulwark of Popular Government Kellogg Tells Associated Press

Secretary of State Discusses World Affairs at Brilliant Tuesday Luncheon — Noyes and Cooper Welcome Latin Americans—Mitre Speaks of Peace and Free Press—A. P. Shows Moving Picture of World-Wide Activities

LATIN AMERICA dominated the Associated Press 1926 luncheon. Approximately 100 representatives of newspapers published in South and Central America were scattered through the 700 seated at tables in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria Tuesday afternoon. Their spokesman, Jorge A. Mitre, editor and publisher of La Nacion of Buenos Aires, sat in a place of honor beside President Frank B. Noyes at the head table. At the other side of the Associated Press chief sat Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State, whose lucid address was devoted largely to the diplomatic activities of the United States in South America. And, for the first time in the history of the Associated Press, addresses were made and answered in a language other than English. Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press, informed the guests that President Noyes had instructed him to greet the Latin-American guests in English so that the North American members could understand his words, and to translate his greeting into Spanish, so that the Latin-Americans could not understand. Mr. Cooper carried out orders, except that the Latin-American visitors understood perfectly and applauded the little courtesy fervently.

An added touch was a motion picture of Associated Press activities, including flashes of high news spots during the past sixteen years. Theodore Roosevelt, the Prince of Wales at his first public function twelve years ago, scenes on the World War battlefields, glimpses of President Wilson in France, of President Harding at the tomb of the unknown soldier, and of President Coolidge after his inauguration and later, after his reelection—all were shown among many other pictures as a few of the great news events of the past decade and a half. The newspaper men were characteristically chary of applause.

Secretary Kellogg's appearance was more or less an unexpected pleasure. It was learned that he had three times changed his mind as to the possibility of attending the luncheon in person and the A. P. officials had practically given up hope of his arrival until early Wednesday morning. Word was received at New York an hour before his arrival at six o'clock, a reception committee was hurriedly assembled and the Secretary was escorted to his room at the Waldorf. He departed for Washington immediately after the conclusion of his address.

Frank B. Noyes, presiding at the luncheon, welcomed Latin-American publishers, gave a brief outline of the Associated Press and offered a toast to President and Mrs. Coolidge.

His remarks follow:—

"In these days when the lessons of—shall I say—prudent conservation of wealth are being so earnestly insisted on, I may as well open my remarks, which will be very brief, with a story told me by a friend, within a day or two and which seems to me to have a present application. It is another Scotch story. This time, it is of a gaunt and haggard Scotchman travelling on a train who so excited the curiosity of his fellow passengers by hurriedly dashing out of the train and into the station at each stopping place, returning as hurriedly to his seat on the train that finally he was asked why he did this. 'I ha' been feelin' verra bad for sometime and ha' joost had a city doctor examine me. He says ma heart is so bad that I'm likely to drop dead ana minute. Under these saircumstances it seems prudent and reasonable only to buy my railroad ticket from station to station.'

"Our luncheon this year is marked by a feature both pleasant and important—that of the presence of a number of the Latin-American delegates to the First Pan-American Press Congress held last week in Washington. Some of these delegates are of our brotherhood of the Associated Press, and to them and to the delegates who are not of our number I extend a most cordial and hearty welcome.

"One of the resolutions adopted at the Washington Congress recommended the formation of a Pan-American or Latin-American Press Association, and when this suggestion was made by Senor Montenegro, a distinguished journalist from Chile, I expressed the view, which I repeat now, that the press of the United States as represented by the Associated Press, would rejoice at an opportunity to cooperate in a movement to form in Latin-America an organization of the newspapers of those countries and would make them the masters and not the clients of the news gathering organizations that served them. The position of the Associated Press could not be otherwise, for absolute control by the newspapers constituting its membership is the very foundation of its organization.

"This is best shown by its attitude towards its neighbor to the North. Many Canadian newspapers wished to become members of our Associated Press, but we argued and indeed insisted that it would in every way be better for them to form their own association, under which they would be the masters of their news service; and we are now in full alliance with the Canadian Press, organized on the same lines as the Associated Press, but with the same independence of action as is enjoyed by our Associated Press.

"This was comparatively easy to accomplish as to our immediate north where one flag floats from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

"The task of forming such an organization to the South is much more difficult, and for that reason we have taken into full membership important newspapers throughout Latin-America.

"It is entirely possible that our form of organization is not suitable to your conditions, but I am sure that you will find the basic principles of the Associated Press equally essential for the basic principles of a Latin-American organization.

"You see the Associated Press here today. There is no separate entity. The Associated Press is merely the instrumentality through which 1,200 newspapers exchange news, one with the other, and collects original news throughout the world through a staff employed by these same 1,200 newspapers. There is no stock and profits and dividends are forbidden by its charter.

"The administration is through a Board of Directors of 15 newspaper men, members of the organization.

"The news service must be non-partisan in its broadest and in its strictest scenes, it must be without bias of any sort, and it must be as accurate as is humanly possible.

"Only one toast is offered at this annual occasion. Although we drink this toast in lawful fashion, I point out that this must not be construed as an evidence of bias on any pending questions by the Associated Press.

"The members of the Associated Press, regardless of party affiliations, honor the great office of President of the United States and are ever ready to evidence their respect and affection for the great American who fills it. I ask you to drink to the health and happiness of the President of the United States—Calvin Coolidge—and to the gracious and lovely lady of the White House."

KELLOGG DISCUSSES WORLD PROBLEMS AND PRAISES A. P. AT LUNCHEON

Further Armament Limitation, Chinese Question and Tacna Arica Touched on by Secretary of State—Says A. P. Performs Great Public Service

AMERICAN policies on outstanding international issues were bared Tuesday by Secretary Kellogg, in his address at the annual luncheon of the Associated Press.

On the question of armament limitation, the Secretary of State said the United States government would "welcome an agreement which would complete the work begun in Washington" at the 1921 conference, "particularly as there is danger that the competitive construction which formerly existed, particularly with respect to capital ships, may still be continued, in a less aggravated form, it is true, with respect to cruisers and other types of naval craft not dealt with by the Washington treaties."

Secretary Kellogg pledged in this connection that the delegates from the United States to the preliminary armaments conference in Geneva would "use their influence in favor of projects which may be practical in their application and realizable in their development." To this end, he said, the American representatives would "help to the utmost of their ability in preparing the way for agreements for the further limitation of naval armament at no distant date."

"Each definite move toward disarmament, small though it be, is of greater value for the promotion of world peace than ambitious and all-inclusive projects which may be excellent in theory, but which fail to take account of existing world problems.

"The questions which have been submitted for the consideration of the preparatory commission are very general and sweeping in character and until there has been some discussion, it is impossible to determine what definite proposals can most profitably be advanced, but when the most practicable line of action is determined, this government can be counted upon to cooperate within the limits of its traditional policy in any serious effort toward the further limitation of the burden of armaments."

Regarding limitation of land armaments, Mr. Kellogg said this country already had "voluntarily reduced to the minimum," and added:

"We have every reason to rejoice that our situation has permitted this but no justification for overlooking the different problems with which other countries are faced. We would naturally welcome any steps which other powers might take toward the limitation of land armament; we shall be glad if we can at any time exert a helpful influence in this direction.

The situation in China has to be viewed, the secretary said, in the perspective of that country's history. He declared the course of the Washington government throughout China's troubles had been "consistent and definite" in purpose.

"We have endeavored, and we are endeavoring, to carry out those promises solemnly made to the Chinese people in the covenants adopted at the Washington conference. The tariff conference and the extra-territorial commission are still sitting in Peking, are making progress and are carrying out the mandates dictated by the Washington conference."

As to the treaty situation between the United States and Turkey, Mr. Kellogg said there had been no departure from the traditional, typical American policy.

"We have endeavored to afford proper protection to all legitimate American activities in Turkey," he added, referring to the pending Lausanne convention. Criticism directed against this treaty was described as "negative" and the speaker asserted "this government cannot conduct its foreign policy with negatives."

The secretary referred at length to the arbitration and mediation negotiations undertaken by this government to adjust the Tacna-Arica dispute between Chili and Peru. He reminded the audience, particularly the Latin-American journalists present as guests of The Associated Press, that the true policy of this country contained no desire for imperialism, acquisition of territory, political or economical domination."

The policy is "solely a desire to live and cooperate on terms of equality," he said, and "to promote peace, interchange knowledge, develop trade and commerce, free from selfish aims."

Mr. Kellogg too occasion at the outset of his remarks to extend his "sincere congratulations" to the Associated Press, not only for its work in the United States, but in all the world.

"The organization is admirable," he said. "In collecting and disseminating news it does a great public service. You are animated by the highest sense of duty to the public as well as to the press. Your news is most carefully prepared, not only in the light of your duty to your subscribers, but of that which you owe to the public, and is so recognized throughout the world."

Mr. Kellogg expressed his appreciation of the power of the press in moulding public opinion.

"It is fully alive to my mind," he said, "that the government of the United States can only accomplish its purposes with the cordial backing of the great majority of the American people, and this backing is only obtainable when the press is able to treat these questions with understanding and comprehension of the broad lines which the government has pursued."

MITRE VIEWS A. P. AS AN INSTRUMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE

Publisher of La Nacion Pays Tribute to News Gathering Organization at Annual Luncheon—Praises U. S. Newspapers

JORGE A. MITRE, of La Nacion, Buenos Aires, speaking Tuesday at the annual luncheon of the Associated Press, paid tribute to it as "an international instrument for the promotion of brotherhood and peace" and praised its "matchless ideals of truth and fair play."

"I feel honored at having been asked to address this gathering," he said.

"With the improvement of communications, particularly the cable and wireless, the interests of newspaper readers—so long provincial and insular—have become international. This desire for world news, which has grown with each year during and since the war, meant that news correspondents had to be sent to every important center until now nothing can happen in any country, however remote, but it is read a few hours later in every home.

"In this splendid work of educating the public regarding other countries—of breaking down the barriers of race, color and distance—no organization has done so much as the Associated Press. With its far-flung staff of trained correspondents reflecting events in scores of countries, with its matchless ideals of truth and fair play, it has become something more than a mere news-gathering organization. It is an international instrument for the promotion of human brotherhood and peace. Before the invincible army of accurate knowledge, the mists of ignorance and misunderstanding are being swept away, revealing those common ideals which are the surest foundation for world peace.

"I pay my tribute to the Associated Press—its president, Frank B. Noyes; its general manager, Kent Cooper, and you, the members who support them so loyally, for the national and international service this great organization is rendering humanity.

"The newspapers of the United States reflect the sterling qualities of the great news organization upon which they chiefly rely. They have definitely emerged from that era in which principal attention was given to domestic news. They keep their readers informed of events abroad, many of them maintaining their own correspondents in principal centers to interpret and amplify the news.

"I think that in one important respect the American newspapers are superior to any in the world. It is true that the papers of Great Britain have established a high reputation for accuracy and independence, but it has always seemed to me that the principal function of the British newspaper was to inform and instruct its readers. While the American newspaper also aims at achieving this end, it endeavors to do something more: to entertain.

"Thus we find the American newspapers not only gives the solid news at home and abroad, but also varies the literary diet with a wealth of bright articles and features. What impresses the visiting journalist is that the American newspaper has been made entertaining without any loss of dignity or editorial weight. But most of all we admire your newspapers because of their absolute independence and the sacrifices they make for that principle which is so essential to us all—the Freedom of the Press."

N. Y. Publishers Win Fight

New York newspaper publishers won their yearly fight against passage of the so-called "clean book bill" by the New York State Senate. The bill, introduced by Senator Martin Kennedy, and which publishers describe as the first step towards censorship of the press, was lost by a vote of 21 to 14.

The bill had been amended since originally introduced in a very drastic form, to permit the taking of expert testimony and to define the meaning of "lewd" and "obscenity."

GANNETT FAILS OF ELECTION BY CLOSE VOTE

747 Members Favor, 249 Oppose Election of Rochester Times-Union—Vote of 796 Favoring Necessary—Hottest Fight in A. P. History

FRANK E. GANNETT, and his Rochester Times-Union, failed of election to membership in the Associated Press this week, after the hottest and closest fight in the history of the Associated Press. Had he received 50 more favorable votes than he did, Mr. Gannett would have been elected.

The total number of votes cast was 996. Mr. Gannett received 747, and 249 votes were cast supporting the protest right of William Randolph Hearst and his Rochester Journal and Post Express.

Results of the poll taken in the early evening of April 20 were announced at 10 o'clock April 21. A sealed report on the vote was then opened by Frank B. Noyes, Washington Star, and A. P. president, who handed it to Kent Cooper, general manager, for reading.

Election tellers in making their reports expressed ironical thanks to the membership for the privilege of staying up all night to count the votes. They started their work shortly after 8 o'clock in the evening and did not finish until 9:15 o'clock the next morning.

The tellers were: Frank E. Tripp, of the Gannett Newspapers; Victor Ridder, New Yorker Staats Zeitung Herold; Thomas E. McEntegart and Paul Kaiser, Jr., of the Hearst legal department. The vote was checked by the Audit Company of New York.

Mr. Gannett, following the defeat of his application, issued an exclusive statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, thanking his friends for their support, and stating that whether or not he would again be an applicant was for the directorate to determine.

"The result of the vote does not affect me personally to any great extent," he declared. "But it does affect the Associated Press. The Associated Press is the loser, not I.

"I am not sure about the future. It is for the board of directors of the Associated Press to determine what they want to do in a case where its news sources are in the hands of an owner of a competing news service."

John Francis Neylan, publisher of the San Francisco Call, who presented Mr. Hearst's side of the argument to the members prior to the poll, declined to comment.

Arguments for Mr. Gannett's election at this year's session were presented by Mr. Noyes, Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of the New York Times, and an A. P. director; E. W. Butler, publisher Buffalo Evening News, and A. P. vice-president, and W. T. Anderson, Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

Mr. Neylan was the only speaker for the opposition.

The directors contended the membership should be represented in Rochester by a newspaper other than one owned by the owner of a competing news service.

Mr. Neylan urged members to uphold the principle of the protest right, and thereby insure the value of an A. P. membership.

This is the first time in several years that the Associated Press annual meeting was adjourned on its first day for continuation later. The last time was just prior to the war in an argument regarding morning and evening newspaper edition hours.

"This action of the directors," Mr. Noyes said, "is taken advisedly after long and careful study not only of the particular situation in Rochester, but of all the facts and considerations touching the general interests and welfare of the Associated Press and its members. The board is clearly of the opinion that the organization would be strengthened and its news service would be improved by the election of the applicant.

"The board further reports that the election of this applicant will in no wise infringe upon the right of protest as defined in section 6 of Article III of the by-laws, on the part of such members as possess that right; because in the future all cases when the right of protest exists and is not waived—as in this case—an applicant can only be admitted by four-fifths votes of the meeting of members.

"This case is an exceptional one. The attitude of the board is clearly reflected by the fact that 12 of the 14 members of the Associated Press serving on the board hold protest right, yet they unanimously favor election of the applicant.

"The board further reports to the membership that the right of protest referred to, such as is held by the Rochester Journal and Post Express is a special right expressly defined by the by-laws and possessed only by 206 members. The great majority of members—1,008 out of 1,214—possess no legal right to prevent the election by the board of new members in their respective territories, and in all such cases the board has full power of election by its own action. Therefore, the election of this applicant would be no precedent that could be remotely construed as in any wise affecting the 1,008 members who do not possess the special right of protest as defined by the by-laws. The board has always scrupulously endeavored to protect the interests of non-protest holding members."

Real barbs were hurled at Mr. Hearst by Mr. Ochs. The publisher of the Times was plain spoken in asserting it was his opinion that a member operating a competitive news-gathering association, the International News Service, should not have an exclusive membership in Rochester.

"It is time for a show-down," he said. "Either we want Mr. Hearst or we do not want him."

Both these speakers were answered by Mr. Neylan, the San Francisco publisher, who shortly after he had taken the stand in defence of the Hearst interests, demonstrated he had the majority of the members attending on his side.

"The right of protest," he argued, "is not an empty right. Mr. Ochs himself, whom you have just heard, pleaded for its establishment when that was an issue. Mr. Ochs has, on occasion, I believe, exercised his protest right, in the past. And now he asks us to wipe out entirely this value.

"All the time I have thought it was the purpose of the Associated Press to make this an exclusive news gathering organization. Why should we now set aside a precedent of 25 years' standing?

"The reasons advanced by Mr. Ochs are boiled down to the fact that Mr. Hearst is the owner of a competing news service. There certainly is nothing in the by-laws preventing a member from running an independent news service. Mr. Hearst has not been charged with any violation of the by-laws. Other great newspapers have established news services of their own."

At this point Mr. Neylan was interrupted by Mr. Ochs. The chair, however, rapped for order, and a personal argument was stopped.

"Mr. Hearst has owned a competing news service for years," Mr. Neylan continued. "Mr. Hearst has paid the highest prices for his memberships in the Associated Press. (Mr. Hearst has 15 A. P. memberships.)

"He recently purchased the Rochester Journal and Post Express and paid a large sum for its Associated Press membership. You let us go into Rochester. We had violated no rule.

"We had spent $275,000 to acquire a membership and now you are being told to destroy its value.

"We who have attended this meeting have heard a great deal of the necessity of establishing an Associated Press membership in Rochester.

"The same necessity was not so long ago the concern of Syracuse. The Associated Press has no evening paper member in Syracuse. Or is it that there is another bad member of the Associated Press in Syracuse? What did they do in this city?

"Why, they established a correspondent in Syracuse.

"Another case is that of Camden, N. J. There is no Associated Press member in Camden, N. J. One paper applied at one time for a membership and the application was endorsed by the entire membership in New Jersey. But a Philadelphia publisher exercised his protest right and still Camden has no membership.

"It seems extremely inconsistent to me that you should try to override a protest right in Rochester, remembering the two similar cases of Syracuse and Camden."

One of the few occasions during which applause was accorded a speaker came about this time. Mr. Neylan was speaking about the bond votes held by Mr. Hearst, which total about 400. These votes can only be used for election of the directors, and the present directorate controls most of the bond votes. There are about 12,000 bond votes outstanding.

Mr. Neylan said Hearst had these 400 bond votes, and Mr. Ochs interrupted with a question.

"He wouldn't surrender these votes would he?"

"Yes," quickly responded Mr. Neylan.

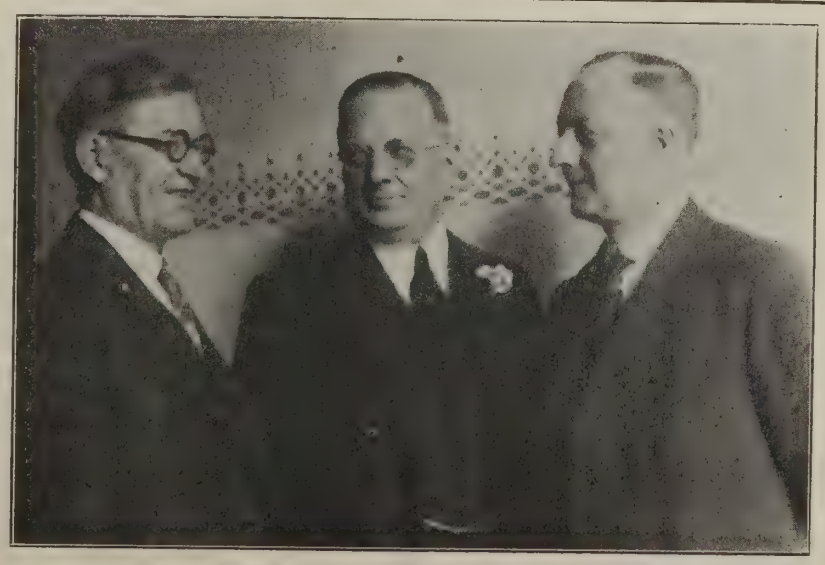
"Is that a proposition?" queried Mr. Noyes from the chair.

"It most certainly is," parried Mr. Neylan. "Within 30 minutes I could get in touch with Mr. Hearst by telephone and I am sure I could gain his permission to sacrifice the bond votes for a protest right."

This was wildly applauded.

The following brief prepared by William A. DeFord, Hearst attorney, was presented by Mr. Neylan in behalf of the Rochester Journal and Post-Express:

THE CLEAR MEANING OF SECTION I OF ARTICLE III OF THE BY-LAWS OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS



The Section, construed by itself, and in its relation to the text and object of the article of which it is a part.

The clear meaning and intent of Section I of Article III of the By-Laws is that an applicant for membership over a right of protest, must receive a vote of not less than four-fifths of all of the members of the Corporation, whether or not they are present and vote either in person or by proxy.

The section provides:

"Members may be elected by the affirmative vote of not less than four-fifths of all the members of the Corporation at any regular meeting of the members of the Corporation or at a special meeting called for that purpose."

The By-Law quoted covers two things only, namely:

(a) The vote by which a member may be elected; and

(b) The time and place at which a member may be elected.

It provides that a member may be elected "by the affirmative vote of not less than four-fifths of all the members of the Corporation."

It provides that a member may only be elected "at a regular meeting of the members of the Corporation, or at a special meeting called for that purpose."

If the Corporation had intended that members might be elected by the affirmative vote of not less than four-fifths of the members of the Corporation present and voting, in person or by proxy, at a regular or special meeting of the Corporation, the By-Law might have been loosely drafted to read as follows:

Members may be elected by the affirmative vote of not less than four-fifths of the members of the Corporation at any regular meeting of the members of the Corporation, or at a special meeting called for that purpose.

The use of the word "all" in the By-Laws as it stands clearly and conclusively shows the meaning of the By-Law to be that members may only be elected by the affirmative vote of not less than four-fifths of all of the members of the corporation, not of the members of the corporation at any regular meeting or at a special meeting called for that purpose.

The use of the word "all" is pure surplusage if the section was intended to provide that a member might be elected by a vote of not less than four-fifths of the members present and voting, either in person or by proxy.

If the framers of the By-Laws had intended that a member might be elected by not less than a four-fifths vote of the members present and voting at a regular or special meeting, either in person or by proxy, they would not have used the loose form of By-Law quoted just above, but they would have drafted a By-Law to clearly and unmistakably show that meaning and intent, in form somewhat as follows:

Members may be elected by the affirmative vote of not less than four-fifths of the members of the Corporation present and voting, either in person or by proxy, at any regular meeting of the members of the Corporation, or at a special meeting called for that purpose.

It seems therefore clear, from an analysis of Section I of Article III of the By-Law itself, that an application for election to membership, over a right of protest unwaived, must receive an affirmative vote of not less than four-fifths of all of the members of the Corporation whether present and voting or not, at the time when the vote is taken.

The foregoing construction of that section is fortified, to the point of conclusiveness, by reference to the provisions of Section 6 of the same article which provides in part as follows:

"Sec. 6. The members of this Corporation may, by an affirmative vote of seven-eighths of all the members, confer upon a member (with such limitations as may be at the time prescribed) a right of protest against the admission of new members by the Board of Directors."

The Corporation clearly attached a high and important value to such a right of protest (clearly intended to create a practically inviolable property right thereby), when it required an affirmative vote of seven-eighths of all the members to confer that right.

This deduction is in itself strengthened by the further provision of Section 2 of Article III, that

"Whenever any member of the Corporation is entitled, as hereinafter specified, to protest against the elections of any new member by the Board of Directors, the Board shall have no power to elect such new member unless it shall have received a waiver in writing of such right of protest from all members entitled thereto * * * ."

The officers of the Corporation have advanced the contention that a right, really a property right, of so great importance and value, conferred by the necessary affirmative vote of seven-eighths of all of the members of the Corporation, may be seriously impaired, and practically destroyed, by the affirmative vote of not less than four-fifths of the members of the Corporation present and voting, either in person or by proxy, at any meeting at which such election may be held.

Let us follow this contention to its logical conclusion:

The membership of the Corporation entitled to vote upon the pending application of Mr. Gannett, is 1,214.

It would have taken the vote of 1,063 of the members to have conferred the right of protest upon the Rochester Journal and Post-Express.

If the writer's interpretation of the true meaning of Section I of Article III of the By-Laws is correct, it would require the vote of 972 to carry the application of Mr. Gannett over the unwaived protest.

If the interpretation put upon the same section by the officers of the Corporation is correct, it would require, (assuming that a bare quorum of 608 voted upon the application), a vote of only about 484 out of a total vote of 1,214 to sustain the application and override the protest.

It will be seen, therefore, if the interpretation which the officers of the Association put upon the By-Law is correct, that a right which could not be create except with a vote of about 1,064 of t members, may be seriously impaired, not in effect destroyed, by a vote of 4 of the members, a conclusion which, co sidering the nature and value of the pro erty right affected), is inconsistent wi the spirit and object of the grant a grossly illogical.

The writer's interpretation of the mea ing of Section I of Article III of the B Laws is further strengthened (if a ditional strength is needed), by a co parative study of the language of Secti 6 of Article III, which provides for t creation of a right of protest, and Section I of Article III, which provid for the overriding of a protest exercis under that right.

Section 6 of Article III (which co tains no descriptive reference to the mee ings at which that right may be co ferred), provides:

"The members of this Corporation ma by an affirmative vote of seven-eighths all the members, confer upon a member etc.

The part of the section quoted defin the vote necessary for the grant of t right of protest.

Section I of Article III, (insofar as provides for the vote by which a right protest may be overridden), provides:

"Members may be elected by the a firmative vote of not less than four-fift of all the members of the Corporation etc.

The language of the two provisions practically identical, in terms, and is ide tical in principle.

The officers of the Corporation w not here contend, (as the writer believes that it does not require an affirmati vote of not less than seven-eighths of a of its members to confer a right protest.

They would not have, by the sam token, even a superficial foundation f their claim that it only requires not le than four-fifths of the votes of the mem bers of the Corporation present and vo ing at a meeting regularly convened override a protest, were it not for t fact that Section I of Article III pr ceeds, after describing the vote necessa to elect an applicant, to define the mee ings at which such an election may held.

This By-Law was drafted to prote rights of News Service which have a quired, through the merit of that servi a high property value. Its protective i tegrity should not be distorted, and th impaired, to serve a temporary use.

This By-Law equally protects, with its general scope, the property rights all members with a right of protest. I meaning cannot be distorted, and i strength thus impaired, to strike o member, without striking them all.

This memorandum was prepared for t use of the member representing t Rochester Journal and Post-Express.

A. N. P. A. MEMBERS ENDORSE EXPANSION PLANS

Favorable Vote Predicted—John Stewart Bryan Will Be President—New Bundle Charges Outlined—Arbitration Contract With Typo Union Accepted, Subject to I. T. U. Approval

WITH all debate behind them, members of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association ended their Thursday session primed to vote on the question as to whether or not the association will expand.

A favorable answer was expected as EDITOR & PUBLISHER went to press. Not a single discordant note marred the presentation of the changed system of collecting dues as forecast in the EDITOR & PUBLISHER Pre-Convention Number.

The biggest A. N. P. A. convention in history is moving to a close, and John Stewart Bryan, Richmond News-Leader, will probably head a reorganized association that will serve its membership in new and important fields. A special free publicity probe as recommended by the Advertising Bureau may shortly be under way.

Charles F. Hart, mechanical superintendent of the New York Times, spoke to the members urging creation of a mechanical department, and E. M. Antim, traffic expert of the Chicago Tribune told of advantages which might be expected to follow organization of a special section of the A. N. P. A. to be devoted to co-operative solution of national and local traffic problems.

In addition to laying the expansion cards on the table the Thursday session took the following action:

Approved the plan of an arbitration contract with the International Typographical Union.

Voted to return to large scale use of the mails as soon as a reduction in rates is enacted and a bundle rate created.

The resolution in which this promise was incorporated urged the joint committee of Congress to bring its work to a conclusion and report to the present session, and asked speedy Congressional action on the report "so as to provide for a reduction of second class mail rates to a basis that will be fair alike to the United States government and the publishers, as they affect newspaper circulation through the United States mails."

Passed a resolution paying tribute to the late Frank A. Munsey, referring specifically to his qualities "of courage, resourcefulness and ambition" and his "noble integrity."

The arbitration resolution, passed after considerable debate, representing various suggestions for dealing with the union, read as follows:

Resolved that the proper officers of this association be authorized to execute an arbitration contract with the International Typographical Union in substantial conformity with that appended to the report of the committee on arbitration of contracts. (This report is published in full in other columns of this issue.)

The postal resolution, which was offered by Maj. E. B. Stahlman, Nashville (Tenn.) Banner, prompted by a statement made by Jerome D. Barnum, Syracuse Post Standard, reads:

BE IT RESOLVED, That the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, representing five hundred publishers of daily newspapers, published in every State of the United States, respectfully represent to the Joint Committee of Congress now considering postal rates should bring its work to a conclusion and make report at the present session; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, That this association earnestly urge upon action by the Congress on that report, so as to provide for a reduction in existing second class mail rates to a basis that will be fair alike to the United States government and the publishers, as they affect newspaper circulation through the United States mails, and also to create a preferred bundle rate which will enable publishers to obtain from the government a service at a reasonable rate which now is available only at prohibitive rates; and John Stewart Bryan, probable president, A. N. P. A.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, That in the event such a reduction in rates is enacted and a bundle rate is created, the members of this association shall avail themselves of such rates so as to facilitate the distribution of newspapers by the Postal Service and increase the revenues of that service; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, That copies of this resolution shall be sent to the chairman of the Joint Sub-Committee of Congress considering postal rates, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, to the President of the United States Senate and to the President of the United States.

Tribute to Mr. Munsey as passed by the members was phrased as follows:

The American Newspaper Publishers' Association records its profound regret in the loss of Frank A. Munsey, for many years a member of this association, and a publisher of long experience and wide influence.

This association remembers with pride the qualities of courage, resourcefulness and ambition which Mr. Munsey displayed in rising to his great success, from humble beginnings and through difficulties which would have halted one of less determined character. Mr. Munsey was a man of noble integrity, scrupulous in observing every obligation. As a journalist, he was vigorous in his assertion of the independence of the press, and in leading in the discussion of public questions. He was a firm believer in the co-operation and association among publishers, and was a valued member and friend of this organization. This Minute, therefore, is spread upon the records of this meeting of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

Postal affairs took the position of honor Wednesday afternoon after President Thomason had welcomed the delegates from South and Central America in the name of the association. The Latin Americans came to the meeting from the New York Times plant, where they had been the luncheon guests of Mr. Ochs, and after their welcome they were whisked to Brooklyn by H. F. Gunnison, E. G. Martin, and H. V. Kaltenborn of the Brooklyn Eagle, who showed them through the Eagle plant and then took them to Coney Island.

Purely formal also was the reading of the president's address and the reports of all committees except those on radio, printing trade schools and national forest resources, which will be read this morning.

All of these reports are printed substantially in full on subsequent pages of this issue. After their presentation, the convention engaged in a brief discussion of newspaper budgets and of the results of group insurance, profit-sharing, and pension plans. Wide interest apparently exists in the latter question, and of the more than twenty publishers who contributed information from their experience, all but one or two stated that their experiments in profit-sharing, insurance, and pension plans had resulted in better feeling among employes, and reduced labor turnover, but had had a negligible effect on eliminating strikes or threatened strikes.

This morning the convention will devote largely to consideration of the new dues schedule and the establishment of new services. This afternoon the annual meeting of the association is scheduled, but it is not improbable that press of business will cause its postponement to Friday.

President Thomason, in welcoming the Latin-American delegates, said:

"It is with sentiments of sincere satisfaction that I discharge the grateful duty of welcoming you in the name of The American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

"The delegates to your Congress are concerned in the problems of editing as well as in those of mechanical production and business administration. Our members are concerned as an Association solely with the business aspects of publishing. Yet there exists between us the close and necessary sympathy that comes of activity in the same fields. And in spite of the fact that we are separated geographically by immense distances, and limited in unrestrained intercourse by the difference in our native tongues, we are knit together by the bonds of a common purpose and a common ideal.

"And after all, it is not external similarity in manners of speech, but the deeper unity of conscious aims that gives to different people a close and sympathetic understanding of each other. This underlying singleness of objective has existed from the foundation of European Colonies in the new hemisphere. It was the struggle for freedom and autonomy first by the English, and later by the Latin-American Colonies that revealed the influence that binds all the peoples of our respective countries in common allegiance to democracy and liberty.

"It is, therefore, as a spokesman of your fellow-laborers in the vast and expanding field of freedom and self-government that in the name of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, I welcome the delegates to the first Pan American Congress of Journalists.

"Our Association does not minimize, or in any way depreciate the essential importance of editorial conduct, but as we are composed of papers of all shades of political opinion, it has manifestly been necessary for us to apply ourselves, solely, to the problems that concern the business end of administration.

"We fear that this established method of procedure may detract somewhat from the interest of our discussions, which are largely, in not entirely, given to technical questions arising under local conditions. We, none-the-less welcome you to our deliberations in the assurance that, however lacking our discussions may be in dramatic interest, or universal appeal, they nevertheless concern the necessary corollaries for the adequate dissemination of our news.

"In closing this brief word of welcome, may I say to your distinguished company that I express the unanimous voice of the entire Association when I convey to you our sense of satisfaction at having had this Congress visit the United States. The inevitable effect of such interchange of visits and ideas is obliged to make for a better understanding of problems which are, at the bottom, the same for all civilized people. Between us there should be no estrangement of blood or speech for as mouthpieces of the democracies of the new World, we are allied by our common enlistment in the Eternal struggle for mastery over the disrupted forces of society. It was the great leader—Thomas Jefferson—who supported the cause of Latin-American freedom all his life, who said: "I would rather have newspapers and no government, than government and no newspaper." In extending to you our hearty greetings, we take heart in the evidence given by your presence that we serve a common purpose in the common aims of your great democracies and our own."

Chairman Barnum of the postal committee outlined in general the policies developed by the committee during the past year, as follows:

1. Reduction of the present general rates applied to the transportation of second class matter to the 1920 schedule.

2. Establishment of a new rate for the service of transportation by the post office on dealers' bundles.

The proposed bundle rate, as outlined by the committee spokesman, is as follows:

For the first zone, within 50 miles of the publication office, 30 cents per hundred pounds.

For the second zone, 50 to 150 miles, 40 cents per hundred pounds.

For the third zone, 150 to 300 miles, 55 cents per hundred pounds.

For the fourth zone, 300 to 500 miles, 75 cents per hundred pounds.

"We are asking establishment of these bundle rates," Mr. Barnum said, "because the newspaper publishers prefer to use the mails if it is possible to do so, rather than divert their papers to motor trucks, baggage cars, or other media of transportation. The transport of the mails is the function of the post office and the publishers want the post office to receive adequate pay for the service it renders them.

"For the transport of bundles in the first zone, the post office would receive under our schedule 30 cents per hundred pounds. The post office pays the railroad for the transportation of this bundle within the 50-mile zone, a trifle less than 12 cents. The net profit to the government is 150 per cent, for the post office has nothing to do with the papers before they are put on the train nor after they are taken off. The publisher takes care of the papers at destination.

"In testimony before the congressional committee, it was that the government pays the railroads $15.75 for the carriage of 1500 pounds of newspapers during a seven day period in the 50-mile zone. The government collects from the newspapers for this same service the sum of $286! The publishers have had no choice but to divert their papers from the mails.

"For instance, the Washington Star ships bundled papers to Manassas, Va., by baggage six days a week at the rate of 30 cents per hundred pounds. When the train stops at Manassas, the baggage clerk throws the papers to the station platform. On Sunday, however, the train does not stop at Manassas and the papers cannot be shipped by baggage to that point. The Star sends them by mail by the same train, in the other end of the same car, and the mail clerk throws the bundle off as the train rolls past the station. The Star pays the post office not 30 cents per 100 pounds, but $1.90 per hundred for this service!

"The congressional committee also learned from witnesses that 97 per cent of all newspaper bundles are delivered within the 150-mile radius. The average limit in New York State is between 60 and 70 miles.

"On bundles weighing less than two pounds, our schedule provides that the publisher shall pay not less than 1 cent a pound for the first two zones. On packages weighing from two to 5 pounds, the publisher would not pay less than 2 cents per pound and on packages weighing more than five pounds, the 100-pound rate would apply.

"Another point which the committee has stressed is that the post office should take cognizance of the development of hard roads in the United States. More than 500,000 miles have been completed during the past 25 years and more than 300,000 will be completed during the next five years. The investment in roads and in equipment for using them exceeds the capital investment of all the railroads and the mileage of hard roads now in use is double that of the railway rights of way. The mileage of the railways—that is the number of trains run—has decreased 20 per cent in the past 25 years, the local short hauls having been taken over by the motor truck operating on hard-surfaced roads.

"The government has spent $750,000,000 in constructing and supervising the construction of these highways, for they are designated as post roads, but the post office department is making no use of them. We have 40-hour air-mail service from coast to coast, but we can hardly get 24-hour service from one county to the next county. The local mail service, which is that of chief interest to the newspaper publisher, has been badly neglected by the post office failure to adapt its methods to modern transportation conditions.

"The railroads have recognized the change and they are now asking the privilege of establishing bus routes parallelling at least 2,000 miles of their roadbed. This step will result in still greater diminution of local mail railroad service to the publishers' disadvantage.

"Let me repeat that the publishers want to have the post office take care of their business and do so at a profit. We consider the bundle rates amply justified by the fact that the association will promise if they are enacted to return to the mails a great tonnage of newspapers which are now carried by other channels. There has been a 20 per cent diminution in the number of copies of newspapers shipped by newspapers through the mails since 1920—a period which has seen the weight of newspapers increased by 25 per cent. The post office policy has resulted in financial losses in both of these directions. Its revenue from newspaper transportation will be doubled if the committee's proposed rates are made law.

"We want the joint congressional postal committee to report immediately to Congress, so that legislation may be enacted at this session."

The committee was highly commended by two veterans of postal rate fights—Major E. B. Stahlman, publisher of the Nashville Banner, and Col. Robert Ewing, publisher of the New Orleans States and chairman of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association postal committee.

Cortissoz Lecturing at Amherst

Royal Cortissoz, art critic of the New York Herald Tribune, started a series of three lectures on art at Amherst College, April 21. The other two will be given on April 28 and May 5. The subjects are, "The Enchantment of Technique in Painting," "The Modernist Movement in Painting," and "The Genius of American Art."

LESLIE NEAFIE WITH A LOW OF 74 WINS A. N. P. A. GOLF TOURNEY

LESLIE NEAFIE, of the Toledo Blade won the publishers' Gold Match played on the links of the Westchester-Biltmore Club at Rye, Monday afternoon, with a net score of 74.

The tournament, arranged as a feature of the A.N.P.A. convention, drew a large number of entrants.

S. E. Thomason, of the Chicago Tribune and A.N.P.A. president, was the winner of second place with a net score of 78.

Henry Hall of the Jamestown (N. Y.) Journal and Robert Meigs of Chicago tied for third place with scores of 79.

The weather was bad. The sun came out only occasionally and even then it seemed that Old Sol switched on ice instead of warmth. It was the intense cold that tended to shoot up the scores, especially for visitors from the South who came dressed for spring and not winter.

Some of the best scores, in addition to the leaders, were: F. Bush, 53—49—102; A. Hecox, 51—47—98; T. S. Bush, 55—51—106; E. Hanson, 51—54—105; Ray Hollis, 53—48—101; George Graff, 55—52—107; W. Metten, 51—55—106; V. Dice, 52—63—115; J. Bornum, 50—53—103, and L. Young, 58—50—108.

There were thirty-five prizes which were awarded by Howard Davis of the New York Herald Tribune.

CONVENTION CLOSE-UPS

John L. Stewart, publisher of the Washington (Pa.) Observer and Reporter, returned from a world tour to attend the publishers' meetings.

MOORE RESIGNS FROM HEARST EMPLOY

President of Publications Leaves to Buy Interest in Butterick Company—Ill Health Forced Change

Joseph A. Moore, president of the Hearst Publications, after eleven years in the employ of William Randolph Hearst, has resigned to become president of the Butterick Publications. He is succeeded in the Hearst magazine field by P. Hathaway.

Mr. Moore was placed in charge of Good Housekeeping magazine eleven years ago this month, and since that time has gradually taken charge of the rest of the Hearst publications.

At the time of his resignation he was a member of the Executive Committee of all the Hearst interests and treasurer of a number of Hearst publications.

Owing to ill health he wished to retire from editorial work. The opportunity was offered to buy a controlling interest in the Butterick Publications. Mr. Moore's holdings, combined with that of Stanley R. Latshaw, comprises two thirds of the voting stock.

The first Executive Committee meeting was held April 21 with the new members.

Mr. Moore wishes to state there was no other reason than ill health and a desire to do something himself which led to his retirement from the Hearst publications. He and Mr. Hearst have always been the best of friends and he has always found him a considerate employer, he said.

HUNDRED THOUSAND GROUP

Plans to Expand Outlined at Waldorf Luncheon Meeting

A meeting, followed by a luncheon, of the "100,000 Group of American Cities," was held in the Waldorf Apartments April 19. The directors' reports were presented, and plans discussed for the coming year. Additional newspapers were proposed to be invited to join the organization.

The association was organized in 1924, and is composed of newspapers in 81 towns of 100,000 population or over. An annual book is published in which is given the market conditions in each of the cities who are members. These are distributed to advertisers. The last publication ran to 15,000 copies.

W. A. Strong, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, is president of the association, and L. M. Barton, advertising manager of the same paper, is secretary.

N. Y. DAILIES PLANNING CO-OPERATIVE DRIVE

Individual Market Advantages to be Broadcast by Newspapers in Plan to Sell State as Merchandise Area

A state-wide advertising campaign to emphasize the value of New York State as a test ground for national advertisers was decided upon at a meeting of executives of the New York Advertising Managers' Association, publishers, advertising agency representatives and business representatives of New York City newspapers held at the Waldorf Wednesday night.

Representing the advertising managers at the meeting were L. S. Chubbuck, president of the state association and advertising manager of the Binghamton Press and Russell Harris, secretary of the group, who is advertising manager of the Utica (N. Y.) Press.

Representing state publishers were Frank E. Tripp, general manager of the Gannett newspapers; R. E. O'Hara, Syracuse Herald; and R. E. Bennett, of the Binghamton Press.

A number of representatives of New York advertising agencies were present.

The plan as presented contemplates the donation of advertising space by co-operating dailies for the purpose of impressing national advertisers with the value of New York newspapers as test mediums.

ROOSEVELT CHIEF SPEAKER AT A. N. P. A. BANQUET

Former President's Son Talks on Dry Law Enforcement—Five Hundred Publishers Present at Annual Bureau of Advertising Convention Dinner—Speaker Scores Sentimentality in Treatment of Criminals

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, JR., was guest of honor and chief speaker at the annual banquet of the Bureau of Advertising of the A. N. P. A., the brilliant social affair of the annual Waldorf convention week. The grand ball room of New York's famous hotel, was glittering with the evening gowns of the wives of newspaper publishers and editors.

Entertainment was furnished by the nimble wit of Will Rogers. S. E. Thomason, Chicago Tribune, presided.

The full text of Mr. Roosevelt's address follows:

The cornerstone of our American government is obedience to the laws we ourselves have made.

Our government announces that it is a government for the people, of the people, and by the people. The majority of the people control its machinery. The laws, at least potentially are enacted by the majority of the people.

By the same token, should a law that has been enacted prove wrong, and the majority of the people wish its repeal, the means are established whereby it may be repealed. Our laws, therefore, are in our own hands, both to make and to repeal. We are fouling our own nest when we flaunt and disobey them.

If our country were a despotism or a tyranny, there might be some excuse for violating the laws which we, as a people, were powerless to repeal or amend. As we are a republic, there is none. If there were no government machinery whereby bad or foolish laws might be changed, there would be some excuse for having them on our statute books.

We can change bad or foolish laws, therefore there is no excuse for having them on our statute books. The man is unsound who says, "I will disobey this law because I am too lazy to work for its repeal," or "I will violate this law because I am unable to rally sufficient sentiment against it to repeal it."

The duty of all public officers is to endeavor to repeal or modify such laws as may be improper, and equally, to bend every effort to the enforcement of the laws that exist on the statute books, regardless of his feeling thereon.

We have no people in this country who have the right to consider themselves above the law. We talk of liberty. It is trite to say that liberty is not license. Our liberty comes by law, and must be exercised under the law.

Widespread law violation is sweeping our country. In its wake are crimes of every sort and description. There is nothing more contagious than crime and license. The murders in Herrin and the latest burglary in New York City spring from the same source and are bred by the same conditions.

Should this continue, our government will become a mockery. The liberty which is so grandiloquently proclaimed in patriotic orations on our national holidays will cease to exist, and America will go into the discard.

One of the causes of this law violation is the fact that so many escape the penalties of the law. This is true both as to major and minor crimes.

An association for the study of criminal justice was organized in Missouri not long ago. In one of their recent reports, the following figures are given:

In St. Louis, during a single year (ending October 1, 1924)—

There were 149 cases of murder or manslaughter and only 25 criminals were convicted;

There were 2,701 burglaries reported, and only 107 criminals were convicted;

There were 2,075 robberies reported, and only 85 criminals were convicted;

There were 4,277 larcenies reported, and only 94 criminals were convicted;

Altogether, there were 13,444 major crimes reported, and but 374 criminals convicted.

In Kansas City, during the same period—

There were 131 cases of manslaughter or murder, and only 17 criminals convicted;

There were 1,282 robberies reported, and only 46 criminals were convicted;

There were 2,375 burglaries reported, and only 47 criminals were convicted.

To sum up:

In St. Louis, the individual who commits manslaughter or murder has a 6 to 1 chance of going free;

In Kansas City, an 11 to 1 chance;

In St. Louis, the robbers have a chance of 24½ to 1 in their favor;

In Kansas City, according to police figures, 28 to 1.

The burglars in St. Louis have a 25 to 1 chance;

In Kansas City, at least 50 to 1.

Records are not available in other parts of the United States, but I see no reason to believe that in our other great cities, the story would be materially different.

A burglar in Kansas City takes hardly more than an ordinary business risk. With the odds so much in favor of the offender, is it any wonder that evily disposed people are tempted to commit crimes?

Much of the cause of non-enforcement of penalties must be charged to the sloppy sentimentality of many of our own people. Of course, we do not want to punish an innocent man, but we must not make it all but impossible to convict a guilty man.

There is hardly a murderer, no matter how gross his crime, who does not find a body of weak-minded sentimentalists endeavoring to free him from the consequences of his act. Far too often these have their way, and the guilty man gets a punishment which from its very mildness is an incentive to further crime.

Practically every murderer today sets up at once a plea of insanity, and the ghastlier his crime the more chance of his success. All those who commit crimes are to a certain extent abnormal, and there can always be found alienists who will testify to the fact. That is no reason, however, that criminals should be allowed to escape the consequences of their actions. If a mad dog bites you, you do not forgive him because he is mad, you put him out of the way to protect yourself and others in the future.

As an illustration of the way criminals, and largely unbalanced criminals can still reason and weigh the penalties they may receive, the man who shot my father at Milwaukee followed my father through a number of states where there was a death penalty, but did not make his attack until he had reached a state where there was no death penalty.

Of course, there should be no inhumanity or brutality in dealing with prisoners. The first consideration, however, as far as crime is concerned, is not the prisoner, but the protection of the majority of the people. The trust that is reposed in public servants is the interest of the majority, and it is that that must be their constant care.

All crime is tragic, because it is axiomatic that the relatives of the criminals are those who suffer must. Sometimes it is a wife and children; sometimes a mother. It tears the heart of the man in authority to administer justice where it strikes at these. He must do so, however, or be untrue to his trust, the interests of the community as a whole. It is infinitely more pleasant for him to give rein to his natural pity, and grant a pardon. Nine times out of ten, if he does so, he is untrue to his trust as a public officer. Sloppy philanthropy is the blood brother of crime. What we must strive for is sweeping and unswerving punishment for all criminals, justice unswayed by fear or favor. Once you convince the criminally inclined that a lawless act predicates a lawful punishment, the vast majority of them will think twice before violating the law.

Ably abetting the criminals, are the lawyers who regard the law not as a means of administering justice, but as a means of escaping justice. These men spend their time in endeavoring to find technicalities which will enable them to subvert the evident intention of those who passed the law. The case before the court degenerates from an endeavor to administer justice to a complicated and furtive game of wits which makes the word justice a mockery.

Perhaps one of the most potent influences for law violation are those law-making bodies which seem to believe that they can justify their existence only by passing additional laws, and which pass law after law without regard to either its fundamental soundness or its practicability. This, of course, is thoroughly wrong. It is putting the cart before the horse.

Laws should not be passed lightly. The passage of a new law should be treated rather in the light of a last resort than as a first aid measure.

There are many matters which are not properly judicable under our theory of government. For example, the people could so amend the Constitution that a law might be passed, declaring that all persons in the United States should practice some particular religious faith, or prescribing some scientific theory. That would be oppression.

Majorities must not trespass on the rights of minorities. We must guard against any attempt to legislate a state of mind. We have given to the majority vast power. It is necessary that they should have it in a republic. The majority must bear in mind, however, that the power is given to them as a sacred trust. If they use it improperly they may damage irretrievably the republic, for the greater the power, the more dangerous the abuse.

Bryce, in his "American Commonwealth," speaking of the New England town meeting, says that the people of New England at that time were of such character that they would have made almost any form of government workable. This is merely another way of saying that clean, honest, hard-working, self-respecting citizens, under a government with few laws, will have a society freer from vice than illiterate, unstable citizens under a government loaded down with laws. Wherever possible, we should endeavor to educate people to eliminate evil, rather than to legislate against it.

Those who rush to the legislature and demand the passage of new laws to guard against every unsound practice and evil, old or new, are only too often merely lazy. They shirk the infinitely more difficult and infinitely sounder course of undertaking to educate the community to see the truth and abolish the evil.

The continual passage of laws for the purpose of modifying or correcting morals is like giving drink to cure dropsy. Build a public character by training and education, and you have a far more lasting and sounder remedy than you can get by a bushel basket of legal enactments. Statute books loaded down with laws are the bane of a republic. We have too many laws, not too few. What we need is less laws and stricter enforcement of those that exist.

Laws that for one reason or another do not meet with the approval of the majority of a community are particularly pernicious. It may be that they are too strict. It may be that they are on some subject which the average individual believes is one that should not be regulated by law, but should be governed by the innate decency and honesty of the individual.

Whatever the reason, however, these laws lay themselves open to careless violation, and careless violation of one law breeds contempt for all laws. In this category comes the Volstead Law. Perhaps no law in the community has contributed more to the breakdown of the respect for law.

Entirely outside of the moral or Constitutional aspect of this law, it has brought about law violation on a more commercialized and gigantic scale than our country has ever known before. This law has built up a profession in the United States, that of the violaters. Not only is there a considerable body of our citizens engaged in making a living by violating this law, but there is another considerable body who live by preying on them, for corruption always breeds maggots.

To me, this is the principal objection to it.

Questionnaires were recently sent to the newspapers in towns of 20,000 or more in the United States, requesting both editor and police reporter of the papers to comment on the crime situation in their cities. In a very large number of cases, this question elicited a response to the effect that the Volstead Law was very greatly at fault.

I have never been for the Volstead Law, primarily because it always seemed that this would be the result. The only time I could legally express my opinion thereon was when the so-called "Beer Bill" was before the Legislature when I was a member. I voted for the Beer Bill.

Of course, I am opposed to the saloon. I am convinced, however, that the repeal or modification of the Volstead Law does not predicate the return of the saloon. That can be prevented by enactment. Were I a member of the federal congress, I would vote for the modification or repeal of the Volstead Law, and the substitution therefor of some enactment permitting the increase of alcoholic content to such a point as the Constitution might permit. Delimitation should be left to the states individually. I believe this to be absolutely necessary in order to check the murder, corruption and other evils that have followed in the train of this law.

I want no misunderstanding on this, however. Public officials should endeavor, and genuinely endeavor, to enforce this law. Equally pernicious with the foolish laws are those public officials who, truckling for popular favor, refuse to honestly try to enforce the laws as they stand on the statute books. As I have said, I have been and am against the Volstead Law. But were I in public office, I would bend every effort to enforce this law, because the duty of every public official is to enforce the laws, regardless of what his personal opinion may be on them.

There will be necessary a big increase of officials and machinery if this law is to be enforced. Those who advocate the Volstead Law must face this fact and be prepared to stand their share of the burden.

It is no excuse to say you do not like a law and do not believe in it. If it is a law, it must be enforced. There are many laws which it would be either convenient or profitable for each of us to violate from time to time. If we permitted ourselves the liberty of such violation, there would be no law, and no United States. There is but one sound way to act when one disapproves of a law, and that is to endeavor to repeal it.

To illustrate what I mean: Those opposed to the Volstead Law should be sure to register their opinion on it if the subject comes up at a referendum. They should join any reputable organization which expresses their views. They should acquaint their congressmen and senators with their opinion, for Washington is the only place where legal action can be taken now. No state official has the power to change or modify the Volstead Law in the slightest particular.

As for our public servants, if they do not believe in the Volstead Law, they should work for its repeal or modification in the federal congress, but while it is a law of the land, they should enforce it with all the powers that lie in their office. Honesty demands that the public officials genuinely strive to enforce the law by enactment and otherwise, even if they believe it wrong, for not to endeavor to enforce it is to play into the hands of the corruptionists, the anarchists, and all those who would overturn our government.

People are notoriously short-sighted. There are many business men who support with all their strength the opposition to law enforcement in this matter. Those business men are doing more to hurt themselves than anyone else, for their very existence as business men depends on the people in this country retaining their respect for law. Do they intend "To pluck down justice from its awful bench,

To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword,
That guards the peace and safety of their person?"

If law falls into disrepute, those who have not will certainly help themselves to the possessions of those who have.

The country must awake and face this problem of law violation and crime. If it does not, the rottenness will strike to the bone in our body politic. We need less laws, better laws, and strict enforcement of those that exist.

REGIONAL DIRECTORS A. N. P. A. GUESTS

Co-operation Promised by Speakers at Dinner Between National Association and Regional Bodies

Co-operation between the American Newspaper Publishers Association and the state and regional publishers groups was promised at a dinner given by the directors of the A.N.P.A. to presidents of the other associations on April 21.

Discussion at the banquet evolved a plan providing for a system of inter-locking committees to work in harmony for more effective results and to avoid duplication and concomitant waste motion.

The dinner, at which S. E. Thomason, Chicago Tribune, and A.N.P.A. president, presided was held this year to correct erroneous suggestions in circulation that strengthening and expansion of the A.N.P.A. would be accompanied by weakening of the inter-state and regional bodies.

It was established by those attending that it would be for the betterment of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, the Inland Daily Press Association, the Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers Association, and the Canadian Newspaper Publishers Association, and others to have the assistance of the A.N.P.A., or in other words to work in harmony with each other.

Expansion of the A.N.P.A. was enthusiastically approved by the group presidents or their representatives, attending.

"We made a complete statement of our purposes," Mr. Thomason told EDITOR & PUBLISHER after the dinner, "and they were endorsed unanimously."

Those present were John Stewart Bryan, George M. Rogers, Howard Davis, J. G. Bell, F. J. Burd, Harry Chandler, Edward H. Butler, Charles H. Taylor, J. R. Williams, Harvey J. Kelly, H. W. Slagg, T. P. Seymour, W. C. Johnson, Granston Williams, Wil V. Tufford, H. L. Jones, J. W. Magers, Wm. F. Metten, James C. Murray, George E. Scroggie, Arthur Partridge, J. B. Pinkham, L. L. Jones, A. W. Fell, Bloor Schleppy, and J. B. Palmer.

COMMEMORATING FIRST PAN-AMERICAN PRESS CONGRESS

Dean Walter Williams, president of the first Pan-American Congress of Journalists puts the first spadeful of dirt about the tree which was planted in the grounds of the Pan-American Union to commemorate the meeting held in Washington from April 7 to 13, 1926.

NEWSPAPER TRADE EXPOSITION DRAWS BIGGEST CROWDS IN HISTORY

Annual Exhibits in Waldorf Corridors Overflow to Upper and Lower Floors, with More Firms Represented and Bigger Visiting Lists than Usual—Newcomers Have Booths

WITH nearly 100 syndicates and supply firms exhibiting, the annual newspaper trade exposition held in Waldorf corridors during convention week surpassed all previous records for both quantity and quality this year. Ad-spangled walls held out inviting offers and editors and publishers responded in larger numbers than ever before.

Mechanical displays drew attention of publishers and press room experts, and the editors found a feast of features laid out for their digestion.

So many companies this year chose the newspaper trade exposition as a means of meeting and displaying their wares to convention delegates, that not only the halls on the convention floor were crowded, but the exhibitors spilled over into new rooms and corners in the foyer and on upper floors.

It was impossible for any publisher to visit all exhibits during a single day, without taking along a supply of corn plasters.

Newcomers among the exhibitors included Sam Weston, who has had a Birotadruck machine set up in a vacant store off the hotel's main lounge room on the street floor; the International Intaglio Corporation; sharing quarters with a trade paper; the H. D. Roosen Company, ink makers; Partlow Company; Johnson Features Syndicate, Inc., and Editors Features Service, Inc., of New York and Cleveland; Bourgess Service, Inc., makers of shading sheets; the New York Graphic Syndicate; Editors Syndicate; Kohler System; and Clifford Yewdall, newspaper accountant and auditor.

Added free entertainment features were this year offered to publishers by the supply men. The United Press Associations ran a daily moving picture showing the work of U. P. correspondents around the world. Mrs. Mary Harriman Rumsey, the directors and officers of Editors Features Service, Inc., and Johnson Featues, Inc., put on a show with Broadway talent in a private theater near convention headquarters.

In EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S own headquarters, a new feature was added this year, in the form of a complete and unusual exhibit of Hispanic-American magazine covers, illustrations, cartoons, and photographs. The collection was assembled by the late Dr. Peter H. Goldsmith of the Inter-American Section of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, of which Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, Columbia University, is the president.

Also on display by EDITOR & PUBLISHER were the silver tokens presented by Chin Yun-Peng, Prime Minister of China, to the Press Congress of the World. The presentation consists of a large loving cup and a Chinese Pagado Arch, symbolizing, the four corners of the earth, from which the words news are taken, North, East, West, and South.

This is the first year the Goss Printing Press Company has had their products exhibited as a working display. They had set up one of their combination wet-end dry matrix rolling machines, a motor driven steam table for drying wet mats, a full sized 4-plate wide plate cylinder and a model of the folding cylinder with the Goss three-way folding cam.

The Partlow Corporation, Utica, a newcomer among exhibitors, was passing out circulars describing their heat control and automatic burning equipment for stereotype pots and remelting pots. Chief factors claimed are low cost with no waste gas, incident to manual control, and convenience because of small space required for installation.

The Birotadruck matrice press, which is being marketed by S. P. Weston, was in operation almost continuously with interested publishers watching. The machine is erected in a store on the ground floor of the Waldorf. One page of type had been used for demonstration purposes throughout Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and according to those in charge more than 250 mats had been impressed.

Lanston Monotype Machine Company was showing a new giant caster, casting 72 point initials, and 72 point border corner pieces.

A moving picture of the Kohler System in operation in the plant of the Detroit News was shown in miniature near the stairway to the convention floor. What was shown in the motion picture was the ease of changing paper rolls without stopping the presses, by means of the Kohler Magazine Reels.

Members of the A. N. P. A. who have been contributing to the support of printing trades schools for several years had the results of this work visualized at the meeting by a display which occupied one side of the information room.

A. SCHAEFER RE-ELECTED

Manager of Fort Wayne (Ind.) Journal-Gazette Heads Morning Newspaper Group

A. Schaefer, business manager of the Fort Wayne (Ind.) Journal-Gazette, was re-elected president of the Morning Newspaper Publishers Association of America at the annual meeting held at the Waldorf April 22. W. H. McConnel, publisher Springfield (Ill.) State Journal, was re-elected vice-president, and E. J. Treffinger, publisher, Richmond (Ind.) Item, secretary-treasurer. Emerson B. Knight, president of Emerson B. Knight, Inc., Indianapolis, will handle the advertising.

The group plans to spend $40,000 in newspaper advertising this year promoting the morning newspapers.

The organization represents 26 states and has a total membership of 83 newspapers. Among the larger newspaper members are the Chicago Herald-Examiner; Philadelphia Record; Memphis Commercial-Appeal; New Orleans Times-Picayune and Hawaii Advertiser.

The next meeting of the association will be held in Chicago during the annual convention of the Audit Bureau of Circulations next October.

The Morning Newspaper Publishers' Association of America was organized five years ago at an Associated Press and American Newspaper Publishers Association convention in New York, and has grown rapidly since then.

"FOUR A" MEMBERS GREET LATIN-AMERICANS

"You Have Widened Our Vision," Says O'Shaughnessy, Secretary, at Breakfast Meeting—Mitre, Durstine, Cooper and Furay Talk on News and Advertising

LATIN-AMERICAN editors ate advertising agency affairs with their breakfast grapefruits at the Hotel Commodore, New York, April 22, as guests of the American Association of Advertising Agencies. Functions of an advertising agency to aid publishers and advertisers and the gathering of South American news was discussed by speakers, James O'Shaughnessy, secretary and Roy Durstine, president of the A.A.A.A.; Jorge Mitre, director of Buenos Aires La Nacion, James H. Furay, United Press Association, and Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press. J. W. Sanger, Frank Seaman Agency, Inc., presided.

Mr. O'Shaughnessy explaining the idea behind the breakfast quoted from a speech delivered by Senor Tablada, Mexico City El Universal, at the First Pan-American Press Congress in Washington.

"Advertising," Sr. Tablada had said, "is the material in journalism, the editorial is the intellectual, and the ethics the spiritual."

Mr. O'Shaughnessy pointed out that as the dissemination of news between nations expands the volume of international advertising will enlarge. The "Four A's," he said, would be ready for that day. He told the visiting editors of the complete international rate and data file his organization has already at hand. In conclusion, Mr. O'Shaughnessy said.

"You gentlemen of Latin American journalism have written the most beautiful page in the new history of the western hemisphere by participating in the assemblage here this morning. You have widened our vision, strengthened our high purposes, and you have given us great and enduring honor."

At the speakers table were: Frank Presbey, Frank Presbey Co.; Frank Seaman, Frank Seaman, Inc.; Franklin Adams, Pan-American Union; James Wright Brown, EDITOR & PUBLISHER; Col. Charles E. Warren, Vice-Pres., Irving Bank-Columbia Trust Co.; Joseph A. Richards, Joseph Richards Company; I. W. Diggs, General Outdoor Advertising Co.; C. K. Woodbridge, president, Associated Advertising Clubs of the World; Jesse H. Neal, executive secretary, Associated Business Papers, Inc.; Newcomb Cleveland, Erickson Company; S. C. Mead, The Merchants Association of New York; Walter Hine, Frank Seaman, Inc.; Dr. Maximo Soto Hall, La Prensa, Buenos Aires.

Dr. Jorge Mitre, who spoke on behalf of the visiting journalists, told how Latin-American newspapers had overcome various objections on the part of United States advertisers in placing copy in South American newspapers.

He repeated the hope he had previously expressed in EDITOR & PUBLISHER that his initiative in auditing circulation would be followed by other Latin-American dailies.

The Spanish-Americans were welcomed by Roy Durstine, of Barton, Durstine & Osborne, and president of the "Four A's." He told of the great developments made in the past few years in services performed by American advertising agencies.

"We sincerely hope," he declared, "that your visit may be the beginning of a greater extension of this service, the value of which it appears has already been clearly demonstrated both to the publishers and the advertisers of our own country."

"The work of gathering and distributing news in the international field really means conveying and distributing the story of today to the peoples of the world today," Mr. Furay said. "The world is full of news and peoples everywhere on the globe are living their lives as individuals, and as groups in communities and in nations. Each individual and each group has its own joys and sorrows, tragedies and pleasures. Each one has, too, its own problems.

"And its problems and its viewpoint and the news of the world in which it is particularly interested are based on its history, tradition, environment, culture. If all peoples had the same history, tradition, culture and environment their problems and viewpoints would be much the same and their news tastes would differ very little. But they do not: and it is precisely in these differences of viewpoint that the real difficulties and problems of international journalism lie.

"Most misunderstandings between nations can be traced to differences in viewpoint and it is one of the first duties of the man engaged in the work of delivering a world news service to the peoples of the world to take those differences into consideration always. He must recognize and keep steadily before him a sense of the tremendous responsibility which he holds. He must never forget that the influence of news dispatches on nations, as on individuals, is often enormous. If he does not recognize these things, if he regards himself merely as a machine having no responsibility for the consequences of what may pass through his hands, he has no place in international journalism.

"Misstatement or distortion of facts having international significance may easily lead to serious international consequences. And deliberate misstatement or distortion is a capital offense. The international journalist must try to state the facts fairly and adequately and, above all, as much as possible he must have a certain understanding and what our Latin American friends call simpatico.

"Several of the Latin American journalists during the recent Pan American Congress in Washington remarked that Latin Americans best understand Latin America and that it is quite true. The journalist in international news distribution that embraces the whole world cannot simultaneously be a Latin American and an Anglo-Saxon and an Oriental and a Slav, but he always has one sure guide which cannot fail him in any crisis. That is the Truth.

"International Truth does not consist in stating the facts of the news as seen with American eyes or Oriental eyes or through the colored glasses which national prejudices sometimes produce. The international journalist must discard national prejudices and ignore the promptings of his personal patriotism. Facts and the Truth impersonally sought and impersonally stated without ulterior purpose and wihtout intent to serve any cause, personal or private, national or political, are the standard.

"Vice President Dawes said in Washington last week that the greatest thing to be gained by the recent congress of journalists was the contacts that it made possible. In a larger sense, that is really what international news distribution is—furnishing the contacts between peoples of the world so that each will be closer to the others. And, being closer to the others, each will better understand the others.

"And that is the goal towards which men engaged in international journalism are striving. It is their hope that, by bringing nations closer together, they will promote closer international understanding."

"I wish to make a few remarks of my experience during the seven years that have passed since I was last in the United States," Mr. Mitre said. "In that time I have found that there were several objections to advertsiing in South America.

"I would name the following: first, a lack of knowledge of the various South American countries; second, the absence of a fixed rate for advertising both at home and abroad; third, unreliable statements regarding circulation.

"I have endeavored to meet these three points by creating in my paper an office for the preparation of reports regarding business conditions, and these reports are distributed free. The same office endeavors to furnish reports on any information requested by advertisers. In regard to the second point, I have enforced a fixed rate for advertising obtained at home and abroad, and have announced that rate publicly. In order to meet the third objection, I have taken even more definite steps. As part of a plan to support the claim of La Nacion having the largest circulation in South America I asked the Audit Bureau of Circulation to send an officer at our expense to examine and make a report of our circulation. Unfortunately, its policy would not permit this and they were unable to accede to our request.

"At the same time they expressed regret that they were not able to extend the activities of the bureau to Argentina. We then decided to have our circulation audited and certified, and a quarterly audit is now made and the results are published. The three firms employed by us are Deloite, Plander, Griffiths & Co., Price, Waterhouse, Saller & Co., and Arturo R. Zoppi, the national public accountant. Although we have been auditing our circulation only a little more than a year it has proved entirely successful, and business men are rapidly realizing the value of audited circulation.

"I know you will pardon me for talking about my own paper because I feel that it is in concrete facts such as these that you are interested. Moreover, I hope that our example in this respect will be imitated, and that the era of exaggerated claims of circulation, based only on exceptional figures, will come to an end and give place to the audited system which is working so splendidly in the United States. When we come to consider it there is no reason why a paper which has a small circulation should be ashamed to show its figures. Physically I am one of the smallest men here, but it does not follow that even in your presence I need be ashamed. I have tried to correct what is wrong with our system, and I would advise you that it might be helpful if you would do the same with your geographical impressions of South America. You are apt to think of the great land lying to the South as one country, but you should remember that it is made up of several important republics—alike, it is true, in their sentiment of friendship for the United States, but in many aspects of commerce and industry different and individual."

"It is a very great privilege to have the honor of welcoming you in the name of the American Association of Advertising Agencies," said Mr. Durstine.

"No doubt you have been told repeatedly since you have been our guests in this country, that the chief benefits of your visit will be a more complete mutual understanding of your industries and ours, your methods and ours and your people and ours. You must be very weary of having facts and figures thrust at you and of being asked to give in return the information which we all so much desire.

"Yet, I can assure you that if we the advertising agencies of the United States are to be useful to our clients and to you in helping through a plan of advertising to develop the sales possibilities of our clients in your countries, we must receive all the information that you can give us.

"As an example of what I mean, I may tell you that in one advertising agency in New York, a plan is now being formulated to send to your countries an investigator seeking trade information in behalf of five manufacturers engaged in non-competing but allied lines. It was found that sources of printed information now in our hands were not adequate when measured by the standards applied by the advertising agency of today, planning its domestic advertising programs. We want more adequate detailed facts of buying habits and market conditions and this latest effort is merely typical of the way in which we are constantly approaching the same problem in the United States.

"On our part, we want you to know a great deal about the way in which the advertising agency of today is approaching its very vital task of assisting manufacturers in the marketing of their products.

"A generation ago the type of advertising agency organization as it exists today was virtually unknown.

"Advertising agents merely sold space. This was at the period in which our industries were only beginning to enter into an era of production on a large scale. One manufacturer after another found that he could produce much more than the public in his own neighborhood could consume. How could the collar manufacturer in Troy or the furniture manufacturer in Grand Rapids tell the man and woman who lived in California or Alabama about their products? By advertising. So the need arose for the type of business man who could do the telling.

"The publishers had white space for sale but the manufacturer wanted some one to help him convey a message in that white space. The publisher realized that his white space was not a finished product until it contained the advertiser's story.

"With this obvious need on the part of both the manufacturer and the advertiser, it was only a question of time until there should come into existence the type of organization which is known here today as the advertising agency. So now we have these organizations, some of them small, some of them large, some serving a few clients, some many—all devoted to finding out what conditions are and how best to meet them by interpreting the advertiser's story in a way that will increase his sales and reputation.

"These advertising agencies, responsible for the preparation of so great a share of national advertising, are composed of investigators who study the conditions of the market, of executives trained and experienced in drawing conclusions from the material obtained, of artists and writers skilled in interpreting a marketing idea. Working in the closest co-operation with the manufacturers' own advertising experts, it is the privilege of these agencies to apply their specialized creative abilities to opening up new markets for the advertiser and to creating and maintaining new advertisers for the publisher.

"To you, gentlemen, it seems to me, the most interesting aspect of our agencies' work is that this highly developed service has been too greatly restricted to the development of markets within the boundaries of the United States. We sincerely hope that your visit may be the beginning of a greater extension of this service, the value of which it appears has already been clearly demonstrated both to the publisher and the advertisers of our own country.

"It is an obvious but none the less vital fact that as American manufacturers extend the boundaries of their own selling, they must apply the same careful planning, the same skilled use of white space in advertising that has made them successful here.

"Through our association, perhaps

PUBLISHERS LAVISHLY ENTERTAINED AT "POLAR LARK"

Editor-Diners at the King Features Syndicate "Polar Lark"

MORE than 500 editors and publishers, delegates to the A. P. and A. N. P. A. conventions, as well as a number of the journalists of South America and Mexico, who have been attending the First Pan-American Congress of Journalists in Washington, were the guests Tuesday night of M. Koenigsberg, president of King Features Syndicate, Inc., International News Service and Universal Service, at a "Polar Lark" at the Friars Club. The event was named in recognition of the several polar explorations being conducted this spring, sponsored by American newspapers and newspaper organizations.

Guests found as the principal decoration of the great hall a totem pole more than 25 feet high, made up of the faces of the famous comic characters which are familiar to newspaper readers all over the world.

The pole was the work of Louis Biedermann, newspaper artist, who worked on the sculptured faces composing it for more than seven weeks. Miniature replicas of the pole in silver were presented to Mr. Koenigsberg's guests as souvenirs. Other decorations of the room, such as a "blimp" or polar airship which sailed across the room suspended from wires were in character with the atmosphere of the frozen north which had been imported into the hall to make the occasion genuinely a polar party.

Following dinner and speech of welcome by Mr. Koenigsberg, the editors and publishers were entertained with a program made up of acts and specialties from the leading Broadway theatrical productions. David Belasco, who was present, presented Lenore Ulric and the Lulu Belle company, the presentation being followed by a burlesque of it, "Noo Noo Belle," by Fannie Brice and her brother, Lew Brice; Hardeen, the magician and necromancer, appeared in an illusion created by Houdini, showing how east and west poles could be discovered by legerdemain, and there were two other polar specialties; a set of moving pictures of "Uncle Tom's Igloo," the scenario by Gene Fowler, and a one-act play by Rube Goldberg, the cartoonist, showing an "explorer's" dinner with Mr. Goldberg playing the principal part, assisted by Cliff Sterrett, Harry Hershfield, Walter Hoban, Arnot, Lejaren Hiller, Willard Fairchild and Ruth Fallows.

Others on the program were Sophie Tucker, Texas Guinan, Anatole Friedland, Billy Rose and his Fifth Avenue Club, Vincent Lopez with Fowler and Tamara, the dancers, Julius Tannen, Bora Minnevih, Sylvia Froos, Bob Murphy and company, Joe Cook and five Alaskans, Jack Donahue, the comedian from "Sunny"; Earl Carpenter and his melody sextette, Ben Bernie and the Hotel Roosevelt jazz band, Roger W. Kahn and the Hotel Biltmore band, and Gus Edwards, "flaming youth" group of 1926.

Mr. Koenigsberg has been host to the editors and publishers every year for the last eight years during the newspaper convention weeks.

ASSOCIATED PRESS ADVISORY BOARDS ENDORSE STATE MEMBER GROUPS

Resolutions Passed Urging Further Organization and Co-operation with Management at Meeting in Joint Session in New York—Western Division's Interest Sought

STATE associations of Associated Press members were endorsed by members of the A. P. advisory boards of three of the four divisions meeting at the Waldorf the morning of April 19. The divisions represented were the eastern, southern and central. Richard Hooker, Springfield (Mass.) Republican, father of the advisory plan, and chairman of the eastern division, was elected chairman of the meeting, and Hugh J. Powell, Coffeyville (Kan.) Journal, chairman of the central division, was named secretary. About twenty members of the advisory board attended. The total membership is 40.

A resolution was passed praising the work of Kent Cooper, general manager.

Recommendations made regarding state A. P. associations follow:

"Motion is hereby made that the advisory boards of the eastern, southern and central divisions of the Associated Press, having met in joint session wish to record their profound sense of the usefulness of the state associations and their desire to aid in promoting the further activities of these associations.

"Experience in the separate divisions indicates that the state associations have functioned most successfully, when, in addition to a state chairman and secretary an executive committee has been established for the purpose of advising and conferring with the chief correspondent and divisional superintendent on news matters requiring immediate attention.

"Experience has also shown the value, where distances are not too great, of holding two meetings of the state associations; one in the spring and one in the fall of each year.

"The importance of the matters considered at these state meetings is so great that the boards of the three divisions join in urging attendance at the said state meetings upon all the members within those divisions.

"In this connection, the three advisory boards also join in urging a continuation of the rule, which has hitherto generally prevailed in state meetings, namely, that due notice of the time and place of said meetings, having been sent to the entire state membership, a quorum shall consist of those present, it being recognized, however, that the state associations, under the resolution adopted in the annual meeting, April, 1925, are advisories of the management, and that their acts must necessarily take the form of recommendations to the management and the directors.

"The eastern, central and southern divisional advisory boards of the Associated Press, having observed excellent results from the active organization of state associations, venture to express the hope that during the coming year the western division will organize its state or joint state associations and through them elect members of its advisory board so that at the time of the next annual meeting of the Associated Press, the advisory boards of the other divisions may have the benefit of the presence of representatives of the western division."

The appreciation on the part of the advisory board members of the work of Mr. Cooper during the past year, was expressed in the following resolution:

"The advisory boards of the Associated Press desire jointly to express their keen appreciation of the progress made during the past year by the general manager, Mr. Kent Cooper, and his associates in adding interest and value to the service, in expediting the transmission of news, and in permeating the whole organization with increased energy and alertness."

Blade Carriers Tour Washington

Fourteen carriers from the Toledo (O.) Blade were taken on an educational and pleasure tour to Washington, D. C., from March 27 to April 1. They visited all points of interest around the capital, including Harper's Ferry and Mount Vernon. The trip was given as a prize for new subscriptions. Nine other boys received bicycles in the contest.

Sun Club Holds Annual Dance

The Sun Club, composed of members of all departments of the New York Sun held its annual spring dance at the Hotel Roosevelt on April 17. There were about 1,000 guests, including some from a number of advertising agencies and advertising departments of local stores.

SYNDICATE GROUPS MEET

Vote to Hold Dinners with Editors During Year

The Association of Newspaper Syndicates, by decision of its board of governors who met at the Waldorf-Astoria this week, will hold three dinners during the coming year to discuss among themselves and with newspaper men questions of mutual interest.

According to David Lawrence, president of the association, informal dinners will be held in New York, June 4 and in October, to which syndicate men, members and non-members of the association, will be invited. The third dinner, in January, will be staged in Washington, probably about the time of the annual meeting of the Editors' Society meeting. It is planned to invite newspaper men to this function.

In addition to Mr. Lawrence, among those present, included: H. H. McClure, Associated Newspapers, Inc., association secretary; Christy Walsh Syndicate, John Dille, National Newspaper Service, Chicago, and William Johnson, Johnson Features, Inc,. and Editors Feature Syndicate.

Bellingham Dailies in New Home

The Bellingham (Wash.) Herald and Reveille, owned by the Bellingham Publishing Company, moved, April 12, into their new six-story steel, concrete and gypsum block home. The building represents an investment of about $250,000. The whole of the first floor is occupied by the newspapers. Included in the new equipment is a press with a capacity of 24,000 papers an hour.

INVESTIGATION OF PRESS AGENT EVIL URGED

Bureau of Advertising, A. N. P. A., in Annual Report Asks Appointment of Special Committee to Probe Free Publicity

APPOINTMENT of a special committee by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association to investigate the subject of free publicity was urged by the Bureau of Advertising of the A. N. P. A., in its 13th annual report. The report was made by William F. Rogers, Boston Transcript, and chairman of the committee in charge of the bureau, at a meeting held April 19.

"Your committee submits that the willingness of many newspapers to give their space to free publicity seekers is still an obstacle to the further development of advertising," the report reads. Specific instances are given where advertisers were sold an exclusive magagine campaign, because an ambitious and smooth talking press agent informed them he could get their advertising into the newspapers free of charge.

The suggestion calling for appointment of a special committee to probe this situation, reads as follows:

"Your committee suggests that the A. N. P. A. authorize the appointment of a committee to investigate the subject of free publicity and that this committee include in a report to be made at the fall convention the results of a study of individual newspaper columns with a view to estimating the value of space given to material which properly belongs in the advertising columns."

The bureau's committee, according to its report, believes a remedy for the press agent evil, is "in the hands of the publishers of newspapers who can stop this flood of destructive material by instructing their editors to better inform themselves about the character of free publicity, which they consider 'news' today, but which has a disastrous effect upon newspaper advertising, and, in our judgement, tends to lessen the confidence of readers in newspapers."

The annual report follows in full:

To the President and Members of the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

Gentlemen:—

Your Committee in Charge of the Bureau of Advertising submits herewith its thirteenth annual report:

National advertising in newspapers in 1925 reached a total of $220,000,000, according to an estimate made by the Bureau. This represented an increase of slightly less than 10% over 1924 and sets a new record for the value of space bought by national advertisers.

Bureau members averaged slightly better in national advertising volume than the field in general, according to figures submitted by the majority of the membership. These reports disclosed an average increase of 13% in 1925 over 1924, compared with an average increase of 2.33% for the latter year over 1923.

The steady growth in national advertising and the further opportunities for its development have impressed upon the Bureau the necessity for increasing its service work among advertisers as well as carrying forward aggressively its program of solicitation. It has been better equipped than ever in the past year to meet demands for information and advice upon every phase of newspaper advertising and it is gratifying to report a larger number of requests than ever for help in this direction.

The Bureau has continued to win substantial recognition for its efforts both in service and advertising development.

"In my opinion," writes H. G. Little, of Lord & Thomas, "with the exception of the agency, as a whole it (the Bureau of Advertising) is doing more constructive good for the improvement of newspaper advertising, particularly the physical phase of it, than any other single force."

"It seems to me that publishers should appreciate the work your Bureau is doing," writes George Albers, president of Albers Bros. Milling Co., Seattle. "For many years newspaper advertising men called on us for business but we were never quite convinced until interviewed by * * * the Bureau of Advertising."

"At a meeting of the New York Associated Dailies held in Syracuse on January 28," says Edwin S. Underhill, Secretary, "a motion was made that the secretary convey to the Bureau of Advertising its sympathy with the objects of the Bureau, and pledge its hearty support to the ends that the Bureau is seeking to accomplish.

"This motion was made following a question asked by a member who was inclined to question the value of the (Bureau of Advertising) A. N. P. A. to smaller newspapers."

The Bureau's confidential semi-monthly reports which are open to the inspection of the membership, cover in detail its activities. Special attention, however, is drawn to the progress of its investigations to determine the amounts of money spent by leading national advertisers in newspapers.

Starting late in 1924 and carrying the work through 1925 the Bureau was enabled to give for the first time a comprehensive picture of what 118 advertisers invested in newspaper space during 1924.

In March, 1926, the Bureau announced estimates showing the expenditures in newspapers in 1925 of 227 national advertisers running from a minimum of $50,000 to a maximum of $2,500,000.

The Bureau has been encouraged by the reception accorded these compilations and it is believed will be in position to estimate at the end of 1926 the majority of newspaper national advertising accounts in excess of $50,000. It has arranged with the membership to make monthly reports of current advertising and this data, in addition to furnishing the basis for estimating total appropriations, will also disclose for the first time a complete list of all national advertisers using the newspapers.

The Bureau continued to work through its three offices in New York, Chicago and San Francisco for all newspapers in the United States and Canada. Its files show active contact on most of the principal accounts now running in the news-

Miss Marion Smith, business manager, Orlando (Fla.) Sentinel.

THOMAS H. PRATT, vice-president of the Pulaski (Va.) Southwest Times, is, he said, trying to give a town of 10,000 population a big city paper. The Southwest Times, a 20-year-old weekly, entered the daily field on April 1. The make-up of the paper is a copy of the New York Herald Tribune, with no "caps" headlines.

The publisher of the Southwest Times, and its A.P. member, is Paul Cline. Mr. Pratt in addition to his interest in the Pulaski paper, is publisher of the Kingsport (Tenn.) Times. He has been associated with the latter paper for the last 10 years.

The Southwest Times fell into a four leaf clover bed when its owners decided to make it a daily and needed a bigger building. The town had just completed a $25,000 community house and had found it couldn't keep it up. A purchaser was sought and Mr. Pratt and Mr. Cline stepped in. The gymnasium made an excellent editorial department, and a Goss press has been installed where once the townspeople held bowling matches.

ON May 15, the Kansas City (Kan.) Kansan will start building a new home to be used exclusively as a newspaper plant, W. A. Bailey, general manager, who is attending the convention, told Editor & Publisher. The building will measure 64 by 150 feet and will be three stories high.

"We traveled around inspecting many newspaper plants before we had our plans drawn," Mr. Bailey said. "Thus our new building will include ideas taken from the plants of the Milwaukee Journal, Kalamazoo Gazette, Aurora Beacon-News, Rock Island Argus, Moline Dispatch, Davenport Times and Davenport Democrat.

"We have subordinated ornateness to general utility."

Decoration of the front office of the new home will, however, be unique. One panel will contain the likenesses of several well known comic characters, including Andy Gump, Barney Google, Winnie Winkle, and the Wishbone Man. Another panel will contain a reproduction of the first page of the first issue of the Kansan under Senator Arthur Capper's ownership, dated Jan. 1, 1921.

"THE Inland Daily Press Association should dominate this meeting" was the comment of Wil V. Tufford, Inland secretary, who said two special cars brought members of his association to New York from the Middle West.

He said he was most anxious to have the A.N.P.A. take "drastic action to dam the deluge of free publicity" and commended Editor & Publisher for its campaign against press agentry.

W. Guy Tetrick, general manager Clarksburg (W. Va.) Exponent and Walter C. Johnson, president, Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, and general manager, Chattanooga (Tenn.) News.

"More than 50 Inland members are attending the A.N.P.A. convention," he said.

Mr. Tufford, long known as a poet, has lately been acquiring fame as a paragrapher.

"The Chicago Daily News recently paid me a dollar for this one," he declared, and quoted:

"To preserve a wedding ring, dip it in dish water."

FORREST RICHMOND, publisher of the Toronto (O.) Tribune, is attending his first A. N. P. A. meeting. He has just joined that body. He told of plans he has just had drawn up for a new two-story home for his paper on Toronto's Main street. The building, which it is expected will be ready for occupation next spring, will contain five stores and five apartments in addition to the newspaper plant. It will measure 75 by 200 feet.

"My paper and I are just 46 years old. We both 'started publication' in the same month—September. That's why we get along so well together," Mr. Richmond said.

"We are both older than our town. That is, we were established before Toronto was incorporated."

Mr. Richmond purchased the Tribune four years ago. Prior to that he was foreign advertising manager of the East Liverpool (O.) Review Tribune.

"Believe me, it's fun running a small town paper," commented Mr. Richmond.

Mr. Richmond ran away from home when he was in the fourth grade in school. His training has been in the traditional school of hard knocks.

There he is secretary of the local Kiwanis club, which he founded, president of the local baseball association, which he organized, and which this year has nine intra-city ball teams, a trustee in the Ohio Good Roads Federation; and an executive in the local Boy Scouts.

MARCELLUS E. FOSTER, publisher of the Houston (Tex.) Chronicle, somehow finds sufficient time to write his daily editorial column signed "Mefo," no matter where he is, even during the busiest convention days. Mr. Foster was recently in California. There he also did his daily stint.

The Ku Klux Klan no longer bothers him in Houston, Mr. Foster said. And another interesting political note from this end of the country is that the Chronicle is not supporting Gov. M. A. Ferguson now for re-election. Many a person has said that "Ma" owed her governorship to the active campaigning done in the Chronicle's editorial columns, written by Foster's pen.

MISS MARION H. SMITH, business manager of the Orlando (Fla.) Morning Sentinel, is one of few newspaper women in the cash drawer end of the business. She represented her paper and, dressed in latest Palm Beach styles, was a colorful addition to the cigar smoking publisher delegates.

When the Sentinel was established 10 years ago by W. M. Glenn, its present publisher, Miss Smith was the only member of the business staff. Now the newspaper's staff numbers more than 125. Miss Smith believes the opportunities are especially good for women on the business side of a newspaper, and yet, she added, nine out of every ten prefer to be writers.

"Women are born bargainers," she explained. "I do all the buying for the Morning Sentinel, and buying machinery, newsprint, ink and all the rest of it, requires the same kind of sense as shopping for an Easter hat."

Miss Smith said she never sent any "must" stories to the editorial office.

"I do send tips every once and a while," she said. "And there is a certain amount of reliable real estate development, which is really constructive new and is valuable, I believe, to readers."

Howard Kahn, editor, St. Paul Daily News

Marcellus E. Foster, editor and publisher Houston (Tex.) Chronicle.

C. P. J. MOONEY, editor of the Memphis Commercial Appeal, and vice-president of the Associated Press was telling friends he should no longer be called "a fighting editor."

"I'm getting old, fat and lazy," he said.

But there was a youthful sparkle in his eyes, when he started to recall the days when he was one of "the yellow boys" working for William Randolph Hearst in New York.

And no one would agree with him that he was old or lazy.

He is getting fat.

HOWARD KAHN, editor of the St. Paul Daily News, returned from Cuba and Florida to attend the conventions in New York. He has been recuperating from a recent illness.

The St. Paul News is a great stunt paper and Mr. Kahn always has something interesting to report.

Just recently the News held its 16th annual dog derby, for instance. It is a dog-sled race conducted with boys and girls as drivers. More than 300 entered this year, Mr. Kahn said, and a crowd of 25,000 were drawn to the park where the race was held.

S. L. Slover, publisher, Norfolk (Va.) Ledger-Dispatch, and L. K. Nicholson, editor, New Orleans Times-Picayune.

OLIN W. KENNEDY, assistant publisher and managing editor of the Miami (Fla.) Herald, is attending the A.N.P.A. convention and the Associated Press meeting. Recently he was made chairman of the committee on syndicates and press services of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

Kennedy has been connected in executive capacities with some of the leading dailies for a quarter of a century, and has been assistant publisher of the Miami Herald for six years.

THE Waldorf meeting this year was given a festive air, with four out of five of the publisher delegates inspecting exhibits wearing carnations presented by Editor & Publisher.

The flowers for the living were presented at Editor & Publisher headquarters by Miss Ruth Smith, of the office staff.

JAMES M. COX, publisher of the Dayton (O.) News, and other Ohio and Florida papers, arrived at the convention early telling friends he was "out of politics for good." He said he had begun to enjoy life in the fullest sense since he quit public office and devoted himself to his newspapers. He explained he was glad to have made the Democratic Presidential race in 1920, because he was privileged to "take up the banner" that had been carried through the stress of the war by Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. Cox said he had read the letters of Col. E. M. House, purchased for newspaper syndication by the New York Herald Tribune Syndicate.

"Whoever advised Mrs. Wilson not to give out President Wilson's letters for publication made a big mistake," he said. He described the situation in Florida, where he owns and publishes the Miami News, as "a readjustment" rather than a "reaction" and that the readjustment had been awaited hopefully by many who believed in the future of Florida.

HARRY E. TAYLOR, publisher of the Portsmouth (O.) Times, who has just returned from a visit to South America, revealed how Dr. Sojo, publisher of La Razon, Buenos Aires, dramatically refuted his assertion that South American newspapers were perhaps not as "fast on their feet" as those of North America.

In company with Lawrence Haas, United Press representative, and two other Americans, Mr. Taylor was being shown through La Razon's plant by Dr. Sojo. Marveling at the completeness of their equipment and organization, Mr. Taylor remarked in English to Haas:

"This is wonderful; more complete than most of our papers. And I think the only possible difference is that these South American papers are perhaps not quite as fast in getting a story or a picture into print as are some of our papers."

An interpreter overheard the remark and told Dr. Sojo. Without revealing that he knew what Mr. Taylor had said, Dr. Sojo gave a brief order, and a cartoonist quickly joined the sight-seeing party.

Leisurely they made their way through the plant, and finally to the pressroom. The huge octuple presses were just starting. The first papers were handed to Dr. Sojo, and he handed one to Mr. Taylor. There, on page one was a cartoon with excellent likenesses of Mr. Taylor and two other members of the party. It had been drawn, the cut made, mounted into the form and printed inside of an hour—between the time Mr. Taylor made his remark about South American speed, and the arrival of the party in the pressroom.

Dr. Sojo said not a word, but Mr. Taylor changed his opinion.

F. W. Woodward, publisher Dubuque (Ia.) Telegraph-Herald, and W. J. Arndt, circulation manager.

THE first linotype machine used for newspaper composition is on display at the Mergenthaler Linotype Company's quarters during the American Newspaper Publishers' Convention at the Hotel Waldorf.

This machine was the first product of Ottmar Mergenthaler and was first used to set up part of the New York Tribune on July 3, 1886. On the same day, Whitelaw Reid named the machine the "linotype."

The editorial page of the New York Tribune of that date is also on exhibit, with the first bound volume to be set up by linotype.

Behind the machine is a window, backed by a scene to represent the view from the old Tribune Building on Park Row.

A booklet is being distributed, "The Second Greatest Event in the History of Printing," which has as a frontispiece a drawing of Mergenthaler watching the composition of the July 3, 1886 issue.

Frank E. Gannett

ARTHUR THOMPSON, who in other years marshaled Associated Press members to their proper places in the Astor Galleries and in the Grand Ball Room for the annual luncheon, was entertaining friends in princely fashion in Room 432, convention headquarters of the H. D. Roosen Company, makers of printing inks. He is now general sales manager of that company.

"I used to think I had to work hard during convention week," he groaned, "but this is something else again."

A group of Texas publishers found his hospitality so refreshing, Thompson went to bed at 4 o'clock one morning.

FRANK E. GANNETT, president of the Gannett Newspapers, Inc., arrived in New York for the convention on April 19, in fighting trim after three weeks spent in Asheville recovering from an attack of the "flu."

He preferred not to be quoted in regard to his application for A. P. membership for his Rochester Times-Union, chief topic of this year's Associated Press meeting.

But he would say this:

"All my papers this year are ahead of the linage figures they set for the corresponding time last year. I have no complaint to make."

The Gannett newspapers are: Rochester Times-Union; Utica Observer-Dispatch, Ithaca Journal-News, Elmira Star-Gazette, Advertiser, and Telegram, and Newburgh News.

ED. RANDALL, cartoonist of the New York Mirror, was on the job early this week, sketching publisher delegates as they thronged Peacock Alley in the Waldorf. Among those he caricatured were Charles D. Atkinson, Atlanta Journal; Paul Kahn, St. Paul News; Alison Stone, Providence Journal; David Plum, Troy Record, and Fleming Newbold, Washington Star.

JOHN L. STEWART, publisher of the Washington (Pa.) Observer and Reporter, reached New York in time for the convention from a trip around the world. During the time he was away from his paper he wrote a series of 50 feature articles, giving inside information on international political affairs.

N. Y. PUBLISHERS FETE PAN-AMERICAN EDITORS

Adolph Ochs Toastmaster at Park Lane Banquet With Walker, Pulitzer, Gunnison Reid, Mitre, Don Rafael Huete and Jose Camprubi as Speakers

NORTH and South America shook hands over a banquet table in New York on April 20. The banquet was given by the New York City Publishers Association to the delegates to the first Congress of Pan-American Journalists.

F. A. Walker, publisher of the New York Evening Telegram, chairman of the association, spoke first and then introduced Adolph S. Ochs, New York Times, as toastmaster. Mr. Ochs was brilliant in his remarks introducing speakers of the evening.

"The members of the Publishers Association of New York heartily welcome to their city the Latin-American delegates to the first Pan-American Congress of Journalists," said Mr. Ochs, "and have asked me to express their delight at the opportunity the occasion affords for personal acquaintance, feeling assured of the mutual desire for a good understanding and co-operation between the people of all American nations in everything that promotes their individual welfare and happiness and the peace and prosperity of the world."

He pledged aid and co-operation in the organization of any news gathering agency by the Latin-American press, modeled after the Associated Press

Mr. Ochs announced that William Randolph Hearst, was unfortunately unable to come and deliver his expected address and had sent his regret.

In referring to Mr. Hearst Mr. Ochs called him "a modern Colossus, for he bestrides the continent."

"His interests stretch from the Pacific to the Atlantic, from the Lakes to the Gulf, interwoven with thousands of miles of telegraph wires," he continued. "No journalist in history—no journalist of today—not even a broadcasting instrument could reach so many people as does this owner of 25 daily newspapers, ten magazines, and numerous other minor publications, the combined circulation of which goes into the millions—a man of varied tastes and inclinations, a cosmopolitan to the 'nth' degree, a veritable newspaper genius."

He then introduced Ralph Pulitzer of the New York World, with these words:

"I take pleasure in presenting to you one of the most agreeable personalities engaged in the conduct of a great newspaper, a gentleman of scholarly attainments, with the grace and manner of a Chesterfield! He is the son of a man who, in my judgement, was one of the ablest and best equipped newspaper makers that has ever been engaged in American journalism. The newspaper of which this gentleman is the head has to its credit some of the greatest achievements in journalistic history. It is a crusader, personifying liberty with a flaming torch, throwing light into dark places—one of the outstanding and inspiring successes of independent, courageous journalism. I take pleasure in introducing a noble son of an illustrious sire, the publisher of the New York World—Mr. Ralph Pulitzer."

"I regard it not only as a great pleasure but as a great honor to be allowed to take part in welcoming you to our city," said Mr. Pulitzer. "Our instinct for hospitality is the greater because it has such obstacles to overcome. From the west we have to overcome the barrier of virtuous suspicion; from the east the barrier of moral turpitude. On the north we have a platonic attachment to our Canadian friends. But on the south we are open to your friendly and profitable invasion. Let me make a confession to our southern guests: We New York journalists may be skyscrapers in our buildings and world-scrapers in our news-gathering machines, but, between you and me we are many of us sadly provincial. I have heard it stated with equal correction and complacency that any New York City editor was qualified to be managing editor in any other city in the world. I may add that this statement was made by a New York City editor."

Ogden Reid next speaker, was introduced as follows: "It is my pleasure to present the successor of a long line of illustrious predecessors notable in the history of journalism. The publication of which he is now the head has never, in the eighty odd years of its existence, enjoyed greater popularity and success. He has an achievement to his credit that is unequaled in the journalistic history of this country. He consolidated two competitive newspapers to the satisfaction of the clienteles of both, the circulation of the combined papers being equal to the total of the separate units. I present my good friend and neighbor, publisher of the New York Herald-Tribune—Mr. Ogden Reid."

"Through the press," Mr. Reid said, "we can tell each other about each other's countries, and I think that the most effective way of saying how one country feels about another. Dealing with Governments, for instance, occasionally there will be a partisan Administration, and the representative of that country feels he has to say what the Administration wants. A newspaper says what it thinks, and you find out more accurately how the people really feel toward each other."

Herbert F. Gunnison was called by Mr. Ochs the "guiding genius of what is generally regarded as the premier of local newspapers, and one of the outstanding successes of American Journalism.

"It is the primer, the reader, the history, the guide, philosopher and friend of the best family life in Brooklyn," he said. "I present the publisher of the Brooklyn Eagle—Mr. Herbert F. Gunnison.

Mr. Gunnison predicted the Congress marked the beginning of a new era for journalism in both South and North America.

Mr. Ochs next introduced Jorge Mitre as one to whose "genius and courage the fine reputation of South American journalism is in no small measure due." Mr. Mitre spoke in English.

He said:

"The fact is that the press here is advancing every day more and more and keeping pace with the progress of the United States. In my opinion, one of the most striking results of the war was that the centre of economic and commercial progress was transferred from Europe to the whole American continent. Both the United States and South America have participated in this movement. You have had the biggest share, but we also have played an important part in this evolution.

"My prediction is that this movement will increase so much within the next ten years that I do not think it will be necessary for us to request more news in your columns. Meanwhile, there is a stage of transition, and while it is not reasonable to ask you to change your news policy, I would like to suggest that you consider in your large Sunday papers the printing of entertaining sidelights reflecting the life in various countries in South America. I think this probably would be more feasible than attempting to bring about a change in your policy. The printing of articles such as I suggest would do much to dispel ignorance regarding the many countries which make up South America.

"The occasion which has brought so many Latin-American journalists to the United States is of great importance. I foresee the time when closer contacts between journalists and the general progress of our continent will bring us together much more frequently at gatherings such as this."

Upon the conclusion of Mr. Mitre's address, the toastmaster turned to the youthful-looking Don Rafael Huete, editor and publisher of Costa Rica.

"This gentleman," said Mr. Ochs in presenting him, "has done much to raise to its present high standard the journalism of Central America and has been selected by our guests from Central America here this evening to respond in their behalf."

Don Rafael spoke in Spanish and in the course of his remarks expressed his deep gratitude that he had been able to be one of the delegates to the congress. He said that he had gathered much that would be of use in his work at home, and had established personal contacts and made friends that would be of inestimable value.

"I shall be able to tell my people," he said, "what you are really like; tell about your organization and tell them what is the basis of your greatness."

He urged that the Hispanic-American should make an effort to know the United States better, and that with a better appreciation of the motives of this country would come realization that America is "noble and generous." He said that he was convinced that American might would never be used for anything but protection.

Jose Camprubi, was introduced as "a modest gentleman of exceptional newspaper qualifications who has the admiration and respect of all who are acquainted with him and his work."

"He is a worthy and influential spokesman of the Spanish speaking people, and maintains in this city the best traditions of his people," Mr. Ochs said. "Such is his personal popularity that recently, by the unanimous vote of the newspapers in this city, the unprecedented action was taken of admitting him to membership in the Associated Press. It gives me great pleasure to introduce the publisher of La Prensa, Mr. Jose Camprubi."

Mr. Camprubi delivered his address in Spanish.

NEW YORK TIMES IS HOST

Adolph S. Ochs Entertains Visiting Latin-American Journalists

The visiting Pan-American journalists were guests of the New York Times Wednesday morning. The group assembled at eleven-thirty, and under the direction of William H. Neel, were conducted through the entire plant.

At one-thirty, the visitors were entertained at luncheon by Adolph S. Ochs.

Mr. Ochs welcomed the journalists to New York and especially to the Times Building. He outlined briefly the growth of the paper since its beginning on Nassau Street up to the present time.

Mr. Ochs then introduced Rollo Ogden, editor-in-chief, of the Times, who addressed the guests in Spanish.

Nemesio Garcia Naranjo, publisher of Excelsior, Mexico City, thanked the publisher for his courtesy to the group. He stated that the recent Pan-American Congress held in Washington was undoubtedly the beginning of a greater understanding between the peoples of the Americas.

After the luncheon the visitors were taken to the studio to be photographed.

LATIN EDITORS VISIT NAVAL ACADEMY

Tour Maryland as Guests of Baltimore Sun—Steamer Chartered for All-Night Trip Up Chesapeake Bay

Latin-American editors and writers who attended the First Pan-American Congress of Journalists held in Washington April 7 to 13, were shown the Chesapeake Bay and the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis on Friday and Saturday of last week as the guests of Baltimore Sun and Evening Sun. They were made acquainted with the Maryland Free State and were introduced to Gov. Albert C. Ritchie.

The papers chartered a large Chesapeake Bay steamer, the "City of Richmond" and met the Latin Americans at Norfolk on the evening of Friday, April 16. The visitors boarded the steamer on their return from a trip through Virginia and the all-night trip up the bay was begun immediately.

Paul Patterson, the president of the A. S. Abell Company and a number of the editors and reporters of the Sun papers had made the trip from Baltimore to Norfolk the night before and had arranged the entertainment. Dinner was served as the voyage up the bay was begun and there were numbers of speeches by the Latin Americans and by the Sun folks.

After dinner an orchestra and a group of Negro singers of spirituals made the hours pass pleasantly.

The vessel docked at Annapolis at 10 o'clock. A naval escort led the way to the huge Bancroft Hall of the Academy. With its noble white interiors for background, Admiral Louis McC. Nulton and a group of his officers received the visitors.

Eight hundred midshipmen were drawn up in a parade ground before Bancroft Hall with the Severn River at their backs; three solid squares of "middies" in their dark blue uniforms, with the green of the field, the blue of the river and the white and the blue of the sky for background. In one corner was the Naval Academy Band, its red coats a brilliant spot of color. When Admiral Nulton stood before the regiment sword blades flashed in the air as his officers saluted him. The band struck up an air and the dress parade began. At the same instant half a dozen war-grey submarine chasers out on the river went into formation and faced in to shore, as a part of the spectacle.

When the regiment had marched by the Inspection of the Naval Academy began, Admiral Nulton and his officers serving as guides. All the sights of the Academy were shown including the tomb of John Paul Jones.

From the Academy the visitors were taken to the Maryland Capital buildings. They were shown the historic Senate Chamber in which General George Washington resigned his commission in the United States army.

After luncheon the Latin-Americans returned to their steamer and were taken to Baltimore. On their arrival in Baltimore on Saturday evening, the editors and writers were met by representatives of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce and taken to that city.

A paper prepared especially for the trip and containing articles descriptive of the scenes through which the visitors passed, printed in Spanish, formed one of the features of the trip. It was entitled "The Sun of the Chesapeake."

Edwin A. Fitzpatrick, assistant managing editor of the Evening Sun, arranged the program.

Among the members of the staffs of the Sunpapers who made the trip other than Messrs. Patterson and Fitzpatrick were: Hamilton Owens, editor, Evening Sun; Stanley M. Reynolds, managing editor, the Sun; Henry M. Hyde, special writer, of the Evening Sun, Gilbert Kanour, dramatic editor, J. A. Shea, local staff, Innis P. Lyon, local staff, Evening Sun; Edgar Williams, local staff of the Sun; and T. J. McCartney, of the A. S. Abell Co.

SCENE AT OPENING OF PAN-PRESS CONGRESS

Secretary of State Frank B. Kellogg, chairman of the Gov erning Board of the Pan-American Union, officially opened the First Pan-American Congress of Journalists. On the platform can be seen Dr. Leo S. Rowe, director of the Pan-American Union; Secretary Frank B. Kellogg, Hon. Francisco Sanchez Latour, vice-chairman of the Governing Board, Pan-American Union and Cuno Rudolph, Commissioner of the District of Columbia, who presented the keys of the city to the visiting journalists.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Frederick H. Keefe

FREDERICK H. KEEFE became publisher and general manager of the Newburgh (N. Y.) News, which his father founded in 1885, by the retirement from the business of Frederick W. Wilson, who sold his half interest in the News to Frank E. Gannett of Rochester, N. Y., on July 1, 1925. Mr. Keefe has been identified with the paper from boyhood and since 1917 has directed the business end of the paper.

FREDERICK H. KEEFE

He has always taken an active interest in the various publishers' organizations and for the past five years has served as chairman of the Joint Legislative Committee of the Newspaper Publishers' Associations of New York State. The present unified method of measurement and graduated line rate for legal advertising is the result of his work with the legislators in Albany.

Mr. Keefe is now serving a term as president of the Newburgh Chamber of Commerce and is a past president of the local Kiwanis Club.

The campaign for group selling of the Poughkeepsie, Kingston and Newburgh field as the Mid-Hudson Region is the result of his initiative; and the copy in this campaign was prepared by him.

NEW HIGH SCHOOL BODY FORMED AT IOWA

Quill and Scroll, National Society for Youthful Editors Has Abbot, Villard, Allen and White as Honorary Founders

With 20 journalism supervisors from ten states as founders and four nationally known newspaper editors as honorary founders, Quill and Scroll, national honorary non-secret society for high school journalists came into being April 10, at the University of Iowa, Iowa City.

The honorary founders include: Willis J. Abbot, editor, Christian Science Monitor; Oswald Garrison Villard, editor, The Nation; Henry J. Allen, editor, Wichita Beacon; and William Allen White, editor, Emporia Gazette. In charge of the Iowa City meeting and of the arrangements for the organization's founding was Prof. George H. Gallup of the University of Iowa's school of journalism.

The purpose of Quill and Scroll as set forth in the constitution is "to instill in student the ideal of scholarship; to advance the standards of the profession of journalism by developing better journalists and by inculcating a high code of ethics and pride in the profession; and to promote exact and dispassionate thinking, clear and forceful writing."

Chapters may be established in any high school where a "magazine, yearbook, or newspaper is published or where students gather and write news under supervision for regular town or city newspapers." To be eligible for membership the student must stand in the upper third of his (or her) class scholastically, must be of junior or senior standing, must have done outstanding work in writing, editing, or in business management, and must be recommended to the national officers by the high school journalism supervisor.

Officers chosen at the meeting of founders include: president, Miss Elizabeth White, Central High, Omaha, Neb.; first vice-president, Miss Hildegarde Stolteben, Dubuque High, Dubuque, Iowa; second vice-president, Miss Jennie G. Rice, Abraham Lincoln High, Council Bluffs, Iowa; secretary and treasurer, George H. Gallup, University of Iowa; and national councilors: Mrs. Nina H. Covington, Hugh Morson High, Raleigh, N. C.; Miss Margaret Jones, Cheyenne High, Cheyenne, Wyo.; and Miss Florence Churchhill, Iowa City High, Iowa City.

A national convention of Quill and Scroll will again be held in Iowa City in the fall.

COL. GEORGE HAM

Canadian Newspaper Man and Railroad Official Dies

Col. George Ham, 79, known as the "Grand Old Man" of the Canadian Pacific Railway, died in his Montreal home April 16. Prior to 1891, when he became associated with the railroad, he was widely known as a Canadian newspaper publisher.

COL. GEORGE HAM

He was born in Trenton, Ont., on Aug. 23, 1847, the son of a country doctor who later became a lawyer and still later a business associate of Sir John A. MacDonald. After leaving school, he enlisted in the Canadian militia in 1861 owing to tension growing out of the Trent affair. After a short enlistment term he became a newspaper reporter, serving on the Whitby Chronicle, and the Winnipeg Free Press. Later he published the Winnipeg Tribune, which he amalgamated with the Winnipeg Times.

In 1891, Sir William Van Horne, president of the Canadian Pacific, made him a traveling passenger agent. From that time his service with the railway was uninterrupted.

The Colonel wrote several books, his best known being "The Flittering of the Gods" and "The Reminiscences of a Raconteur."

PRESIDENT THOMASON'S ADDRESS

Members of the American Newspaper Publishers Association:

This Convention marks the fortieth annual meeting of our Association, but I shall not consume your time with a recital of the growth and influence of the organization during that period. It suffices to say that a year ago your Directors advanced the opinion that the American Newspaper Publishers Association had not adequately reflected the tremendous growth of the newspaper publishing industry in the last decade. We believed that the time was at hand to expand our activities, our interests, our functions, to parallel the advance of the industry as a whole. Your Directors laid before you a program calculated to bring about this expansion, and now at this fortieth meeting, we can point to substantial progress in every phase of the program submitted last year.

THE FALL CONVENTION

A year ago the Convention authorized a Fall Convention "at some point in Southern Territory." November 10th, 11th and 12th the First Fall Convention was held at White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia. As our Association's corporate meetings must legally be held in the State of New York, no corporate action binding upon the Association can be taken at Conventions held outside this State. In excess of one hundred of our members attended, and the value of the meetings met with the enthusiastic approval of every one present. The mornings were devoted to talks by experts upon our common problems of advertising, circulation, traffic, taxation, and organization. The afternoons were devoted to golf and the evenings to social, intellectual, and even moral exercises. The report of the Convention contains on its last page this expression of Lafayette Young, Jr., seconded by Frank B. Noyes:

"It seems to me this Convention has fulfilled its mission even in a greater degree than those who proposed it could have imagined. I have been attending A. N. P. A. Conventions for more than twenty years and a good many other incidental newspaper conventions, but I have never attended one in which there has been so much information and so much sound sense delivered in so brief a time.

"I move that we express our approval of the Program Committee and the Board of Directors, and those who have arranged this Convention, by urging that a similar convention be arranged for next year at this spot or at some other spot equally attractive, and I suggest that perhaps it might be held in the Middle West, as getting a larger representation from that part of the country."

DUES

At the Fall Convention John Stewart Bryan, as Chairman of the Committee having under consideration the extension of the Association's activities and necessary provision of increased revenues for that purpose, submitted the Committee's Program, and the meeting recommended to the Directors that the schedule of dues and rates as suggested by Mr. Bryan be adopted. But in their consideration of the question at their meetings since last Fall, your Directors concluded that it would be wise to modify the plan submitted to the Fall Convention and to submit the exact basis of change in our methods of levying dues to the membership at this time. The Report of Mr. Bryan's Committee will be found in the printed Committee Reports, and your action on this report is one of the important mattres to come before the Convention. I earnestly hope that this Report may receive your favorable action. To provide a real mechanical service, calculated to save each of us the endless exchange of information on mechanical matters, which this Association could do so much more effectively; to provide a real traffic service which could earn each month its annual cost to our members; to increase the service of the Chairman of the Special Standing Committee; these increased revenues are necessary. If our revenues were doubled they would represent a small percentage of our common net earnings than did our revenues ten years ago. And the method proposed by Mr. Bryan's Committee accomplishes a more equitable division of the expense between our larger and our smaller members. Its adoption by the Convention will bring about a fair division of the burden (if the expense is large enough to be called a burden), and will unquestionably tend to bring about that increase in our membership of smaller papers which is so necessary to our effectiveness.

INTERNATIONAL CONTRACTS

At the 1925 Convention the Directors were authorized to appoint a Committee to negotiate new International Contracts, without restrictions imposed on their authority to negotiate. The Report of your Committee is found in the printed Committee Reports. Having had a hand in the activity of the Committee, I hesitate to speak in approval of its work, but I commend the Committee's report to your best attention. I believe the results justify the judgment of the last Convention, and I hope that the Committee's work may have your approval.

THE POSTAL COMMITTEE

The work of the Postal Committee during the past year has been of the most exacting character, and Mr. J. D. Barnum of the Syracuse Post-Standard has given most generously of his time during the year to the Committee's efforts. Although our efforts towards more equitable postal rates have not yet borne fruit, the work of the Committee and of Elisha Hanson, our Washington Representative, before the Joint Committee of Congress, to investigate postal rates, has certainly brought nearer to solution this perennial problem. I am sure that I voice the sentiment of all our members when I express our appreciation of the untiring efforts of Mr. Barnum's Committee.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Throughout the past year certain advertising interests have urged the Federal Trade Commission to take action against the American Association of Advertising Agencies, the several organizations of publishers, including ourselves, and various advertising organizations. The complaint which the Federal Trade Commission has filed appears to be founded on the assumption that this organization, through its Committee on Advertising Agents, is engaged in a conspiracy to prevent aggrieved advertisers from enjoying the net rates allowed to legitimate advertising agencies. The effort is apparently to upset the entire existing structure built for the placing of advertising, and it proceeds on the absurd assumption that the whole edifice has grown upon a foundation of fraud and illegal practices. In my judgment the Federal Trade Commission has entered upon no more foolish enterprise during its entire history. Nevertheless it has been necessary to engage counsel and to expend a great deal of time and expense in defense of these proceedings.

COMMITTEE REPORTS

I commend to your attention the splendid reports of the Paper Committee, of the Committee on Advertising Agents, and the Committee on Printing Trades Schools, which has carried on its work so ably under Mr. Ridder's chairmanship. The Report of the Traffic Committee, suggesting an important new activity of the Association, deserves careful scrutiny. The Report of the Radio Committee calls attention to the expansion of radio broadcasting, a field which is so close to our own as to compel our interest. The work of the Committee on National Forest Resources to secure more adequate Federal forest protection is of the first importance.

SPECIAL STANDING COMMITTEE

Since the last Convention Mr. Harvey J. Kelly has assumed the chairmanship of the Special Standing Committee. In his new capacity as counsellor to the Committee, Mr. Kellogg affords to the Special Standing Committee the benefit of his long experience in Indianapolis.

In the past four months I have received many letters commending in unstinted terms the thoroughness and excellence of the surveys of local labor conditions which the Special Standing Committee, under Mr. Kelly's chairmanship, is sending from Indianapolis. I believe our membership is assured of that high quality of co-operation from the Indianapolis office in its labor problems which is so essential to the orderly progress of work in newspaper shops.

CONCLUSION

Again the splendid service of our New York office under the direction of our Manager and his associates, and the whole-hearted co-operation of our Committeemen and Directors have safeguarded the interests of our members. It has been a privilege and a constant source of pleasure to work with all these Association agencies during the past year. I am sure that the membership joins with me in expressing our thanks to all of them for their accomplishments in the Association's behalf.

Respectfully submitted,
S. E. THOMASON, President.

BOYS VISIT CAPITOL

Nine Winners of Baltimore Sun Bird House Contest Guests of Paper

Nine boys who won prizes in a contest for builders of bird boxes conducted in Baltimore were taken on a trip to Washington Saturday, April 17.

With Congressman John Philip Hill of Maryland, as their guide, they sat in the gallery of the House of Representatives and looked down on the House at work; they visited the offices of the United States Supreme Court, and sat in the chair in which Chief William Howard Taft sits; they visited the White House and saw where President Coolidge transacts the business of the nation.

They went to Washington as the guests of the Baltimore Evening Sun, which conducted the contest.

FEATURES FOR BUSINESS MEN

Topeka Daily Works Variations on Write-Up Idea

The problem of interesting business men—both old and young—in their daily newspaper has been solved to a good extent by the Topeka State Journal. Business men of Topeka are seeing their names in timely features.

Three years ago the State Journal started the publication of a weekly mystery column, "Do You Know Him?" The name of the person about whom the article was written was not divulged until the following week, the subject being referred to throughout the article as "he." Each of the articles, about 75 of which were published, closed with the question, "Do you know him?" The picture of the subject was presented only in silhouette.

This series, editors of the State Journal say, appealed more to the older, more widely known business men of the city, who could be recognized easily by the profile system.

Late last year, in order to provide a series featuring the younger men in Topeka business, a daily "Meet Mr." series was developed. Each day one of Topeka's younger business men was interviewed and a half-column article is run under the head, "Meet Mr. ———," with the name of the man changed from day to day. A cut is included in each article making timely additions to the paper's morgue.

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL STANDING COMMITTEE

Since the last report of the Special Standing Committee, 157 contracts were made by members of the A. N. P. A., with printing trades Unions, divided as follows:

Typographical	68
Pressmen	37
Stereotypers	36

Forty-three (43 of the 157 new contracts entered into by members did not materially change working conditions and made no change in wages. There were no previous contracts on file for cities from which 5 new agreements were received which included some changes. In addition to the 157 new contracts there were 60 agreements continued in effect without change through failure of either party to reopen. The total number of contracts now in effect is 535. Of this number 280 will expire before April 1, 1927.

In many jurisdictions unions seek to secure contracts for only one year. Longer term agreements are more desirable and have been recommended by your Committee. Out of the total of 535 contracts now in existence, 226 are for periods of three years or longer.

ARBITRATION CONTRACTS

There were 4 purely local arbitration contracts reported, as follows:

Typographical—Milwaukee, Wis.; Racine, Wis.

Stereotypers—Detroit, Mich.; Portland, Me.

This brings the total number of local arbitration contracts up to 13.

There were 12 International Arbitration Agreements signed with the pressmen, making the total number 145 now in effect. This is 3 more than were in effect at the time the last report was made.

STRIKES

There were 9 strikes during the past year, as follows:

Bangor, Me., Typographical; Hamilton, Ont., Typographical; Parkersburg, W. Va., Typographical; Pueblo, Colo., Typographical; San Antonio, Tex., Pressmen; Springfield, Mass., Pressmen; Vancouver, B. C., Pressmen; Pittsburgh, Pa., Mailers; Los Angeles, Cal., Pressmen.

There were 9 strikes during the preceding year.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION BOARD MEETINGS

The International Board of Arbitration during the past year functioned on twelve cases, divided as follows:

Typographical, 5; Pressmen, 2; Photo Engravers, 4; Mailers, 1.

CHANGES IN INTERNATIONAL LAWS

The outstanding changes in Union laws affecting publishers materially, your Committee enumerates as follows:

Typographical rule providing for the immediate reinstatement of discharged men on demand of local unions was repealed, 1925 Convention.

Typographical rule, sometimes called the mandate law, which forbids the Executive Council to mandate local unions to arbitrate when employers propose reductions in pay or changes in established conditions, was repealed, 1925 Convention.

1925 Typographical Convention adopted a change in apprentice laws so that apprentices may now work on machines any time during the fifth year of their apprenticeship, instead of during the last six months.

1925 I. S. & E. U. Convention adopted a law prohibiting the pooling of hours.

The I. P. E. U. Convention did not adopt any changes affecting newspaper publishers, and the I. P. P. & A. U. did not hold a meeting in 1925, biennial Conventions being the rule with that organization, the next one occurring in the fall of 1926.

The 1925 Typographical Convention also endorsed the recommendation of the Executive Council that no more daily newspapers be launched by local unions as part of strike activities. Union operated dailies failed at New Orleans, Walla Walla, Wash., and Sioux City. The Council in its report stated in part:

"The following pertinent reasons are responsible in a large measure for the failure which has in all cases resulted from these daily newspaper activities:

"1. Lack of sufficient financial backing.

"2. Absence of sound business policies, due to inexperience of promoters.

"3. Failure of business interests to extend aid in the nature of advertising.

"Members of the Typographical Union employed on daily newspapers for years should be familiar with the enormous financial backing required to establish a daily newspaper, especially when it is necessary to compete with publications which have been in the field for many years.

"The Council desires to submit to the forthcoming annual convention of the International Typographical Union, at Kalamazoo, a recommendation that subordinate unions refrain from establishing a daily newspaper in the future, believing as it does, that the activities of local unions should be confined to reconstruction and organization campaigns rather than futile attempts to invade the daily newspaper field."

APPEALS SHOULD NOT BE MADE TO THE I. T. U. EXECUTIVE COUNCIL IF CONTRACTS PROVIDE FOR SUBMITTING DISPUTES TO JOINT STANDING COMMITTEES

There have been instances during the past year wherein publishers have yielded to the desire of foremen to appeal disputes to the Executive Council of the I. T. U., notwithstanding the fact that the local agreements provided that all differences be appealed to the Joint Committee.

Your Committee urgently recommends that in all cases where contracts give the Joint Committee jurisdiction over disputes, they be settled in accordance with the contract. Failure to do so tends to nullify the efforts of other publishers to gain this eminently fair provision in their contracts.

Opposition of foremen to submitting disputes to the joint committee usually results from one of two causes—either loyalty to the Union and a desire to nullify the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee over disputes, or aversion to trying anything that is different from the way they have handled such matters in the past.

Your Committee recommends that publishers make use of the full apprentice ratios allowed in their contracts and endeavor when negotiating new agreements, to increase apprentice ratios. For a specific example of the inadequacy of the present ratios we will take the Photo Engravers. According to President Woll, the present apprentice ratios provide 1,000 journeymen every five years. He states there are 7,400 members of the Photo Engravers' Union and that there were 53 deaths of members during the year covered by the annual report of the Photo Engravers' officials. This number, far below the average death rate for the nation, would indicate 265 deaths in five years, leaving a net gain in Union Photo Engravers of 735 every five years. Obviously more than 50 years would be required to replace the present membership of the Photo Engravers' Union at the present apprentice ratios, not taking into consideration the increased death rate which must occur among the present journeymen when ten to twenty years have been added to present ages. It will be apparent that the present apprentice ratio is inadequate even if no expansion could be expected in the industry.

During the consideration of the Toronto Photo Engravers case by the Six-Man International Arbitration Board in March, International President Woll stated that within three years the minimum scale for Photo Engravers will be $55.00 per week and that the Union will never in any manner abridge the right of the individual to sell his services for as much more as he can get. That will be plenty if the present training of Photo Engravers is not stimulated. The same situation may prevail in other printing trades unless adequate apprenticeship plans are carried out.

Respectfully submitted,
HARVEY J. KELLY, Chairman.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE TO NEGOTIATE NEW ARBITRATION CONTRACTS

To the American Newspaper Publishers Association:

After the thirty-ninth meeting of your Association, your Directors met to consider the resolution relating to further negotiations for arbitration contracts adopted by the membership at the meeting as follows:

"RESOLVED, That the recommendation of the President as set forth in his address to the convention with relation to the negotiations of arbitration contracts be approved."

The recommendation of the President as set forth in his address to the Convention was as follows:

"At the 1922 Convention a Committee was appointed to negotiate new International Arbitration Contracts with the several Unions. The powers and authority of this Committee have been continued at succeeding annual conventions. Limitations were imposed by the Convention on the powers of this Committee to negotiate. Subsequently the International Unions in Convention imposed similar limitations on the powers of their officers and Executive Committee. The result has been to make negotiation virtually impossible.

"Your Directors are charged by the by-laws of the Association with responsibility to our members. They are chargeable in the event of their failure to carry out the policies laid down by our members in Annual Convention. The credit for success or the burden of failure properly falls upon them, and the Committee appointed by them to carry out the Convention's instructions.

"We submit to the Convention the wisdom of delegating to the Directors responsibility for the negotiation of International Arbitration Contracts—as responsibility for all other association activities is delegated to the Directors. In our judgment a smaller committee, appointed by, and answerable to the Directors, working to carry out the Convention's directions without limitations imposed in advance, can successfully negotiate new International Contracts—and in no other way can it be done. No contract so negotiated should be effective until it is ratified by our membership. We make this suggestion, believing that by this means negotiations will be facilitated. At the same time the rights of our members will be safeguarded. I hope that the whole question of our negotiations with the International Unions will have the careful consideration of the Convention."

Immediately following the last Convention the Directors met and appointed the undersigned as a Committee to conduct the negotiation of arbitration contracts with the International Typographical Union and the International Photo-Engravers' Union.

In the year which has elapsed since the last Convention, your Committee has had ten meetings with President Lynch. These have been held in Chicago, Kalamazoo (Michigan), and Indianapolis. Your Committee believes that these meetings have been characterized by an honest effort, both on the part of the Union and on the part of your Committee, to agree upon an arbitration contract which might be submitted to our organization and to the Union for the required vote of approval. As a result of these efforts, your Committee has agreed with President Lynch and the Executive Committee of the Union that the contract which is appended to this report shall be submitted to the Fortieth Annual Meeting of our organization, and to the Annual Convention of the International Typographical Union to be held next September.

The contract speaks for itself, but it is fair to the membership that we should report briefly the considerations involved in your Committee's recommendation of this contract to our membership.

The arbitration agreement formerly in effect between our Association and the Typographical Union expired April 30, 1922. Since that date, we have had no orderly method established by contract for appeal from local arbitration awards. In this four year period, approximately half of our membership have signed contracts with local unions.

The rock upon which our endeavors at negotiation have been broken in these four years is the question of the recognition of the Union's "International Law." The Union has maintained that a recognition of those features of its Laws which outlined established practices in our relations was essential to its integrity as a Union. We have maintained that in negotiations between two autonomous bodies neither can preserve its self-respect by a complete recognition of a set of rules framed by the other alone. Our discussion of the past year has in our judgment brought about a better understanding of our respective points of view on this subject. The representatives of the Union have made it clear that the Union's purpose has been and is to maintain those established standards of composing-room operation which have been universally recognized in composing-rooms of our members. We have made clear to the Union the fact that it is our purpose to establish arbitration upon the foundation of those basic rights of both parties which, in our judgment, are as essential to the integrity of the Union as they are to the operation of our own composing-rooms. Proceeding on this better basis of understanding, we have devised the contract appended which we believe serves the purposes of all of our members operating Union composing-rooms without sacrifices of their inherent rights.

The contract offers an orderly and improved method of arbitration between our members and other newspaper publishers having local contracts with local unions affiliated with the I. T. U. It is far simpler in form than the previous contract, and assures both parties a reasonably prompt settlement of disputes by the appointment of a seventh man who shall sit with the six-man board if it shall have failed to reach a settlement at two hearings.

In the third paragraph of the contract we found a common ground upon which we could come together in our understanding of the established and fundamental facts affecting the operation of what we have referred to as the Union's "International Law." It is there agreed that "The question of whether a composing or mailing room shall be Union or non-Union shall not be classed as a difference which may be arbitrated. The Union departments are agreed to be departments in which all eligible employes are members of the Union in good standing, and in which the Union has been formally recognized by the publisher." We are agreed that in these sentences there is a mutual recognition of those established standards of our relationship which become effective as soon as our individual members enter into local contracts with their local unions. A union composing-room is in fact one in which "the Union has been formally recognized by the publisher." It is a fact that when this recognition has been made, the question of whether a composing-room is to be Union or non-Union is no longer subject to arbitration. When the individual publisher enters into a contract with a local union it is in fact the province of the International Union to establish rules for the guidance of its local members, and these rules in the last analysis must necessarily establish the definition of a Union composing-room to which the local unions will conform. It is the purpose of this International contract to offer to the local publisher and the local union the benefits of appeal and orderly procedure which this arbitration contract affords when they have signed it. Neither the local union nor the individual publisher is compelled to sign it unless he pleases.

We believe that this arbitration contract is a successful adjustment of the differences which have left us for four years without this protection. We recommend to the Convention that the proper officers of the Association be authorized to execute an arbitration agreement in substantial conformity with that here appended.

In the event that this contract is adopted by our Association and by the Typographical Union we shall proceed at once with our negotiations with the International Photo-Engravers.

Respectfully submitted,

MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT entered into....., 1926, between the American Newspaper Publishers Association, hereafter referred to as the "ASSOCIATION," and the International Typographical Union, hereinafter referred to as the "INTERNATIONAL," WITNESSETH:

For the purpose of providing a standard and orderly method for the settlement of disputes between newspaper publishers (whether affiliated with the ASSOCIATION or not), and local unions affiliated with the INTERNATIONAL, this standard form of agreement has been entered into.

IN CONSIDERATION of the premises and of the mutual promises herein set forth, the parties agree with each other as follows:

(1) This contract may be executed by newspaper publishers (whether affiliated with the ASSOCIATION or not), and by local unions affiliated with the INTERNATIONAL, having local contractural relations with each other. Upon the signing and delivering of duplicate copies of this agreement, the parties shall thereupon enjoy the mutual guaranties provided herein.

(2) With the exceptions noted in the following paragraph, all differences between local unions and members of the ASSOCIATION, involving wages, hours of labor, and working conditions, which cannot be settled by conciliation, shall be submitted to arbitration in the manner provided by the code of procedure attached hereto.

(3) As this contract is available only to those members of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, and other newspaper publishers conducting union composing and mailing rooms, the question whether a composing or mailing room shall be union or non-union shall not be classed as a difference which may be arbitrated. The union departments are agreed to be departments in which all eligible employes are members of the union in good standing, and in which the union has been formally recognized by the publisher.

(4)—A. Every newspaper publisher who shall execute a copy of this agreement with a local union is hereby protected by the INTERNATIONAL against walk-outs, strikes, or boycotts by the members of the INTERNATIONAL, or of the local union party with him to this contract, and is hereby protected against any other form of concerted interference by members of the INTERNATIONAL, or of local unions, with the usual and regular operation of any of his departments of labor.

(4)—B. Members of the INTERNATIONAL, or of local unions hereafter becoming parties to this agreement with newspaper publishers, are hereby protected by the ASSOCIATION against lock-outs or boycotts by members of the ASSOCIATION.

(4)—C. In the event of a difference arising between any publisher and the local union party with him to this contract (or any member thereof) all work shall continue without interruption pending proceedings, looking to conciliation or arbitration, either local or international, and the wages, hours, or working conditions prevailing at the time the difference arises shall be preserved unchanged until a final decision of the matter at issue shall be reached.

(4)—D. All differences which cannot be settled by concilation shall be referred to arbitration in the manner stipulated in this agreement.

(5) This agreement shall remain in effect from the first day of....., 1926, to the thirtieth day of....., 1931, inclusive, but amendments may be proposed at any meeting of the International Board of Arbitration by either party hereto, and on acceptance by the other party to this agreement, shall become a part hereof.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the parties have caused to be affixed the signatures of their respective officers duly authorized in the premises in quadruple this.....day of....., 1926.

CODE OF PROCEDURE

(1) An arbitrable difference or issue is raised (a) when either party creates any change in existing working conditions affecting the other and without the consent of the other, or (b) when a written request is made by either party presenting in detail changes in conditions desired.

(2) The representatives of the two parties shall confer within ten days after an issue is raised and at such conference an honest effort to adjust the issue by concilation shall be made. If no agreement is reached within thirty days after the date of the first conference of the parties, each party shall within five days thereafter prepare a written statement setting forth its proposition to the other in detail, which shall be submitted to a local board of arbitration to be formed as herein provided.

(3) After the expiration of the five days' period provided for in the preceding paragraph, during which the parties shall prepare their respective written statements, each party shall name two residents of the locality in which the controversy arises as its representatives on the local board of arbitration. The four members of the board as thus constituted shall select a secretary from among its members. It shall then proceed to choose an additional member who shall be a disinterested party and shall act as chairman of the board. In the event that the parties cannot agree within ten days upon such fifth disinterested member of the board, each of the parties shall submit to the other a list of ten nominees. Each of the parties shall thereupon choose from the other's list of nominees one name, and from the two names thus chosen one shall be selected by lot, who shall thereupon be constituted as the only appointed fifth member of the local board of arbitration. The chairman of the local board shall preside, put motions, et cetera, and shall be entitled to vote on all propositions which may properly come before the board in open session. The board shall thereupon proceed at once to hear the evidence and arguments of the parties in support of their respective contentions. At the conclusion of the hearing, the chairman shall retire and the other members of the board shall immediately take up a consideration of the issues involved. If the members of the board in the absence of the chairman cannot agree, or if there are any differences which do not receive the votes of at least three of the four original members of the board, the chairman shall be called in to cast the deciding vote on all unsettled questions or propositions.

(4) The local board of arbitration shall conduct its hearings under the following rules:

(a) It may examine all parties involved in any differences referred to it for adjudication.

(h) It may employ stenographers to provide a record for use in the event of an appeal, which record shall be properly paged and indexed.

(c) It may require witnesses to take oath, and in its judgment may accept affidavits on all disputed points.

(d) It shall have free access to all books and records of the parties bearing on points at issue.

(e) Equal opportunity shall be allowed to the parties for presentation of evidence and for argument.

(f) In event of either party to the dispute refusing to appear or present its case after due notice, it may be adjudged in default, and decision shall then be rendered against such party.

(g) It shall preserve inviolate all evidence given to it in confidence.

(h) The usual rules of hearing evidence and making arguments on points of evidence shall be followed.

(i) It may in a body visit any office involved, in order to see the operation of labor therein, or for any other purpose necessary to a just decision.

(j) There shall be an agreement by at least a majority of the members of the board as to the exact time and place of its hearings, of which both parties shall be duly notified in good season.

(k) Sessions shall be continuous except for necessary intermissions until the hearings are concluded.

(l) The local board of arbitration shall proceed with due diligence to hear evidence and arguments and the award shall be filed within sixty days of the time such local board is constituted.

(m) The award of the local board of arbitration shall be formulated in writing and signed by all of the members thereof at a regular session after there has been a full opportunity for consideration and discussion, the date and time of such session having previously been determined at a full meeting of the local board. Any member of the local board dissenting from the award may file a dissenting opinion, setting forth his reasons for such dissent within forty-eight hours after the signing of the award, and such dissenting opinion duly signed may be attached to the award.

The local board of arbitration shall fix the period during which its award shall be effective, such period to be not less than one year nor more than three years, provided there is no local agreement as to time. All expense of the local arbitration board shall be divided equally between the parties.

(n) Except in those cases in which an appeal shall be allowed by the International Board of Arbitration, it is the express intention of the parties that the award of the local board shall be final and binding upon the parties.

(5) The International Board shall determine whether or not an appeal shall be allowed from the award of a local board. No appeal shall be allowed from the award of a local board except in those cases in which the International Board shall find:

(a) That the local board has violated the rules of procedure herein set forth in any provision materially affecting the rights of either party;

(b) That the award of the local board is in material violation of the terms of this agreement or rules of procedure;

(c) That the award of the local board is (1) fraudulent or (2) grossly unfair to either party;

(d) That the local board has failed to file an award within sixty days after its duly constituted meeting for that purpose as herein provided.

(6) In the event that either party shall desire to appeal to the International Board of Arbitration written notice to that effect shall be given to the other party within five days of the time that the local award has been rendered and the appeal shall be filed with the International Board within thirty days after such decision. To file an appeal the appellant shall file with the International Board of Arbitration a transcript of testimony properly certified by the stenographer taking the original evidence before a notary public, together with a sworn statement setting forth his right to appeal under the provisions of Paragraph (5) hereof. The International Board shall at its next hearing after the filing of such appeal consider the same, and determine whether or not such appeal shall be allowed If the appeal is denied the parties shall be notified and the award of the local board shall thereupon become effective. If the appeal shall be allowed both parties shall be notified to that effect. In all cases where appeals are allowed no evidence shall be heard by the International Board of Arbitration, but both parties may appear personally or may submit the records and briefs of the local hearing making oral or written arguments in support of their respective contentions. The rules and procedure given for the local arbitration boards shall govern the International Arbitration Board.

(7)—(a) The International Board of Arbitration shall consist of three members of the executive council of the International and three members of the Special Standing Committee of the Association, or their proxies. This board shall meet at such time and place as shall be determined by it, due notice to be given to all the parties. If the board as thus constituted is unable to reach a decision after considering the case at two hearings, the membership of the Board shall be increased at its next hearing by the addition of a seventh and disinterested member, who shall act only on the matters that made his selection necessary, and who shall have the same standing as the other members, and shall act with them at the earliest possible date after his appointment.

(7)—(b) Prior to the execution of this agreement, the parties shall agree upon the name of one suitable to act as the seventh member of the International Board of Arbitration. In the event of his death, absence or inability to act the name of his substitute or successor shall be agreed upon between the parties before proceeding with further hearings. Such seventh man shall act in all cases where he shall be called upon unless or until either party withdraws its consent, when a successor shall be agreed upon. Provided, that neither party may withdraw its consent pending any hearing of matters already before the board.

(8) The award of the International Board of Arbitration in all cases in which it shall take jurisdiction shall include a determination of all the issues involved; it shall cover the full period between the raising of the isues and their final settlement; any change in the wage scale may be made effective from the date the issue first arose at the discretion of the board. An award by the majority of the International Board shall be final, and shall be accepted as such by the parties to the dispute.

(9) At the request of either party to an arbitration the International Board shall determine whether either party has failed to comply with or refuses to fulfill its obligation under a decision, or has omitted to perform any duty prescribed therein. At the conclusion of such inquiry it shall be wholly within the power of the International Board to reject all that has been previously done and order a rehearing before the International Board, or before a new local board; or it may find against the offending party or annul the individual arbitration contract. In the event of either party to a dispute refusing to accept and comply with a decision of a local board which is not appealed, or with a decision of the International Board, or with any of the provisions of this International Arbitration Agreement, as determined by a decision of the International Board, all aid and support to the employer or the local union refusing acceptance and compliance shall be withdrawn by both parties to this agreement. The acts of such recalcitrant employer or union shall be publicly disavowed and the aggrieved party shall be furnished by the other with an official document to that effect.

ADDRESS WANTED

Lee A. Williams

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE OPEN SHOP DIVISION

The work of the Open Shop Division of the A. N. P. A. being limited in its work to the handling of one subject—the protection of the members of the association from the constantly and ever-increasing demands of the various printing trades unions—it naturally follows that a great deal of sameness and reiteration must appear in the annual reports. While labor difficulties differ in some respects, in the main the questions involved are the same, and the manner of handling is along lines followed for several years.

During the year just passed there have been many controversies, but little if any direct locking of horns between local unions and members. Demands for increased wages have been made at the expiration of each contract, as well as demands for shorter hours. In the final settlements the question of hours has been waived. Owing to the fact that the Government's index figure of living expenses has shown a decrease during the year 1925, it has not been difficult for the publisher to show the scale committee that there was no justice in asking for increases in wages.

LABOR

The office of the Open Shop Division has received numerous calls from various sections of the country for help of different kinds, and the Secretary has made many trips to cities where contracts were expiring. In all cases where the advice of the Secretary was followed contracts were made or renewed on satisfactory terms. In the cases mentioned the Division was prepared to furnish competent help at a few hours' notice. In a few instances men have been assembled and held in readiness for immediate moving if the demand of the unions should be insisted on. On no occasion were the men needed. In three cities offices running open shop for several years had allowed their forces to get overbalanced on the union side, with the usual and inevitable result—a threatened strike if the office was not unionized at once. Enough emergency men were furnished to the members to protect their interests. One city had a one-day strike. Men were being held by the Secretary of the Division for quick action, but the publishers decided to settle the matter without calling for the men.

APPRENTICES

The apprenticeship question is still a subject that demands the attention of all members of the Open Shop Division, as well as of publishers not members of the Association, but who conduct non-union or open shop mechanical departments. The schools at Nashville, Ithaca and Spokane are doing a great work, but the united output of the three schools makes only a dent in the demand for non-union compositors, linotype operators, make-ups, etc. The graduates of the schools mentioned are in ever-increasing demand, and placed in many instances before they are graduated.

As the Committee on Printing Trades Schools will fully cover this subject, we will not take up in detail the greater advantages offered by those schools devoted to the exclusive teaching of the printing business to its students, over those trade schools now being fostered by the Boards of Education.

The Open Shop Division has placed a few of the boys from the Spokane School and also the Nashville School. Every graduate of the Spokane School could have been placed at once if the question of transportation could have been satisfactorily arranged. The boys graduated and placed have made good in every instance.

DAILY NEWSPAPER SURVEY

Daily Newspapers Published.	2,133
Combined Daily Circulation..	34,393,451
Combined Sunday Circulation	23,008,592
Open Shop and Non-Union Papers	792
Combined Circulation Daily Non-Union and Open Shop Daily Papers.....	4,930,860
Combined Sunday Circulation Non-Union, Union and Open Shop Sunday Papers	1,787,354

NEW MEMBERS

As a result of the work of your Open Shop Division the membership of the Association has been increased by several new members, and because of the constantly increasing importance of the work, and a wider knowledge of the benefits this branch of the A. N. P. A. offers to the daily newspapers more are expected to become members in the future.

LABOR MARKET

The labor market during the year 1925 was nearer to normal than during the years 1923-24. A few localities reported workmen of an inferior grade as out of employment; but generally the demand was brisk with an inadequate supply of competent men. The schools for teaching boys and girls the groundwork of the printing art have practically confined their efforts to two or three branches, such as linotype, job pressmen, and/or compositors. Additional departments should be established in each school for the instruction of apprentices in newspaper ad-setting, make-up, etc. The labor market for the coming year is not at all promising. If newspapers generally continue to increase the size of their editions, more machines will be demanded and consequently more men. This means that the demand for apprentices as well as for experienced men in newspaper work will be greater. The present scope of education will have to be extended greatly if the requirements are to be adequately met.

Respectfully submitted,
CHARLES A. WEBB, Chairman
Harry Chandler Rowe Stewart
H. W. Flagg, Executive Secretary.

REPORT OF THE POSTAL COMMITTEE

The last year has been a busy one for the Postal Committee, and one, which in the opinion of the Committee will produce benefits for all members of the Association.

The Postal Law of February 28, 1925, created a Joint Committee of Congress to investigate and consider postal rates and directed it to make a report at the opening of the session on the first Monday of last December. The Committee was named with Senator Moses of New Hampshire as Chairman. It began its work in Washington on July 20 and after two days there, went to Atlanta, Georgia, where it held its first out of town hearing. After Atlanta, hearings were held at Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Augusta, Buffalo, Chicago, Minneapolis and St. Paul. At the conclusion of the St. Paul hearing on August 28, the Committee adjourned to meet in Washington at the call of the Chairman.

THE POSTAL HEARINGS

The Chairman of your Committee, the Manager of the Association, the Washington Representative, as well as numerous publishers and representatives of various organizations appeared at these various hearings and submitted testimony and argument in favor of a revision of newspaper mail rates. Pursuant to the policy of the Association, the main purpose of our effort was to bring about a return to the so-called 1920 rates. It developed during the hearings, however, that new agencies of transportation and distribution have sprung up during the last few years and also that express and baggage companies have actively sought to participate in the transportation of newspapers at lower rates than those provided under the 1920 postal schedule.

The Congressional Committee appeared to be greatly interested in these phases of the problem, so your Postal Committee, after conferring with the Officers and Directors of the Association, decided to advocate, in addition to the 1920 rates on individual subscriptions and club packages, a special rate on newsdealers' bundles.

At the Chicago hearing, it appeared as though the Post Office Department would concur in such a rate, but later the Department objected to it most strenuously.

After the adjournment at St. Paul, the Congressional Committee did not meet again until late in October. This hearing was immediately adjourned until November 11 at the request of the Post Office Department. On November 11, it became apparent that the Joint Committee could not conclude its work in time to report in December, as the law provided, because the Post Office Department declined to give it information which was regarded as essential to its final report. In view of this situation in December, Senator Moses obtained consent of Congress for the Committee to continue in existence for one year.

Hearings were finally resumed in Washington, March 29, 1926, and were still in progress when this report was prepared.

COMMITTEE BELIEVES REPORT WILL BE PRESENTED AT THIS SESSION

While it is impossible at the moment to forecast either the contents of the report of the Committee, the date of its submission to Congress, the action by Congress thereon or the date thereof, your Committee believes that much good has been accomplished in behalf of publishers, even if there be neither report nor action at this session of Congress. But it also believes there will be a report and it is confident that if the same fine co-operation heretofore given by members of the Association is continued, there will be action which will restore the 1920 rates and obtain a favorable bundle rate.

Two problems now confront us:

First, bringing about an immediate report from the Congressional Committee favorable to our program seeking a return to the 1920 rates, supplemented by a bundle rate, and Second, obtaining action on that report at this session of Congress.

Means of solving these problems will be discussed at the Convention in the light of last minute information from Washington.

SUMMARY OF WORK ACCOMPLISHED

The good which already has been accomplished, in your Committee's opinion, may be summarized thus:

In December, 1924, the Postmaster General proposed a 100% increase on the great bulk of newspaper mail. This proposal was defeated and the law of 1925 provided for an increase in but one zone—the fourth.

As a result of the testimony submitted at the hearings held to date, your Committee feels certain that in the future no unbiased person can safely accuse newspapers of not paying their way in the mails. It was clearly and conclusively demonstrated that mail distribution is the most expensive form of distribution employed by publishers. It was equally conclusively demonstrated that mail charges for transportation only, without any distribution by the Government, are far out of line as compared with any or all other charges by other transportation agencies. Furthermore, it was shown to the Joint Committee's satisfaction that the increases in postal rates since 1920 have curtailed the distribution and transportation of newspapers through the mails with injury to the public and no corresponding benefit to the Government. Finally, while the Postmaster General has declined to recommend a reduction in second class rates or to approve a special bundle rate, he no longer advocates a 100% increase, or any increase in fact in newspaper rates.

The Joint Committee of Congress is now considering Senate Bill 3544, introduced by Senator McKellar of Tennessee. This measure provides for a return to the 1920 rates and at the recent hearings in Washington, Senator McKellar announced he would propose an amendment to cover a bundle rate.

THE I. C. C. CASE

In addition to the work of your Postal Committee before the Joint Congressional Committee, it has been engaged during the last three months in a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission affecting the pay given the railroads for hauling the mails. Last year, the carriers asked the I. C. C. to give them large increases in pay for carrying the mails. The Postmaster General is resisting their request. Your Committee, as well as your Board, felt, however, that the interests of publishers, as well as the public generally, would be served if the A. N. P. A. could be allowed to intervene in this case. Therefore, a petition of intervention was filed, and while at first the I. C. C. denied it, upon further consideration the Commission decided to listen to argument.

This has not taken place as yet, and while it is impossible to forecast the result, it is not imprudent to say that even if the petition finally is rejected, a record will have been made which will put our views squarely before the Commission. That which we seek to prove is best summed up in our petition of intervention as follows:

"The Petitioner, respectfully represents, therefore, that if allowed to intervene in this proceeding, it will submit, among other matters relating to the rates in controversy, the following evidence:

"1. That the cost of postal transportation of newspapers is excessive as compared with the cost of other methods of transportation and distribution involving substantially similar service.

"2. That such excessive cost results in part from the present practices of the Post Office Department with respect to the transportation and distribution of the mails.

"3. That the charges for transportation paid the railroads could be materially reduced if various appropriate kinds of transportation service were substituted for the one form of highly expensive passenger train transportation, now almost exclusively used by the Post Office Department, even for the cheapest and most bulky forms of non-perishable commodities.

"4. That if the methods of transporting the mails are properly revised, the cost to the railroads for the service rendered by them can be materially reduced.

"5. That as to a large volume of newspaper circulation now distributed by the Post Office Department, the sole out-of-pocket expense to the Department is the transportation rate paid to the railroads under the order of this Commission, since the newspaper publishers deliver their bundles to the car, put them in the car at their own expense, and have them picked up by their dealers at point of destination without handling cost to the Department.

"6. That as to that part of newspaper circulation distributed on rural routes, the newspaper publishers subject the Post Office Department to practically no expense for distributing or handling such circulation; that the publishers route and bundle all such mail for the route on which it is to be distributed, and in addition deliver such bundles to the train on which they are to be carried; that these rural routes were established by Congress as a part of a public policy to afford mail service to every citizen of the United States; that rural carriers are not paid according to the number of hours they work or the volume, weight or value of the mail they carry, but solely by the number of miles they travel; that the expense for operating such rural routes is, therefore, not increased by increasing the volume of second class mail matter, and, on the contrary, is not reduced by a decrease in the volume of second class mail matter.

"7. That for these services of transportation only publishers pay the Department an average in excess of $1.70 per hundred pounds for a haul of 150 miles or less, whereas railroad and other carriers competing for similar shipments offer rates ranging from 30c to 90c per hundred pounds for the same distance, and express companies competing for such shipments offer rates ranging from 50c per hundred pounds for intrastate shipments, to $1.00 per hundred pounds for interstate shipments. That because of these discrepancies in cost, Petitioner's members, wherever possible, have diverted their distribution of newsdealers' bundles from the Post Office Department to other distributing agencies, but that where such other distributing agencies are not available, Petitioner's members, in order to serve their subscribers, are compelled to use the postal service at what they believe to be an excessive charge for transportation only, said excessive charge solely for transportation being largely due to the practices of the Post Office Department in the transportation of this and other mail matter.

"8. That the four successive increases in second class postal rates since 1918 have injuriously affected Petitioner's membership by curtailing the circulation by mail of daily newspapers in the United States. That this has been particularly true since the third of these four successive horizontal increases took effect July 1, 1920. That under the present second class postal rates, Petitioner's members have been forced to seek other methods of distribution, or in the absence of less expensive methods, have been compelled to curtail their mail distribution because they could not afford to pay the cost thereof, and subscribers would not pay it through increased subscription charges. That as a result, it is now impossible for Petitioner's members to increase their volume of circulation through the mails. That since any further increase in the transportation rates allowed the railroads may result either in increased second class postal rates, or in further curtailment of second class postal service, Petitioner's members and the public at large will be greately damaged by the allowance of any such increased transportation rates to the railroads without a proper readjustment of the transportation practices of the Post Office Department."

COMMITTEE APPRECIATES CO-OPERATION OF MEMBERSHIP

In conclusion, your Committee desires again to thank the Association as a whole for the co-operation extended, and especially to thank those individual publishers, their circulation representatives, the Manager of the A. N. P. A., and his staff, and the Washington Representative of the Association, who were so helpful to us during the long siege of Congressional hearings last summer.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON TRAFFIC

Following is a report of the activities of your Traffic Committee during the past year:

Directly following his appointment as a member of your Committee, your present Chairman undertook the compilation of a tariff or statement of rates applying on newsprint paper from the various mills and ports of importation to all large centers or rate groups in the United States. It was his belief, and still is, that such a tariff would reveal numerous maladjustments, correction of which could be negotiated by the Committee or individually by members. Some work was done on a publication of this nature, but it soon developed that it was more of a task than your Committee could handle with its present limited facilities.

Complete and up-to-date tariff file must be assembled which would require constant revision. Such work as has been done has not been wasted effort, however—as an instance, the inconsistency of the rates from points in the Hudson River Valley to New York City was developed. This feature will be mentioned later in this report.

The net result of our efforts is contained in the remarks of your Chairman at the First Fall Convention of your Association held at White Sulphur Springs, November 10th, 11th and 12th, a transcript of which may be found on page 558 of the 1925 Bound Volume of Bulletins. It is our belief that matters relating to transportation are of vital interest to the members of this Association, but that the subject is varied and technical to be handled by a Committee. We recommend that a department be created immediately to handle traffic matters for the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

In our report for the year 1924 we advised that the railways through their Classification Committee were endeavoring to so alter the description of cores that pulp and fibre paper winding cores without metal ends would pay rates four classes higher than at present—roughly, an advance of 100 per cent. Your Chairman has appeared before the Committee and resisted this advance in which he has had the co-operation of the Pulp and Paper Traffic League. As a result, the present proposal has been abandoned by the railways, but the docket of the Classification Committee must be closely watched in the future as the railways have indicated that they are not satisfied with the present description. They claim it permits unscrupulous shippers to move under present rates the light paste-board cores such as are used in rolls of tissue and crepe paper sold in chain stores.

The matter of rates on carload shipments of paper winding cores has also had the attention of your Committee. Just at present the newsprint rates in the opposite direction apply on returned cores moving in carloads between all points west of Espanola, Ontario, Chicago and East St. Louis, and this, in the opinion of your Committee, is the proper basis for the whole country. In eastern territory, however, with very few exceptions fifth class merchandise rates apply. Of necessity paper mills are usually located far back from large centers to which reasonable class rates apply, and frequently there are no through class rates, in which case the cores must pay full local rates to and from some intermediate junction. The only thorough and proper basis is the rate established to move the paper in the opposite direction and this is the goal your Committee has in mind.

During the year the Interstate Commerce Commission handed down its decision on the subject of core rates in the complaints of the Washington Publishers Association. From certain points sixth class rates have been prescribed by the Commission. Viewed from one angle this is a step in the right direction, but on the other hand it affords very little relief to shippers who must pay combination rates and at the same time establishes a fixed basis for the future. The decision has proved an effective check in our efforts to obtain the newsprint rates by negotiation. We have, however, several proposals under consideration and hope within the next year to have found a method of overcoming the effects of this decision.

In our previous report we advised that the Interstate Commerce Commission had issued a circular under its Docket No. 17000 initiated as a result of the so-called Hoch-Smith Resolution adopted by Congress in which shippers and receivers were asked to set forth conditions prevailing in their various lines of industry. In a nutshell, the resolution calls for a general revision of the rate structure of the country with a view to shifting a part of the burden of transportation costs necessary to maintain our railroads from farm products to manufactured products and other freight. While little can be proven without exhaustive statistics and exhibits, your Committee is of the opinion that failure to file a statement at this time might later be construed as an admission that the publishers could stand a heavier share of the freight burden or were not particularly affected by the volume of freight rates. We filed a complete statement.

The railroads operating from the south Atlantic ports have for a number of years carried import rates on newsprint paper to certain destinations in Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee lower than the local rates. The original idea was to meet competition through the Gulf ports. Certain interests have drawn the attention of these roads to the fact that where the rates apply on traffic from Newfoundland there is no competition from that colony and further that a substantial movement of Newfoundland paper has developed. The roads immediately attempted to increase their revenues by cancelling the application of the rates on traffic from Newfoundland allowing the higher local rates to come into effect on this traffic. Your Committee lodged protest with the issuing agencies. As a result, the proposition has been withdrawn from the railways' docket. It has been the intention of your Chairman to make a thorough check of the rates to this territory via all rail routes as well as through the Southern and Gulf ports, but, as above outlined, it has proved to be too great a task for the time he is able to devote to it.

Advice has reached your Chairman that following his remarks, regarding the rate adjustment from Hudson Valley mills to New York City made during his talk at White Sulphur Springs, a committee composed of representatives of the New York dailies has been formed to investigate this situation and if advisable to form a traffic department to handle this and other rate situations and traffic matters. If the right man can be secured we are certain that the results will be highly satisfactory and it might be remarked in pasisng that what is true of one city would also be true for the whole organization.

As recommended in our former report, the Association has now secured membership in the National Industrial Traffic League. This membership gives us a voice in the largest and most influential traffic body in the United States which would be particularly valuable to your traffic manager.

At the annual meeting of the Pulp & Paper Traffic League, held in Chicago January 20th and 21st, the matter of the proposed traffic department of the American Newspaper Publishers Association was discussed and your Chairman through his membership in the Pulp & Paper Traffic League was able to have a resolution passed favoring heartiest co-operation between the membership of the league individually as well as collectively and the traffic manager of this Association.

Respectfully submitted.

E. M. Antrim, Chairman.

Retail Copy with This Feature Received Largest Vote in Daily's Ad Letter Contest—Copy with Merchandise Pictured Second Choice

RETAIL advertisements which contain a variety of suggestions for purchasers are of the greatest interest to women readers, according to an analysis of letters received in a recent "Ad Letter" contest just issued by the Kansas City Journal-Post.

Six hundred and eighty-eight women declared they were most interested in copy as described above, while 650 mentioned preference for advertisements with merchandise pictured.

The other ratings, which EDITOR & PUBLISHER believes of high interest to advertising managers and copy writers, were:

547 preferred to see popular priced merchandise advertised.

538 decided that the price of merchandise must be included in an advertisement to make it valuable.

520 emphasized the value of description of merchandise in advertising.

436 said service was the most important thing the advertiser had to offer. Of this number 54 liked the free parking space accommodation, 30 the lunch room service and 25 the day nursery offered by one firm. The use of rest rooms, writing rooms and a willingness to cash checks for customers were all included as forms of service to customers.

402 are partial to sale advertisements, favoring price reductions and bargains of any kind.

384 appreciated the reliability of the advertiser.

378 favored advertisements that were attractive to the eye either in makeup or art work, or both in most cases.

348 expressed a preference for advertisements that included merchandise for all members of the family.

323 appreciated the time-saving and energy-saving aid of the advertisements.

267 said they were mail order customers of advertisers.

255 were impressed with the credit appeal of an advertisement. Those merchants who offer an easy payment plan were preferred.

247 favored advertisements that featured practical merchandise for sale.

211 said style was the thing they were interested in when reading advertisements.

210 were partial to large advertisements. They thought the size of the advertisement more than anything else attracted attention.

202 decided quality in merchandise advertised was of the utmost importance.

192 admired the simplicity with which the advertiser stated his message.

189 acknowledged the importance of store courtesy in winning patronage.

159 mentioned the influence of timeliness in advertising. The merchant who keeps up with the seasons and the important events of the year and applies it to his advertising is complimented.

152 suggest that advertisements include a range of prices so that all classes can be reached.

136 decided they liked certain advertisements because they were well arranged as to copy and illustrations.

131 appreciated the advertisement that told of the store arrangement. In other words, on what floor and in what section to find merchandise advertised.

127 liked to see the location of the firm conspicuously placed in the advertisement.

126 were attracted to advertisements that showed originality.

105 preferred to see merchandise of utility advertised.

98 commented on the human interest appeal of certain advertisements.

96 thought forcefulness was evident in the ads they wrote about.

86 emphasized a preference for display headlines.

84 approved of the surety coupon plan in use by one Kansas City firm.

79 stressed the desirability of the personal note in an advertisement, saying they were attracted by the informal, chatty tone of the "ad."

78 advocated the use of large type to call attention to the advertisement.

73 liked advertisements that were constructive in their message. . . .

70 admired the thrift encouraging tone of the advertisements—this particular feature applying particularly to bank advertisements.

61 appreciated advertisements that mentioned trademarked brands.

60 recognized the value of white space in an advertisement.

57 noticed that certain advertisers use space consistently and so became better sold on the firm.

56 liked to know they could order by phone and appreciated the advertisement which incorporated this fact.

56 noticed the advertisement with an appeal to children, especially was this true in the toy ads before Christmas.

55 praised advertisements that seemed to uphold and foster civic enterprise.

54 voted for advertisements that were informative—that were newsy and told something worth while either about their store or the city.

53 approved of the convenient location of certain stores.

46 opposed advertising that used extravagant superlatives.

45 were impressed with the sincerity of the advertiser.

44 wanted advertisements to name business hours for the shopper's convenience.

42 liked advertisements that gave them new ideas in merchandise.

39 considered late closing hours an important thing for working people during the Christmas holiday season.

39 urged the abolition of comparative prices in advertisements—the 39 opposed to it were very emphatic.

39 appreciated the educational appeal of the advertisements—this applied particularly to radio advertisements.

36 wished to see the name of the advertiser at the top of the advertisement.

34 were able to get the meaning of the advertisement preferred, at a glance, so clearly and concisely was it put.

31 preferred small advertisements because they were easy to read and could be digested in a short time.

31 approved of dollar day sales.

30 thought the position of an advertisement in the paper had a great deal to do with its effectiveness.

29 believed that those merchants who advertised that they sold in large quantities had an advantage.

27 considered the free incentive in an advertisement of decided interest and appeal.

27 were partial to gravure advertisements.

26 were attracted to advertisements that were intriguing or held an air of mystery.

23 liked the slogan featured by an advertiser.

23 believed one-day sales unfair. Believed sale period should cover several days.

21 disliked flashy illustrations or anything noisy looking in an advertisement.

19 stated emphatically that they were against cut prices. They felt more confident when buying from a one-price store.

18 felt the influence of dignity in an advertisement.

12 favored merchants with progressive ideas.

11 preferred advertisements of a conservative type.

10 liked advertisements filled with reading matter.

7 mentioned desirability of stores all on one floor.

5 voted for advertisements with a bit of humor in them.

4 appreciated a well lighted and well ventilated store.

2 said advertisements with a touch of romance appealed to them.

The contest, the analysis of which has just been issued in booklet form, was launched Dec. 6 last and covered a period of 14 days. It was open only to women and girls. In spite of the busy Christmas season which might have deterred writers, thousands of letters were received. Cash prizes totaling $1,400 were offered, first prize being $200, second $150, third $100. There were fifty smaller prizes.

The letters were limited to 200 words, subjects being any local advertisements appearing in the Journal-Post between Dec. 8 and 22, inclusive. A clipping of the ad commented on had to be enclosed with the letter.

"The thousands of letters received in the Ad Letter contest radiated appreciation of the sincerity in advertising," the Journal-Post stated.

"'I like their advertising because it is honest and I can find the same treatment in the store that is suggested in the advertisement,' was a typical statement.

"Another expressed her idea of honesty in advertising in this manner: 'Art is wonderful, but when I anticipate a purchase and search the advertisement for prices, I do not care to get lost in Old English Gardens, swim Venetian thoroughfares or trail among Grecian statues. To me, simplicity combined with honest representation means strength in advertising.'

"'I make frequent shopping trips to Kansas City and read the advertisements in the Journal-Post and feel safe in using them as a shopping guide.' This thought expressed in a letter reflects the attitude of all women readers. They have learned to depend upon the advertisements for they have found them reliable.

"Newspaper readers expect their newspaper to reflect sincerity and truthfulness in its advertising pages. It is a rightful desire and the advertiser who caters to it is the advertiser who wins customers."

Following are excerpts from letters regarding the appreciated qualities in copy advertising a men's store:

"The ad gives the assurance of an abundant stock so that one may be sure, after the selection is made, he will not hear 'We are just out of that.'"

"The prices are plainly quoted instead of being advertised only as cheap and made it possible to select intelligently and still keep within my budget."

"The price is plainly given with each article—not so small that it is hard to find, not so large that it cheapens the ad."

"No definite date is set for the sales, thereby assuring out-of-town shoppers the same service as those who shop in the city."

"A pictured as well as a written description was given on almost all articles, thereby giving the phone buyer a better idea of what was offered."

"I have no patience with advertisements of articles that do not include the price. I like the 'no time limit for exchange.' I dread reading advertisements that are small and obscure."

Points of interest in department store copy were commented on as follows:

"We women are still children and one picture would attract more attention from us than a page of reading matter. It is like window shopping at home."

"Their willingness to cash checks makes it possible for the woman shopper to do her buying without carrying a large amount of cash with her in the crowded shopping district."

"Each article is illustrated. I do not take much interest unless a cut accompanies the description."

"All feminine minds love 'Charge Purchases—With Small Payments Down.' Nor can we overlook 'Triple Surety Coupons Monday and Single Coupons With C. O. D. Orders' in the Jones Store ads."

"They advertise their sales early, a thing that is of utmost importance to me, as I have to shop by mail."

"By actual count I found 64 suggestions and gifts, each one illustrated, practical, and the price of each given. . . . I transformed my husband into nursemaid from 6 to 8:30 o'clock and had no trouble in deciding on many of the suggestions appearing in the advertisement."

"The articles mentioned in the brief but clear descriptions enabled me to visualize my purchases and saved not only my time but the time of the salespeople as well. . . . The advertisement was easy to read and did not have any embellishment to detract from its message."

"A form of service which I cannot fail to appreciate is the fact that they advertise that checks from any Kansas City bank would be cashed. This is most convenient to the laboring class who have to work late and are not able to get to the bank before closing hours."

"Their descriptions are short and clear and at the bottom of each are directions telling what floor to find merchandise on."

"Such a variety of goods is advertised that I always read the entire ad to see if there is something of particular interest to me."

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Fred T. Bonham

CLEAN advertising constitutes one of the cardinal principles in the code of ethics of Fred T. Bonham, business manager of the Knoxville (Tenn.) Journal. This principle is not forgotten even in the heat of political campaigns.

No candidate for office is ever allowed to attack the private life and record of his opponent in the columns of the Journal. This principle has caused the Journal to turn away a good many dollars' worth of advertising, but it has contributed to the unshakable confidence which it enjoys in Knoxville and East Tennessee.

Mr. Bonham also believes in newspapers taking firm stands on great questions involving the public welfare. Once the Journal takes a side it stays with it until victory. But it does not involve itself in every passing squabble.

A few years ago when the municipal government of Knoxville became notoriously extravagant and inefficient, the Journal with other papers engaged in a fight which resulted in a change in the city charter and the installation of a city manager.

It was the first to begin the fight for the establishment of a great national park in the Smoky Mountains near Knoxville. After three years of unceasing effort, the park now seems assured. Tennessee and North Carolina have just raised more than $1,200,000 for purchase of the park area.

These are two of the major activities in which the Journal has engaged recently.

Mr. Bonham came to the Journal as assistant business manager in 1908. In 1912 he became business manager, a position which he has since retained.

WHAT IS FAIR PRESS COMMENT AND CRITICISM?

Editorial Opinion Restricted and Critical Judgment Restrained for Protection of the Individual—Helm Tells How Far Editors May Safely Go

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

Press freedom would be mere mockery were editors not permitted the privilege of fair comment and criticism.

But when is comment "fair," and "criticism" just?

Carl Helm, member of the Hearst legal department, in New York, answers these questions this week for Editor & Publisher in this the sixth article in a series stripping the libel law of legal verbiage.

Libel law was created for the protection of the newspaper editor and owner as well as all other individuals, Mr. Helm explains.

FIGHTING editorship has brought many a paper from mere ink-smudged newsprint to popularity and prosperity. It is one circulation builder unpurchasable from the syndicates and most precious of them all.

And yet a fighting editor is doing a devil's dance on the libel tight rope, if he hasn't truth as his balance pole and doesn't know exactly what "fair comment and criticism" means and when it is permitted by law.

Even editorial opinion is limited in its expression to certain definite fields; even critical judgment is restrained by law for the protection of politician, author, artist, composer or other public man or woman.

For the protection of newspaper editor and publisher, too, libel law, particularly criminal libel law, was created, Carl Helm, lawyer, member of the Hearst legal department, New York, pointed out this week in an interview.

"Not so long ago," he said, "a sawed-off shot gun or a steady pistol hand was the libel law. Then if a man, attacked in the public prints, felt himself maliciously outraged, he called on the editor in person, shot him up, wrecked his plant, and in this boisterous way got his revenge. Today the same man engages a lawyer and takes his case into the courts.

"The editor is thus protected and at the same time hampered by law. He cannot always say exactly what he thinks. No gentleman ever would. He must be sure his facts are probably true, and that is language is temperate enough to prevent any suspicion of malice.

"But he is granted a privilege which has been given the term 'fair comment and criticism.'

"In a single clause, this privilege means that an editor can attack the works of a man, but not his motives nor the character of a man himself."

Legal-minded men, however, are never content with dismissing a definition with a clause. Mr. Helm provided me with a classification of the various fields in which an editor is permitted to comment and criticize freely, but fairly, without fear of resultant libel litigation. These fields are:

1. Affairs of state.
2. Administration of justice.
3. Public institutions and local authorities.
4. Ecclesiastical matters.
5. Books, pictures, and architecture, theatres, concerts, and other public entertainments.
6. Appeals to the public for funds, etc.

William A. DeFord, chief counsel of the Hearst Corporations, added this warning and advice to the editors:

"You can argumentatively criticize what a man does," Mr. DeFord told the editors, "as a public man—all of his official acts and the affects of those acts, as long as the charges or attacks reveal no personal malice on the part of author or publisher and as long as you do not state or imply to the subject of your criticisms any motive for the act holding him up to public ridicule, or expressly or implicitly charge him with a disgraceful act which would hold him up to public scorn.

"In making a fair report of an official or judicial proceeding, the report must present a narrative of what actually occurred without interlarding any comment or criticism."

Newell on "Slander and Libel" supplements this advice in greater detail. A quotation from that book reads:

"The editor of a newspaper has the right, if not duty, of publishing for the information of the public fair and reasonable comments, however severe in terms, upon anything which is made by its owner a subject of public exhibition, as upon any other matter of public interest, and such a publication falls within the class of privileged communications for which no action can be maintained without proof of actual malice.

"It is sometimes said that fair and honest criticism in matters of public concern is 'privileged.' This is not true in a strict sense. The distinction between fair and reasonable comment and criticism and privileged communications is this:

"That in the latter case the words may be defamatory, but the defamation is excused or justified by reason of the occasion while in the former case the words are not defamation of the plaintiff and hence not libellous. The stricture or criticism is not upon the person himself, but upon his work and does not attack the moral character or professional integrity of the invidual, and is fair and reasonable, there is no libel, because there is no defamation of the man himself.

"But when the comment or criticism of the man's work becomes an attack on his private or business character, then the element of malice comes in and stamps the language libellous."

In another section Newell states:

"Condemnation of the foreign policy of the government, however sweeping, is not actionable.

"Criticism, however trenchant, on any new poem or novel, or any picture exhibited in a public gallery is not actionable.

"But to pry maliciously into the private life of any poet, novelist or statesman is indefensible."

And again:

"There is no doubt that the public acts of a public man may lawfully be made the subject of fair comment or criticism, not only by the press, but by all manner of publication. But distinction cannot be too closely borne in mind between comment or criticism and allegations of fact, such as that disgraceful acts have been committed or that discreditable language was used. It is one thing to criticize, even with severity, and quite another to assert he has been guilty of particular acts or misconduct. To state matters which are libellous is not comment or criticism."

In this connection, Mr. Helm pointed out, editors court libel. Their reporters bring in reports or rumors; investigations are ordered, but again the reporter falls down. He tells half-truths to his editor, who writing his editorial, states them as truths and the paper is named defendant in a libel suit.

Not long ago a report was circulated of a certain man that he was a candidate for public office. In this capacity, he was a legitimate subject for an editorial attack. The editor attacked. He was perfectly safe in that he only criticized his public acts; he did not condemn his motives, his personal character, nor did he charge any indefensible misconduct.

It seemed an absolutely safe editorial.

The trouble was, however, the man was not a candidate for office. The report proved unfounded. He sued for a substantial sum and collected.

In addition to the necessity of truthful foundation, temperate writing is virtually an essential for the editor who wishes to avoid an unnecessary libel suit. Some degree of moderation should sit in with every editor as he writes an attack or criticism. Aristotle and his celebrated "Golden Mean" is an appropriate editorial companion.

Not many years ago a certain John D. Sweeney was a candidate for office in Ohio. Aristotle was unknown to the Ohio editor, who wrote of Mr. Sweeney:

"Laboring men are taught to believe that a certain candidate, who never did an honest day's work is their especial champion and friend. . . . . A professional gambler, he preaches morality; and a confessed ignoramus, he argues that intelligence should control the elections."

On the following day, the same editor, milled out this bit about Mr. Sweeney:

"Let the people of Ohio county not select a representative from the prize ring or the gambler's den. . . . . Club law is what we may expect from the Jim Sweeney style of legislature. Would you select a man to make laws whom you would kick out of your house and would not trust in your hencoop? Certainly not. And yet by staying at home today you give half a vote to just such a man. It is as much the duty of the citizens to vote against Jim Sweeney as it would be to deodorize against cholera."

The unfortunate Ohio editor cost his paper a half year's supply of newsprint. Jim Sweeney, the candidate, may have been unworthy for the office he was seeking, but the editor was far too reckless in his choice of figures of speech. Mr. Sweeney was not, and was able to prove it, a professional gambler; he had never in his life confessed to being an "ignoramus"; he had been honestly employed for years; and produced evidence satisfactory to a jury that he was not a "representative of the prize ring."

The case was hotly contested and reached the supreme court.

There it was held that:

"His talents and qualities, mental and physical for the office for which he asks at the hands of the people may be freely commented upon and published in a newspaper, and though such comments be harsh and unjust, no malice may be implied, for these are matters of opinion of which the voters are the only judges; but no one has a right by publication to impute to such a candidate falsely, crimes, or publish allegations affecting his character, falsely."

Far more freedom is allowed in criticism of books and plays and art, than in the field of politics, as far as temperate language is concerned; but here, too, the writer must not enter into discussion of personal qualities, motives, or acts, if he does not wish to involve his paper in a libel suit. At least he must be sure of his facts. A certain amount of error, to be sure, is permissable. The courts do not generally have a very high idea, unfortunately, of the press. One court, for instance, has held: "It is not to be expected that a public journalist will always be infallible." And likewise it has generally been conceded that a public man must accept an attack as a necessary, though unpleasant appendage, to his office. The freedom permitted in dramatic criticism has never perhaps been so definitely shown as in a case which occupied the courts of Des Moines, Ia., not so very long ago.

The Des Moines dramatic critic was not lazy, but he felt he had found a gem describing the act of the Cherry Sisters published previously in the Odebolt Chronicle. He went to the show, and the Chronicle's account suited his opinion exactly. He reproduced it therefore, as follows:

"Billy Hamilton, of the Odebolt Chronicle, gave the Cherry Sisters the following, graphic write-up of their late appearance in his town: 'Effie is an old jade of 50 summers, Jessie a frisky filly of 40, and Addie, the flower of the family, a capering monstrosity of 35. Their long skinny arms, equipped with talons at the extremities, swung mechanically, and waved frantically at the suffering audience.

"'The mouths of their rancid features opened like caverns, and sounds like the wailings of damned souls issued therefrom. They pranced around the stage with a motion that suggested a cross between the dance du ventre and the fox trot—strange creatures with painted faces and hideous mien.

"'Effie is spavined, Addie is stringhalt, and Jessie, the only one who shoed her stockings, has legs with calves as classic in their outlines as the curves of a broom handle.'"

The Cherry Sisters were enraged and brought suit against the Des Moines paper. They said their professional reputations had been injured to the extent of many thousands of dollars. But the Des Moines paper furnished evidence that proved to the satisfaction of the jury that the performance given by the company was not only childish, but ridiculous in the extreme.

The court held the publication did not exceed the bounds of fair comment.

A somewhat similar case in New York last year hinged on the poignant comment of Alan Dale, dramatic critic of the New York American, made following the performance of "The Little Poor Man" on Broadway.

The play was directed by an English Shakespearean actress, who also played a role in the production.

The paragraph in Dale's criticism to which the Shakespearean actress objected, read:

"There were at least 35 names on the program as members of the cast. That means that 70 nice fathers and mothers were responsible for it all."

Although her name was not mentioned in any way in the review, the actress brought suit for $50,000 against the New York American, claiming that the criticism implied that she was an amateur. Mr. Helm argued the case for the American and contended that while Dale undoubtedly meant to say that all the members of the play's cast acted like amateurs, he certainly did not say they were amateurs. It was held fair comment by the court.

Of course the most celebrated case of art criticism is the attack made by Ruskin against Whistler.

In about the year 1875, Sir John Ruskin, the greatest art critic of his day, wrote and published an article criticising pictures exhibited in the Grosvenor Gallery in England. Referring to a picture painted by Whistler, Ruskin wrote the following:

"Sir Coutts Lindsay ought not to have admitted works into the gallery in which the ill-educated conceit of the artist so nearly approached the aspect of wilful imposture. I have seen and heard much of cockney impudence before now, but never expected to hear a coxcomb ask 200 guineas for flinging a pot of paint in the public's face."

Whistler sued Ruskin for libel. The only words which were considered libellous in the foregoing passage were "wilful imposture."

Whistler recovered as damages the insignificant sum of 1 farthing and had to pay his own costs.

The National Financial News ceased publication with its issue of April 17. A. Newton Plummer, publisher, has retired to devote his time to other interests. The Magazine of Wall Street is reported as purchaser of his interests in the financial magazine.

HOW TO INCREASE EFFICIENCY IN THE LIBRARY

Combined Use of Index and Clippings Found to Be Best Method by Indianapolis News—Provides Permanent File of All Record Matter Complete Within 24 Hours of Last Edition

By CHARLES T. MOORE
Indianapolis News Library

IT is the aim of this article to show how index and clippings may be combined to preserve all the advantages of each with few of the vices of either and as an ultimate resultant a permanent alphabetical index to bound files, while the process constitutes at all times a current alphabetical index within 24 hours, or even less, of the next edition. Nothing of originality or novelty is claimed for this system, which has been in use in several progressive reference departments for a number of years, with modifications to suit the peculiar requirements of each. It is adaptable to any size plant by determining limits within which indexing shall be confined and, in the long run, especially when both current and enduring values are considered, is but little more expensive than other methods.

In primary form the index here considered consists of clippings filed in individual, lightweight, tough bond envelopes with square-cut ungummed flaps, the sizes 4″ x 6″ or (approximately) 5″ x 8″ having been found most practicable. Each envelope bears an appropriate subject heading, with sub-heading if desired; an outline (called "sub-entry"), of the nature of the story or article and the date, page and column numerals. If it is advisable to index under more than one subject this is done by means of cross reference cards of the same size as the envelopes.

Unless all editions are bound the "home edition," or that one which is supposed to pick up all essential matter of the preceding 24 hours, is used as the basis for the index and is the only one to which a permanent index will apply. If all editions are bound care should be taken to index important material in any which does not appear in the others and in such cases it will be necessary, in addition to the page and column numerals, to indicate the edition and, if the paper is printed in sections separately paged, the section in which the article is found.

The envelopes and cross-reference cards are filed in dictionary alphabet sequence and those having the same subject heading from day to day follow each other in chronological order and thus, where a particular phase of a story running for a considerable length of time is wanted, it may be selected quickly by means of the "sub-entry" without disturbing the others, while the whole series gives the story complete. The advantage of this method over the cumulative envelope system, containing all clippings on the same subject, which must be sorted over until the right one is found, is obvious. The time required to make the envelopes and insert the clippings will be little, if any longer, than making entries on cards or folio sheets—the usual methods of indexing bound files, since either of these requires search and "plucking" of cards or folios for the new entries. If indexing is begun as soon as the editions come from the pressroom the new day's entries can be completed and filed within a few hours.

Experience has shown that the active life of clippings, that is, the period during which they are most frequently called for is from three to five years. After this length of time it has been found that, in seven out of ten cases, all the information wanted is usually contained in the sub-entry. These considerations furnish a basis for revision of the index files and the discarding of clippings at suitable intervals, at once preserving the references to the bound files and reducing the accumulation in filing cabinets. The process, amounting to the "transfer" in commercial filing parlance, has been called "condensation."

It is patent that each of the envelopes and cross-cards constitutes an index entry to bound files as soon as the latter are completed. At the interval determined, say three years, the complete entry, heading, sub-heading, sub-entry, date, page and column numerals and edition symbols of each envelope and cross reference card within the period is type-copied in alphabetical, chronological sequence on sheets of suitable size which may be bound in book form or, if preferred, lightweight ("onion-skin") paper may be used and the pages folded to fit envelopes of the same size as the index envelopes but of a different color, which, with proper captions may be filed in their logical positions in the index file cabinet. After the references have been copied the clippings and envelopes are destroyed while cross cards may be canceled and used again on the reverse side. Where the "condensation" sheets are refiled in envelopes the process reduces bulk in the file drawers in the proportion of about 6 inches to ¼ inch.

Clippings from other sources may be filed along with the news index if desired, but their sources always should be plainly indicated on the envelope and, of course, they should never have been included in "condensation." When an index of this nature is once well established it will be found that fewer and fewer clippings from other papers or periodicals will be required. The experienced indexer has learned long ago that sooner or later his own paper handles most of the material to be derived from other columns. The condensation process affords opportunity, of course, for the deletion of any references that time has shown to be valueless.

In this system biographical sketches, especially those furnished by the syndicates and press associations are carried at the head of the file occupied by index clippings on the personages involved, giving a ready and continuous history including the most recent events which the prepared sketches, of course, cannot have. These sketches, of course, never are included in condensation. When any material is removed from the files for condensation this should be shown by an "out-card," giving the subject heading, the period covered by the removal and showing where the references may be found until the typing is completed and the sheets bound or returned to their places in the index file.

If it is desired to print the index this can be carried on almost simultaneously by placing thin cards or stiff paper with a carbon sheet in the envelopes as they are typed for the index. The use of cards or stiff paper makes insertion in the envelopes easier and quicker than lighter weight material. The copy thus made can be easily edited for the printer and a bound volume made as soon as enough material accumulates. This, indeed, is the end devoutly to be wished but one not likely to be undertaken by most newspapers because of the additional expense. It is true the New York Times helps to make ends meet in this direction by the sale of its published index, but this very fact helps to limit the market for other publishers since the published index of any good newspaper will be a "master-key to all newspapers" except for matters strictly local and provincial.

The stumbling block in many offices where indexing is attempted, whether by cards, folio or otherwise is the formation of subject headings. The effort usually is to adopt a fixed list according to what professional indexers know as subject classification. The trouble with this method is that many items do not fall naturally under any chosen heading and must be forced under such as most nearly appear to designate them. Also it is necessary for the user to be familiar with the scheme of classification in order readily to find the material for which he is searching.

One able worker (Gustav V. Lindner), has said: "It would be utterly purposeless to try to adhere to any strictly scientific classification of subjects . . . ordinary common sense is a much more satisfactory basis for newspaper indexing." However, the practice of certain elementary conventions recognized by expert indexers furnishes a method of choosing headings which not only allows sufficient latitude for widely varying data but also has a regularity of operation that is readily grasped by almost any one familiar with the use of the dictionary or encyclopedia.

Professional indexers regard their field as made up of four principal divisions: (1) Personal, names of persons; (2) Subjective, embracing all items of a subjective nature; (3) Titular, embracing titles of government departments or officials, of nobility, of books, works of art, etc., and (4) Geographical, names of countries, their political divisions, etc. In practice headings derived from any of these divisions may be used alone or, often to advantage in combination with one or more derived from another as sub-headings.

Thus, instead of being obliged to memorize several hundred or thousand subject-classifications among which only too often the exact one needed is not to be found, the indexer may form his own subject headings for the matter in hand with reasonable assurance of uniformity in the resulting web and pattern of the index as a whole and any one accustomed to the use of dictionaries or encyclopedias will be able to find his way about in it, in emergency, with little if any more difficulty than is now and then encountered in those labyrinths of learning. It is not meant to give the impression that indexing by this system is child's play. It means systematic, painstaking work.

The newspaper sense of the indexer will govern to a large extent in his selection of subject-headings in which he will try to express the idea which the item will most likely impress on the reader and which the latter will try to describe when it is wanted again. The use of sub-headings will be dictated by variations within the scope of the item, and whether a sufficient number of such variations occur under the main heading to warrant their distribution by this means as a help to quicker search. The sub-entry, that is the outline of the nature of the story, should be a brief and succinct as possible, with an outside limit of 25 words.

It is beyond the scope of such an article as this to go minutely into the construction of subject-headings. The principles governing the art and the conventions observed by indexers, including the treatment of prefix and suffix titles and designations such as "Dr.." "Col.," "Mrs.," "Jr.," "II," and of such racial and linguistic dingbats as "Ap," "de," "Mc-," "Mac-," "O'-," and "von" will be found discussed in any one of several manuals of indexing of which probably the best in anything like the compass is that of George E. Brown, F. I. C.

Once a heading is established in the files the indexer's memory will follow it almost automatically but if there is any doubt he should verify the exact form from previous entries, otherwise discrepancies will result disastrously in filing. Some indexers keep a memorandum list of all index entries on their desks. The making and care of this, however, is apt to consume about as much time and energy as is required to consult the index files.

A good ground work for establishing the limits of the index is for the managing editor, news editor, department heads and librarian each to mark several successive issues of the paper, say for a week, canceling such items as each thinks can be safely omitted. A round table discussion of reasons for canceling or allowing items to stand also will be helpful. It is assumed as a matter of course that no ordinary advertising, display, classified or reading notices will be indexed.

As a partial guide which experience has developed with regard to material which may be excluded from the index with comparative safety may be mentioned: All ephemeral and encyclopedic matter; advance stories of events to take place within a few days unless containing important distant future dates or valuable information not apt to be repeated; Churches, except actual events or discussions of denominational or congregational importance—no routine sermons or social affairs; Courts, except actual news stories—no docket routine or minutes; Fashions, except discussions in news or editorial columns—no syndicate material; Features, only legitimate features of special interest—no daily syndicate material; Financial and markets, only such items as have important bearing on stories in news columns; Departmental, such as City News Notes, State Brevities, etc., only items of prima facie importance; Industrial, only items of prima facie importance; Music and Art, only bona fide criticism of important offerings; Routine, no minutes of municipal boards or commissions, police courts, vital statistics, real estate transfers, etc.; Society, except actual events of unusual importance, club and lodge elections or participation in important municipal affairs; Sports, except actual events of championship importance and advance notices of distant important dates; Theaters, only bona fide reviews of recognized offerings, local interviews with important personages and the like.

This list, as already intimated, is not intended as a hard and fast schedule, but may be modified to suit the exigencies or requirements of any particular situation or occasion.

HEARST, STARTING AGAIN, WOULD CHOOSE NEWSPAPER WORK

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, in a letter to the Newspaper Club of New York, Inc., this week gave his opinion of newspaper work. He wrote in part:

"I am very happy myself to be a member of the club—happy to be a newspaper man and to be regarded as one, and to have the honor of association with other newspaper men.

"Newspaper work is the best line of work that I know of, and if I had my life to live over again, I would be a newspaper man and merely try to be a better one.

"I think it is a more important business and a more dignified business than we always realize."

TRAIL BLAZERS OF ADVERTISING

CHAPTER XLIV

Curtain

ONE day at a crowded luncheon in the old advertising club on East 25th street, I happened to find an empty seat at a table with a chap I had never seen before, haven't seen since; and do not even remember his name. But he was one of the old school of ad-men.

We fell to talking about the old scheme days in advertising. We had a lot in common. He had been a special edition man, a schemer, and knew all the tricks of the old game.

We were drawing comparisons between the old and new order of things, before advertising became analyzed, dissected and cut into bits by modern theorizing minds.

Today the scientific methods have destroyed the myths, miracles, mysteries and secrets of advertising. Hard facts, cold, merciless and dangerous figures have taken the place of beautiful, fanciful pictures painted with colorful words.

The G's of the old advertising game—gambling, guessing, gifts, gabble, gadding, gala, gamesters, gangs, gaudiness, gaiety, genius, glitter, graft, grandeur, guts and grit of go-getting guys—have been replaced by the modern and mechanical M's of business.

Perhaps you have heard of these fundamental M's, such as— methods, money, men, media, management, materials, machinery, merchandising and markets.

The old and the new. The old loose ways and the modern tight ways. Yet your old-time solicitor was more hard-boiled than the scientific salesman of today.

He possessed that rare quality of salesmanship known as strategy. When he ran out of ammunition and didn't want the enemy to know it, it was strategy to keep on firing. He never wanted for arguments, even when there were none. He used talk, not facts.

The first steps towards changing the old game were market and media investigations. I traveled across the long bridge of investigations from schemes and guess-work to practical facts and figures. All effort was directed toward digging up figures to prove certain theories were facts.

Every line of merchandise was given the searchlight treatment. Investigators were calling from door to door, from store to store; asking questions which were knocking certain theories into a cocked hat. Gangs of investigators invaded grocery and drug and hardware stores, barber and beauty shops, to get the facts on the goods they sold. What were the best sellers, and why did people buy them? What kind of advertising brought the most customers?

These questions were putting guesswork to rout, and knocking theories sky high.

The idea was to get down to bed rock. Like the prospecting miner, pan the gravel of advertising-dope to get the gold-data. Nothing was left to the imagination. In large cities where the people didn't believe bees made honey it was proven.

Hives of bees with glass fronts were put in grocery windows. The swarm of bees working on a comb in full view of everyone proved that honey was a product of bees. And these bees were alive too. I ought to know. One stung me when we were putting them in the windows.

There wasn't any scheme or guesswork about an exhibit of bees—it was a practical demonstration of the new trend in advertising. The way to make people believe was to give them the facts—or bees.

All at once everyone seemed to come from the state of Army Mules. It was that way with every idea in advertising. Plans were carefully gone over with a fine tooth comb to pick out any tricks or guessing spots.

States were chopped up into hunks, city markets were divided into sections and analyzed; rent-paying capacity was shown to determine buying power; data and information gathered was used to direct advertisers how to spend their money. Salesmanagers were told where, when and how to put in their hard licks; how to reach customers quickly without wasting time or money. Scientific methods and efficiency were dominant.

Everything along the line had to yield to this merciless system of analysis. It dug into populations, rents, buyers, nationalities, retail stores, ratings, newspaper circulations and the attitude of merchants towards advertised goods. In short, guesswork was so thoroughly eliminated that the theory that advertising pays became a hard fact.

The grasshopper solicitor ceased to hop. He had to change his easy flow of theoretical talk to words such as modern merchandising, charts, maps, lists, guaranteed distribution, proven circulation, analyzed markets.

There was no secret or mystery about advertising. It was out in the open.

The loud-talking space-salesman, with nothing to say but words, passed out of the picture. Either that or he had to change his vocabulary; playing with words that meant something and which could be backed up with maps, charts and figures.

With the coming of the analytical era passed out the schemes, tricks premiums and free gifts of the old days. It was no longer necessary to fool or trick people into buying. They didn't have to buy a rocking chair or a bowl of gold fish to get a can of baking powder or sack of flour.

Inferior goods could no longer be advertised in the same words as good merchandise. Wild-catters, loan sharks, patent medicine fakers, and all the old objectionable gamesters had played their last card.

Advertising men who had made a mystery out of advertising now became investigators, service and promotion men.

Instead of fooling retailers with free deals, schemes and cut prices, manufacturers started to obtain the good will and support of merchants. The catchword in trade circles was "co-operation," and the idea back of all advertising was to educate and render valuable assistance in selling goods.

But the old hardened, hunger-seasoned, experienced schemer had a good foundation for a quick training in the new merchandising methods.

The sunlight had been let in; and this bright light of publicity had rung down the curtain on the old colorful show.

CHAPTER XLV

Over the Bridge of Statistics

OUT of the clever schemes and exciting gambling games; out of costly guess-advertising of the past, has come a new profession, a dignified profession, founded on "Truth In Advertising."

This new profession is based not alone on the art and science of printed, pictured and painted salesmanship, but on the basis of winning the confidence of the public, and keeping it.

Today, advertising copy is built entirely around selling ideas—the kind of tested and proven ideas which catch the eye, hold the attention arouse the interest, and obtain immediate action.

Through the force and importance of TRUTH in present day advertising, consumer preference and acceptance of certain products and services had been created. The great factor of TRUTH has established the confidence of the public in advertising. Good will, valued at millions of dollars, product and service prestige of tremendous value, increase in volume of sales and greater profits in all markets have been brought about through the changing of advertising from a "game" to a profession.

Out of the chaos of wild schemes and turbulent ideas has come sane commonsense advertising and selling methods.

But trail blazing was necessary in advertising to reach the fertile fields and mountains of gold, just as the covered-wagon pioneers were required to open up the West to bring about our present great national prosperity.

As I have looked backward in writing the preceding chapters, and attempted to paint a picture of the schemes, ideas and events which have transformed the game of advertising into a profession, across the highway of my memory has moved the most colorful pageant of our times.

Men of the advertising world today who received their training in the Hard-Knock College of trail blazing experience are not old men by any means.

This great change in advertising has all taken place in the last 25 years, a period of amazing development in ideas and literature and art in advertising.

The men who have not learned to enjoy moments by living again in the past have not a well balanced capacity for looking forward to greater creations and inventions in advertising and selling.

Many of the old colorful schemes of the past have popped up in my memory through exchanging reminiscences with the other advertising men who have adventured and romanced along the great highways of publicity.

The past quarter of a century in advertising has been its most changeable and venturesome period. Big ideas have jumped into the limelight and just as quickly have died an ignoble death.

It is a period rich in picturesque history; there has been exciting and passionate shouting of headlines and pictures; comedy and tragedy in results; brilliant and glittering dreams of gold gone to smash; house-top shouting of bum wares that has died away into a whisper of shame. As memory pictured all those chapters of colorful romance and adventure in the old advertising game, out of the dim shadows has crept a history that will never be repeated—not in the great dignified profession of advertising.

Never again will we ride a bicycle and toss advertising hand-bills into front yards —never again will we carry a ladder and hammer for tacking Old Dr. Clark's Oil of Arnica signs on telegraph poles; never again will we see advertising that exploits fakes and false values, that pictures dudes and dandies in peg-top trousers and square shoulders, with shiny decorative buttons for $7.50.

No, the old scheme days have gone out of style just as the bicycle, the fancy suit, the foolish songs—"There'll Be a Hot Time," "After the Ball," "You Can't Slide Down My Cellar Door," "Down Went McGinty"—have gone the way of the browned page in memory's album.

Now we have such things as "Basic Facts," "Fundamental Principles," "Analysis of Markets and Products," "Visualization," "Common Acceptance," and hundreds of other such nailing-down factors, that the old game of taking chances on this or that has been crowded out in the cold.

We are familiar with such phrases as "Truth in Advertising," "Close Co-operation," which stand for present day ideals, ideals which will not permit false and misleading advertising to exist.

Hokum in business and hokum in advertising cannot stand the spot light glare of the great universal cry of "Truth In Advertising."

It is not only bad ethics, but also very bad business to try to get by on the fool-the-people basis. Truth in advertising is the policeman of the public.

Advertisers cannot exist as one-time sellers. It is regular customers, satisfied clients and permanent consistent campaigns based on truthful statements which make good business and continued business possible. Even good advertising will not sell a bad article twice.

With the injection of truth in advertising came better living conditions and a greater desire to buy more of the necessities and luxuries of life.

Truthful advertising alone is tolerated because advertising has become nationalized. The same ideas and truths are spread uniformly over our country. Truth in advertising is keeping business clean.

National advertising has become such a tremendous force for enlightenment and education that today fake schemes do not even flourish in out-of-the-way places. Business follows truth in the printed word.

There are no obscure spots on our map today, national advertising goes into the smallest as well as the largest newspapers spreading its light.

Advertising messages of national import emanate from the same source, the source of successful manufacturers whose business continues to grow because they have told the truth about their products and service.

Advertising has become a national force because Truth itself has been the basic element in this force. Without this important factor advertising would lose its hold on the national consciousness over night.

The reason it pays any national advertiser to place his message in thousands of newspapers and tell his story to millions of people at one time everywhere is because these millions are ready to believe that message.

Years and years of trail blazing in advertising has resulted in all that is unsound and unworthy being cast out.

In the language of the street the Old Advertising Game is both "down and out," existing only in the fading pages of memory's scrapbook.

The intrinsic merit of The Detroit News as a good home newspaper which any member of the family may read, has achieved for it the greatest circulation yet known in Michigan journalism. Leading in circulation constantly for years, The Detroit News has kept pace with the ever increasing growth of the city, proving that not only is The News the preferred medium of the older and more settled sections of Detroit's population, but that it is also the newspaper selected for home reading by every new accretion of population. The thorough coverage of the Detroit field which has won for The News the advertising leadership of America again and again, has thus been maintained for more than half a century. Detroit is therefore more than ever a one paper city thoroughly covered by The Detroit News. In fact, no other city of Detroit's size or larger is so thoroughly covered by one newspaper as Detroit is by The News.

Greatest Increase Week Days or Sundays, of Any Detroit Paper During the Six Months Ending March 31, Compared With the Same Six Months of a Year Ago

Not only did The Detroit News attain the greatest circulation hitherto known in Michigan, but it performed a unique and difficult achievement for a newspaper already leading greatly in circulation by showing the greatest increases week days or Sundays of all Detroit newspapers. During the six months ending March 31, it increased 36,124 in Sunday circulation, and 24,407 in weekday circulation.

Increases Also In Advertising

During 1925 The Detroit News led all other large metropolitan newspapers in advertising, repeating its achievement of 1924. During the first three months of 1926, however, The News surpassed even this great mark with an increase of 673,078 lines over the same period of a year ago.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

"Better and Better"

To Editor & Publisher:—So deep is our appreciation of what your publication means to the newspaper publisher, especially in the preparation of data for his information and guidance, we cannot refrain from writing to you an unsolicited letter of commendation.

Regardless of how small a daily one may be publishing, it appears to us that Editor & Publisher would be indispensable.

Just so long as you continue to make your paper as interesting and helpful as it is today, you may count on the News-Democrat being a regular subscriber, and let us say here that it gets better and better all the time.

Again assuring you of our appreciation of your publication, we are

Yours very truly,

Public Relations Course Explained

To Editor & Publisher: I am certain it was through no intention on your part, but the headlines over your story about our course in Public Relations almost completely misrepresented the course. It is not a course in "press agentry" at all.

It is really a broad study of the relations between business and the public, and has, in large part, nothing whatever to do with newspaper publicity. It deals at length with the basic business policies that make for good public relations and the importance of such policies, the proper training and handling of employees for the promotion of good will, and other such subjects.

And when it does touch on newspaper publicity, nothing is made clearer than that anything like space grabbing—which is what you and I and all newspaper people mean by press agentry—is the very opposite of good public relations work.

There is in Chicago a large public service corporation from which just a few years ago it was practically impossible for a reporter to get any essential information, and which now employs a capable man to see that every reporter gets all the information he wants. This man has never asked a newspaper to print anything. He has only supplied what the editors or reporters wanted, or what from his experience he believed they would want, if they knew of it. And far from supplying only "favorable" information—which is the expression you use in the second deck of your head, the quotes being yours, and by which I take it you mean some sort of biased or incorrect information—he recognizes that that would smash all his usefulness to any one. He helps the papers to get whatever they want to know about the business: those are his instructions.

I have never heard any newspaper man object to his services. His work, as I see it, is the real thing in public relations work, so far as such work has to do with publicity. And this is the only sort of publicity that we teach.

I believe you will be glad to have these facts and to give them to your readers.

Copy Writing Service

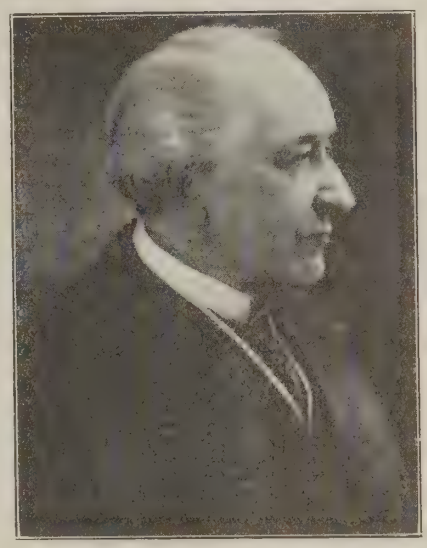
To Editor & Publisher: You hit the nail on the head in an editorial which apeared on April 3, entitled "Business Copy Writers," in which the need for supplying the local merchant with copy service is pointed out.

The writer, a display man of several years' standing, has always deplored the fact that the majority of publishers do not realize the value of an advertising solicitor who has a good knowledge of advertising and the ability to write good copy. Too many publishers employ high-pressure salesmen who go around with a club, selling space instead of selling the merchants increased business by the proper handling of their advertising.

A good knowledge of advertising, and an ability, born of love for the work, for creating really effective copy are prized possessions of the writer. Time and again this knowledge and ability, pitted against hard-hitting salesman tactics, has proved its superiority in many ways.

Show an advertiser you can get him more business and you win his confidence. Give him ideas that you know have been successful elsewhere and you have his whole-hearted support. Show him that you are as anxious for him to get results as he is himself and he will consult with you and even seek your advice.

In the writer's experience of furnishing advertising service to merchants he has often been taken into the confidence of men who had never been known to talk about their business to other members of the staff and were generally regarded as hard-to-get-at accounts. It is wonderful how much easier it is to obtain advertising if the solicitor ceases to sell space and offers the advertiser something that smacks of a live business proposition.



In the writer's experience of furnishing advertisment each solicitor should be equipped with a good knowledge of advertising and the ability to write copy. Salesmanship is secondary, because a man having such knowledge and ability would have the arguments at hand necessary to put over his proposition and, once the confidence of the advertiser is won, the rest is comparatively easy.

It is the writer's opinion that copy service should not be paid for but be part and parcel of the service rendered by the newspaper. Increased revenue will soon pay for the additional outlay occasioned by the hiring of more competent help, and show a substantial profit, too.

Until copy service is rendered by all newspapers, millions of dollars will continue to be wasted by merchants in foolish advertising, and many more millions will still remain unspent by merchants who do not know how to advertise, and therefore don't. HAROLD NUTTALL,
New Rochelle (N. Y.) Standard Star.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Maj. E. B. Stahlman

IN the last months of the Civil War there came from the mountains of West Virginia, a lame, slim stripling of a boy, seeking work to aid a widowed mother.

Near Gallatin, Tenn., Morgan's raiders had swept down and left behind a wrecked railroad tunnel.

Carrying cross ties was the job he got there, a heavy burden for a boy.

From a private car Albert Fink, general manager of the road, called to him, "You are too small to do this work, boy."

"I was hired to do a man's work and I will," said the boy and he went on.

The boy was Edward Bushrod Stahlman.

There was the perfect setting for one of those stories that so seldom come true.

Could Albert Fink have looked ahead through the years he would have seen this slim boy vice-president of the road for which he began at carrying cross ties.

Today Middle Tennessee bears the imprint of his character and his hands. In the biulding of that rich section of the state no man had more to do than he.

It was significant that he began improvement. His first work was that of repair.

He developed the resources of the state. He introduced coal for domestic consumption. The people's fight was and is his.

His climb to vice-president of the road was spectacular. He could have gone on and on in that field, but he left it to better serve his state.

For more than 30 years, Maj. Stahlman's paper, the Nashville Banner, has waged a constant fight for right.

His paper recently brought about a great state-wide "Know Tennessee" contest.

The state was just beginning when the slim, lame boy was hired to do a man's work. Today he is a distinguished figure. His snowy white hair, his face, wherein the fingers of time have written the story of effort crowned with success not without sacrifice, is known to thousands. A great building bears his name, but his efforts for his state are greater monuments.

The Greatest Quantity of Quality

The average net paid daily and Sunday circulation of The New York Times as reported to the Post Office Department for the six months ended March 31, 1926, was 392,695 copies. This total is a gain of 10,690 over the average of 382,005 for the six months ended September 30, 1925.

The New York Times appeals to intelligent, thinking persons. The accuracy, the completeness and the value of its news have established The Times as the preferred newspaper of the highest quality of readers of New York City, and have given it unmatched local and national prestige. In quantity plus character of circulation The Times is first among newspapers.

The Times is newspaper leader in the greatest market in the world. In the volume and high character of advertising The Times is unrivaled.

In 1925 The Times published 28,200,444 agate lines of advertising, a new high record, a gain of 1,916,520 lines over the total of 1924, and an excess of 10,963,382 lines over the second New York newspaper.

In three months of this year The New York Times published 7,481,592 agate lines of advertising, a gain of 776,330 over the volume of the corresponding period of 1925, and an excess over the second New York newspaper of 2,829,046 lines.

Next to the number and the quality of its readers, the censorship exercised by The New York Times over the advertising submitted for its columns has contributed to its leadership. The Times declines more advertising than any other newspaper; The Times protects its readers and honest advertisers by this careful censorship, and the confidence thus established is a powerful advertising asset.

IGNORANCE, CARELESSNESS, SHYSTER LAWYERS CHIEF LIBEL FACTORS

News Ban on Troublesome Attorneys Suggested by Bristol Publisher—Discusses Phases of Libelous Publication

By C. J. HARKRADER

Vice-President, Bristol (Va.-Tenn.) Herald-Courier and News-Bulletin.

I WANT to thank EDITOR & PUBLISHER for Philip Schuyler's articles on the subject of libel.

Three factors are responsible for nearly all the libel suits against newspapers. They are: first, ignorance of laws of libel on the part of editors and reporters; second, the element of carelessness; and the third, and probably the most prolific cause, cheap-skate lawyers.

Dissemination of information such as is contained in Schuyler's articles will help the situation by causing editors to exercise more care and to handle their news with a knowledge of what constitutes libel and what to do in event they print a libel. It may also cause them to be more careful by stressing the danger and peril of libel suits. It is hard to get at the third cause—the shyster lawyer. In many towns and cities there are one or two lawyers who habitually stir up libel litigation. My observation is that except in rare cases a high class practitioner will not recommend a libel action. When victims of libels go to the average lawyer of standing the latter, as a rule, seeks a retraction and when it is fully and freely given and where the publication was not inspired by actual malice, the case ends.

My idea is that the shyster lawyer given to bringing libel suits without real merit should be barred from the newspaper columns. His name should never appear in the newspaper's column in any complimentary way or in any other way that can possibly be avoided. It is not necessary to broadcast your motive but simply have his name omitted. I know an editor who put this ban on a troublesome lawyer. I was in his office when the city editor brought in a list of pall bearers in which the lawyer's name appeared. The editor hesitated a moment and then gave instructions that the entire list be omitted. The offending lawyer will soon discern the reason and if it does not work a change of heart with him it will be a deterrent to others. A person who stirred up litigation and profited in the fruits was guilty at common law of the offense of champerty and was punished for his crime.

Ninety-five per cent of those who bring libel suits are really not seeking vindication but merely see a chance for a little easy money by mulcting the newspaper in damages. Those who suffer most by libel almost never bring a suit but are content with retraction. I cite a case in point. Many newspapers last December published a wire story sent out from Morgantown, W. Va., to the effect that Homer Rodeheaver, the Billy Sunday singer, was in jail there for causing the death of a boy by giving him poison whiskey. It was one of the worst possible libels. It had no foundation in fact. No person could be more damaged by such a story than a man in Rodeheaver's position who had attained fame and fortune by purporting to live a life free from such conduct. On the other hand no two men in the country have received more free publicity than Rodeheaver and Sunday. Rodeheaver was undoubtedly damaged by having such a story broadcast from one end of the country to the other but he never thought of libel suits. He could have recovered damage and probably substantial damage, from every newspaper that printed it. The libelous story was as follows:

"Morgantown, W. Va., Dec. 21.—Homer Rodeheaver, former member of the party of Evangelist "Billy" Sunday, and Joe Lawson were placed in jail here tonight by Morgantown officers, charged with causing the death of Andrew Matthews, aged 22, by giving him poisonous liquor.

"It is stated that Matthews and a companion helped Rodeheaver and Lawson to get their stalled car out of a mudhole, and on leaving Rodeheaver gave the man some liquor for helping him. Complete details regarding Matthews' death are not known tonight, but shortly after he drank the liquor he became ill and died in a short time. Whether his companion drank any of the liquor is not known.

"Rodeheaver is one of the country's well known singers and for some time was a member of the "Billy" Sunday party. He was also in the Sunday band, playing the trombone."

Now the surprise is that this story ever got started because every news editor knows that Billy Sunday does not have a band and that Homer Rodeheaver does not play in a band. I do not claim any superior judgment but I stamped the story as a fake when I saw it. In my judgment it would have done Rodeheaver infinitely more damage to have sued the newspapers than any damage sustained by the false publication. Yet in the case of a man known from coast to coast he is no doubt injured in the minds of many people who will never know the story was false.

The element of malice enters largely into libel suits and must be shown to obtain vindictive damages. In a libel suit the plaintiff almost invariably asks for actual damages and then an equal sum as exemplary damages, the latter formerly known to the English common law as "smart money" and intended to punish the offender. Unless changed by statute, every false, or defamatory publication implies legal malice. Legal malice is not actual malice but in most states the court instructs the jury in such cases that malice is to be inferred from the publication. Only the truth of the publication can be plead in bar of recovery. It is a perfect defense but is a hazardous one if not made out. Retraction, absence of real malice, care shown by the newspaper in making inquiry before publication and other factors in favor of the defendant may be put in evidence in mitigation of damages but not in bar of the recovery. In most states, unless the common law is changed by statute, the plaintiff starts with a prima facie case. The chicken-thief is clothed by law with the presumption of innocence and this mantle clings to him until he is convicted by a court of last resort. Not so with the editor. Legal malice is presumed from a false or defamatory publication or one unjustly imputing crime.

Confessions of persons accused of crime, especially when given through detectives, should be received with great caution by newspapers. They are often loaded with dynamite. Any story imputing crime or calculated to hold another up to ridicule or contempt, should be scrutinized. Better be safe than sorry. Libel suits are expensive and a reflection upon the profession.

Editors should inform themselves and inform their reporters on the laws of libel. In some states even a police court blotter, when correctly reported, is no protection to a newspaper if it develops that a mistake has been made by the Justice or his clerk. This is not true in courts of record. The word "alleged" is really an aggravation of a libel instead of a defense or even mitigation. It indicates that the newspaper did not even consider the rights of the subject enough to investigate. "It is stated" and "reported" are in the same category. If the "report" is untrue and damage results, the newspaper is liable.

Special statutes to mitigate the rigid common law of libel have been adopted in some states and in some states they have been declared unconstitutional and void. Where we have freedom of the press we must have responsibility for the wrongful exercise of this privilege. The disposition of juries has been, in the main, toward fairness and justice to the news papers. They are disposed to deal lightly where care has been exercised beforehand and where everything possible has been done to make amends. The special libel statutes sought by newspapers in nearly every state and already obtained in some states, may help some but these statutes can only deal with the element of exemplary damages or "smart money." I doubt if any statute that takes away from the citizen or in any way restricts or clogs his right to recover actual damages growing out of a false, defamatory and libelous publication is constitutional or based upon elementary justice.

William F. Rogers

WILLIAM F. ROGERS, advertising manager of the Boston Transcript, doesn't talk much about himself. One must have followed him and his career with the Transcript over 25 years to know what has occupied him. He has seen the volume of advertising carried by his newspaper doubled and the rates more than trebled, without methods which would not conform to the Transcript's conservative standards.

He has been chairman of the committee in charge of the Bureau of Advertising for many years and the bureau has been entirely reorganized and expanded under his direction. He was president of the Advertising Club of Boston for some years and led its delegation to London in 1924. Another presidency which fell to him for two terms was that of the Sales Managers Club of Boston.

In less serious field's he has led and been the moving spirit in the Appalachian Mountain Club, which has a membership of more than 4,000 with headquarters in Boston and a magnificent clubhouse on Beacon Hill.

And, in the hours he spent at home, he has been for several years Moderator of the town of South Braintree, executing the duties which usually are the Mayor's in larger communities.

His only business connection prior to that with the Transcript made a quarter century ago, was service for two years with the Youth's Companion.

GENESIS OF DAVENPORT'S ROOSEVELT CARTOON RECALLED BY DAVIS

Artist, Working for New York Evening Mail, Spent Day with "T. R."—Then Originated Famous Slogan: "He's Good Enough For Me."

ROBERT H. DAVIS, member of the Munsey Company executive board, writing in his column in the New York Sun, April 6, recalled the genesis of Homer Davenport's most celebrated cartoon. The cartoon, showing Uncle Sam standing behind Theodore Roosevelt, his left hand resting affectionately on the latter's shoulder, has been acknowledged the greatest vote-making picture in American political history.

It was captioned simply: "He's Good Enough for Me." Mr. Davis told the story as follows:

"During the two McKinley administrations there appeared in the Hearst newspapers a series of cartoons showing Mark Hanna wearing an ill-fitting suit upon which the dollar mark served as the sole pattern. The President was presented as a little boy toddling along in the wake of the money power, otherwise The Trusts. Homer Davenport of Silvertown, Oregon, was the artist who first fitted the great Ohio dictator with the symbol of the $ $ $ $.

"After the assassination of McKinley in Buffalo, Theodore Roosevelt, Vice-President, became the President, finished out the term and was nominated by the Republican party to succeed himself. Davenport in the meantime having renounced his Democratic allegiance, was invited to join the staff of the Evening Mail a few months prior to the election in 1904. I happened to be the intermediary through whom the overtures were made. The whole transaction consumed not more than twenty-four hours. Still in my possession is the agreement upon which Davenport took up his pen for Roosevelt and his policies. Here it is, terms and all:

"THE MAIL AND EXPRESS.
NEW YORK.

June 28, 1904.

Homer Davenport, Esq.,
Morris Plains, New Jersey.

Dear Sir: Agreeable to our conversation of to-day I hereby accept your proposition to draw cartoons for the Evening Mail exclusively until January 1st, 1905, for the sum of $25,000 (Twenty-five Thousand), payable as follows:

$5,000 payable July 1, 1904.
$5,000 payable July 15, 1904.

The remainder by November 1st, 1904, and in installments at your pleasure.

It is also agreed that the originals of said cartoons shall be regarded as your property and delivered to you on your request. Very truly yours,

(Signed) HENRY L. STODDARD,
Pres. Mail and Express Co.

Witness: ROBERT H. DAVIS.

(Signed) HOMER DAVENPORT.

"Within a few days after this alliance was made Davenport called on the Rough Rider, who had on numberless occasions felt the sharp prick of the cartoonist. That meeting, the details of which were arranged by William Loeb, Jr., secretary to the President, was held at Oyster Bay.

"'Davenport,'" snapped T. R., 'you have thrown a great many snowballs at me with rocks in them. I didn't duck them all but it was a fair fight and I have no criticism. Is it really a fact that you have cut loose from the Democratic party?'

"'Well in my home town up Oregon way I'm pledged to stand by some of the boys,' answered Davenport, sharpening a lead pencil through force of habit. 'However, I am of the opinion and have been for some time, that you are the man who should be the next President of the United States. I'm for you. That's as far as I am willing to go at present.'

"'We'll go together,' was Roosevelt's retort. 'How are you with an ax? Loeb and I are getting into condition for the approaching campaign. We do a good deal of wood chopping these days.'

"'I'm better with a hammer,' said Davenport.

"'We're not building anything this afternoon' said T. R., carrying out the analogy. 'Something is coming down. It's bully exercise.'

"Davenport soon found himself swinging an ax in the forest adjacent to Sagamore Hill. He and the Rough Rider felled a dead chestnut tree and stripped its limbs, after which they took to the cool waters of Oyster Bay, ran a foot race, boxed a few rounds, walked five miles and dressed for dinner. It was a union of kindred souls, at which Roosevelt revealed all his plans for the approaching battle of the ballots. Secretary Loeb said afterward that he had never been present at a meeting where T. R. had so completely discarded the speech of diplomacy and thrown the cards on the table with a comparative stranger, who had in the past been an avowed and powerful enemy.

"'He's the most convincing man I ever met,' Davenport told Loeb as they were driving to the depot that night. 'I never saw such sincerity and energy. He knocked me off my feet with his Americanism. No man can talk with him and not be impressed. I don't see how any other man can beat him. I've been racking my brains all afternoon trying to get an idea for an opening cartoon. I want to put one out that will go with a bang. What is needed is a cartoon that speaks for the nation, a cartoon with a short caption that will fit the American tongue. Say, I wish he would talk to the people as he talked to me—'

"'He will and the people will listen,' interpolated Loeb, adding with the precaution of an old campaigner, 'but like all independent self-reliant men, he has a full set of enemies. Don't forget that.'

"'Enemies? Of course. But so far as I am concerned he's good enough for me.'

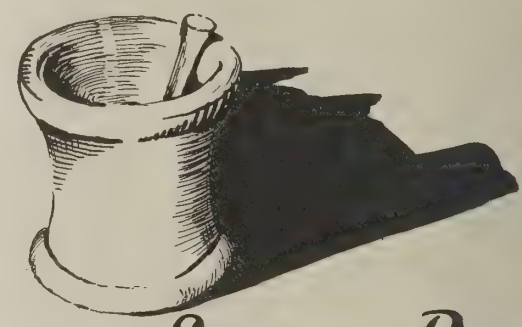
"With that observation Davenport lapsed into silence. Presently he spoke again: 'He's good enough for me. That's it! I've got the idea for my cartoon. I'll do one tonight as soon as I get back to New York.'

"The whistle echoed in the distance. Davenport, somewhat excited, tumbled out of the carriage, shouting to Loeb as he climbed aboard the train: 'Watch the Evening Mail this week. I've got it!'

"He arrived back in New York at midnight and immediately went to work. The following day there appeared on the front page what has since come to be acknowledged as the greatest vote-making cartoon in all America's political history. It showed a full length picture of Uncle Sam standing behind Roosevelt and with his left hand resting affectionately on the shoulder of the President. It required nothing of one's imagination.

"Over the picture was the significant phrase:

"'HE'S GOOD ENOUGH FOR ME.'



"That was the single clamorous line that appealed to all of the people, the slogan that Davenport flung broadcast across the States like a whirling cyclone.

"The original of that cartoon now hangs in the old home on East Twentieth street where the President was born. It is one of the treasured possessions of Roosevelt House and was presented by Henry L. Stoddard, former owner and editor of the Evening Mail. With it is a letter from Mr. Stoddard authenticating its originality."

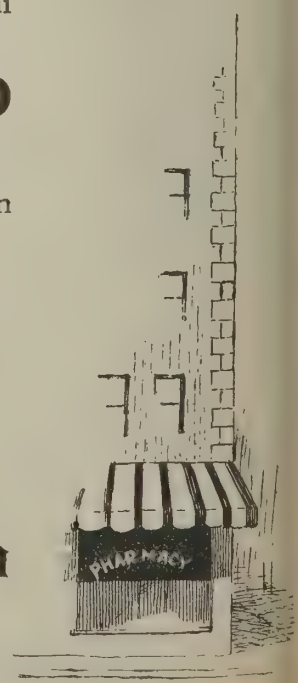
Canny Space Buyers

Local druggists are usually first-rate buyers of advertising space.

In the rapidly expanding Miami market, their preference is—



THE MIAMI HERALD

—by a wide margin.

For 1925, comparison of lineage in this classification shows:

THE MIAMI HERALD: 36,428 Lines
Second Paper: - - - - 27,923 Lines

And the marked preference of the local druggist for the Herald applies to virtually all classifications, and to the national as well as the local advertisers.

Are Agencies Developing Their Space Buying Departments?

Have advertising agencies in general given the same relative thought to improving their space buying departments as they have to their research, copy and other departments?

Are directories, circulation figures, linage and rates the alpha and omega of space buying?

True enough, the newspaper publisher visits the buyer. The special representative travels his cities and in turn visits the buyer.

But how many agency space buyers ever visit the cities and personally get local experiences with competitive newspapers?

One man cannot cover the United States but he can lay out a definite program of travel for himself each year.

An agency can very well afford to maintain a well paid space buying department with a definite policy of personal field work and travel year after year.

For newspaper advertising, actually selling more merchandise than any other type of printed advertising, is a sales force worthy of one's most intelligent study.

DAILY CATERS TO YOUTHFUL READERS BY PRINTING LIVE HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

Students Collect Items Regularly for Greensburg (Pa.) Tribune's Bi-Weekly Department— First Page Copy Sometimes Crops Up in Their Tips

By ERROL DERBY
City Editor, Greenburg (Pa.) Daily Tribune

FOR a long time editors have been attempting to cater, and quite successfully, too, to the youthful reader interest which is absolutely necessary if future readers are to be made.

Probably no greater example of the insight into future reader interest was ever given than in that memorable article which answered the question "Is there a Santa Claus?" which made the name of the New York Sun famous, as well as its editor. That article, I venture to say, is reprinted every Christmas season in the majority of the newspapers of the country.

We specialize at Christmas time, at Commencement time, and on a few occasions in the year with news material which is particularly appealing to the youthful reader. We concentrate their attention on our papers by contests of one kind or another, giving the youth something to do, and something to gain as the result of achievement.

But for more than the time being do we attract them to our columns? Do we present for them material which is and of themselves? In other words do we give them their department just as we provide sports for men and society for women and a few for the entire family, perhaps?

A few papers have seen and met this demand. For others there is an opportunity which is being passed by but for the seeking.

Can we expect young people to be attracted to our papers for the sake of comics we print or the one or two features we may run for their benefit?

The age which must be educated to the reading of our newspapers is the high school. There, ideas begin to form and expression to materialize. If there is competition in the newspaper field the younger folks want that paper which appeals to them and has something in it which is for them particularly. The persuasive manner whereby young folks seemingly get their way can be reflected in our own field just as in every other.

The high school news department, which, I believe, is as inexpensive as any feature a paper can provide, almost runs itself. How would you, Mr. Editor, like to have a staff of six or a dozen, or even more, reporters working gratis—and liking it?

May I be specific? We run a department called "High School News" twice a week. Contributing to the columns which are given over to the work are at least a dozen or 15 high school students, under the supervision of floor reporters. One of our younger reporters, who himself is in high school, acts as the monitor of the news; collects it from the school reporters and puts it into shape for the city editor's hands, for such copy, we feel, must be handled carefully.

Headed and arranged it goes to the machines in a short time and is soon in type. Displayed it IS read by the students because it is ABOUT the students.

School co-operation for such enterprises, except in the very rare case, is exceptionally easy to acquire. Once shown the value, school authorities co-operate. I have found English teachers willing to sacrifice a little of the classroom time to have the news items written; principals to suggest stories, and in our high school here in Greensburg we have a Journalistic Club of some 40 students organized and functioning, under the direction, not of the newspaper, but of the school authorities. The club has its officers, its floor reporters, its room reporters and just students who gather up items concerning themselves, their clubs, activities, alumni, and other matters of general interest; their little social affairs, class doings, affairs of teachers; interclass sports and other activities and in fact the general run of news. Wherein care must be exercised is in the use of personals. There are impractical jokers of high school age as well as older. The "puppy love" wisecracks cannot be safely handled.

The size of the school news department can only be measured by the size of the city in which the newspaper is located. For instance in direct contrast to ours, a splendid news co-operation and department of which I know, is that conducted by the Pittsburgh Chronicle and Telegraph. Several columns are devoted each week to the presenting of notes : news of the several high schools in that city. The field there is so large that it is a regular assignment and a newspaper department all its own.

In our own case we have begun to branch out. Every once in a while we have had news collected in some hig school in our territory and have run it as a special feature. In time this may also work up to a weekly or bi-weekly feature. An announcement of the coming news a day or two previously stirs up student interest in those communities and they watch for the appearance of the paper. This is an aid to territory.

There are several other benefits to be derived from the high school reporters' activity besides the mere conducting of the department. As they appeal to me they include:

1—The inception of the "journalistic germ," possibly, in one or two students who will provide future reportorial material on the city staff.

2—More names in the paper, and when metropolitan newspapers can again see the advisability of printing names, the smaller dailies have no need to fear that they shouldn't use more of them.

3—The youthful interest incites adult interest and a two-fold purpose is accomplished.

4—The occasional early "inside" tip to a corking good page one story. Again may I illustrate?

One of our school reporters during the past winter called one morning and said:

"There are 272 students out of school today sick."

"What cause?"

"Grippe and colds."

"Are you sure of the number?"

"Yes."

That was a "tip" which developed into the worst "scare" story since the influenza epidemic of 1918. The disease was, not grippe but a mild form of "flu," doctors said when questioned.

The student reporter was also correct in his number of pupils ill, and they kept becoming ill for several days in large numbers. Incidentally the malady spread to the city and thousands were infected. It was a page one story which ran for several weeks, off and on, after the first rush.

This, of course, may be an unusual illustration, but is true, nevertheless.

Cartoonist's Father Dies

Judge Fontaine Talbott Fox, 90, veteran member of the Kentucky bar and father of Fontaine Fox, the cartoonist, died at his home, Louisville, Ky., last Friday. Judge Fox had been in declining health for two years following a fall in January, 1924. Judge Fox was a Civil War veteran holding the rank of Major in the Confederate Army. He was a native of Pulaski county, was educated at Centre College and practiced law for a time at Elizabethtown, Ky. Coming to Louisville Judge Fox was a contributing editor for the Courier-Journal under the regime of Col. Henry Watterson. He also wrote book reviews.

Henry J. Allen

HENRY J. ALLEN, editor-in-chief and publisher of the Wichita Beacon, formerly governor of Kansas, will adopt a new role in October when he leaves for an eight-months' tour of the world as faculty member and historian of the "Ryndam," which is to be known as the "University Afloat."

This project is sponsored directly by the University Travel Association of New York and by about 25 of the larger universities of the country indirectly. A. J. MacIntosh is president and manager of the tour. About 450 students will be accommodated, and the itinerary will include 30 foreign countries.

Dr. Charles F. Thwing is president of the faculty and among the other members of the faculty are: Dean George E. Howes of Williams College; Dean Albert K. Heckel, University of Missouri; Dr. Wallace W. Atwood, president, Clark University; Prof. Charles H. Whitman, Rutgers University; Prof. Jos. E. Woodman, New York University; Prof. C. P. Patterson, University of Texas and Prof. Thos. K. Urdhal, Swarthmore College. In addition there will be representative men from the Universities of Heidelberg, Leipsic, Vienna, Turin in Europe and universities of Alabama, Arizona, Colorado, George Washington, LaFayette, South Dakota, Virginia, Harvard, Washington, Indiana, Michigan, California, in this country.

Mr. Allen will be dean of the department of journalism and will edit a daily newspaper on board the general news for which will be furnished by radio. He will also write a book about the tour telling of the experiences and purposes of the project. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Allen and daughter Henrietta.

He is looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to this trip, believing that it will furnish stimulating and educational contacts, with the students and with the countries visited. He is especially interested in the purpose of the enterprise to bring about better international relationships and an interchange of points of view among students all over the world.

Canadian Dailies Meeting April 29

Immediately after the Canadian Press completes its annual meeting on April 28, directors of the Canadian Daily Newspapers Association will go into session preliminary to the holding of the annual meeting of that organization on April 29. Two business sessions will be held and the program will be rounded out with a banquet in the evening. Arrangements for speakers have not yet been completed. The meeting is scheduled to take place in the King Edward Hotel, Toronto.

Buy Leadership

For years advertising of The Chicago Tribune Newspapers Syndicate has urged publishers to "Buy Leadership." This is no idle slogan coined for the purpose of building sales but the actual result of the use of sound and original features. Undoubtedly the biggest single factor in the remarkable growth of The Chicago Tribune and The News, New York's Picture Newspaper, has been the exclusive use of all the features sold by The Chicago Tribune Newspapers Syndicate. Note the positions of these two newspapers in the publishing field. The Chicago Tribune and The News of New York now have the largest daily circulations in America, morning or evening.

The features responsible for this are the best balanced, most carefully selected and intelligently edited group in the world. Please note the accompanying list of features now being used by The Tribune and The New York News, and write or wire for proofs and further information on them.

NEWSPAPER MEN PLAN PAGE MEMORIAL

Establishment of Two Fellowships to Permit British Journalists to Study in U. S. Sought—American Committee Named

A project to bring to the United States two British newspaper men annually for a stay of six months or a year was announced April 15 at a luncheon given in New York to Sir Campbell Stuart, London Times, by Julian S. Mason, managing editor of the New York Herald Tribune, in co-operation with the English Speaking Union. Mr. Mason is chairman of a committee of American newspaper men, assisting in financing the fellowships.

The plan provides for the establishment of two fellowships to be known as the Walter Hines Page Memorial Fellowships in Journalism. They are established to commemorate the services of the late Ambassador Page, himself one of the most distinguished members of the journalistic profession, in cementing the friendly relationship between the United States and Great Britain.

The first fellowship provides for a young English newspaperman who will spend a year in different newspaper offices throughout the United States. He will then return to resume his work on the newspaper with which he was originally associated on the other side of the Atlantic. It is expected that the first Englishman to hold his junior fellowship will arrive in New York about the end of May.

A senior fellowship provides for the coming of an older journalist of established position in the United Kingdom. It is hoped that this fellowship will be taken by a leading British writer, who may come over at the time of the national congressional elections in the fall.

Sir Campbell Stuart read at the luncheon the following letter from Lord Burnham, the chairman of the British Selection Committee, whose duty is to select the fellowship holders:

"I am very glad to hear that you are meeting the Committee of American newspaper men and those who are so generously financing the Page Memorial Journalistic Fellowships. It is a real pleasure to me to be associated with the project on this side, and our two peoples cannot fail to gain in knowledge and understanding from the contacts which the holders of the fellowships will make during their year in the United States.

"Our Committee on this side were deeply impressed with the far-reaching advantages that may be brought about in better understanding and mutual appreciation by this fine memorial to one of the best and most affectionate interpreters that the American and British peoples ever had between one another."

The other members of the British Committee are:

Sir Campbell Stuart, vice-chairman; Hon. J. J. Astor, M. P., R. D. Blumenfeld, Sir Robert Bruce, H. T. Cadbury, Sir Robert Donald, J. L. Garvin, Lord Riddell, Evelyn Wrench, C. M. G., and Alfred E. Johns, honorary secretary.

At the luncheon Sir Campbell Stuart expressed the gratification of himself and his colleagues that so large a body of American newspaper men had identified themselves with this project, a project which, he said, was as practical a contribution to Anglo-American understanding as had yet been put into being. Sir Campbell said that the Page fellowships were another evidence of the real service being performed from day to day by the English-Speaking Union. He recalled his first meeting with Harry J. Fisher, who with John W. Davis, George Wickersham, Otto Kahn, Langdon P. Marvin, A. N. Marquis, Charles C. Goodrich, and John Daniels put the scheme into effect.

The American Newspaper Committee on the Page Memorial Fellowships is made up as follows:

Harry J. Fisher, The English-Speaking Union; Melville E. Stone, Associated Press; William Allen White, Emporia (Kan.) Gazette; John H. Finley, New York Times; James Melvin Lee, New York University; John Stuart Bryan, Richmond (Va.) Times; George Harvey, former ambassador to Great Britain; Irvin Kirkwood, Kansas City Star; Charles H. Dennis, Chicago Daily News; Herbert S. Houston, Cosmos Newspaper Syndicate; Herbert Bayard Swope, New York World; Edward H. Butler, Buffalo News; Will H. Cowles, Spokane Spokesman Review; Jay N. Darling, New York Herald Tribune; Erie C. Hopwood, Cleveland Plain Dealer; James M. Thompson, New Orleans Item; Karl Bickel, United Press; Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr.; Bradford Merrill, New York American; Amon G. Carter, Fort Worth Star Telegram; Edward Price Bell, London correspondent, Chicago Daily News; Stuart H. Perry, Adrian (Mich.) Telegram; Charles McD. Puckette, New York Times; Keats Speed, New York Sun; Edwin T. Meredith, former secretary of Agriculture; John W. Cunliffe, Pulitzer School of Journalism; Willis J. Abbot, Christian Science Monitor; William Brigham, Boston Transcript.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM
C. K. Blandin

A YOUTH in his teens took up his pack and started out from the little town of New London, Wis., years ago to get a job—any job.

The youth was Charles K. Blandin, now president and publisher of the St. Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press.

First a paper carrier, then successively printer's devil, school teacher, magistrate in a western Minnesota hamlet, owner of a small town newspaper, wholesaler of fruits and vegetables and then canvasser of subscriptions on a Minneapolis newspaper, which based him in the career he followed. Blandin joined the old Pioneer Press of St. Paul. Later, when the St. Paul Dispatch bought out the Pioneer Press he remained with the paper, and later was selected by the then owner, the late George Thompson, for the post of business manager of the combined papers. When through disability Mr. Thompson found it necessary to unshoulder the burdens of management of the papers Mr. Blandin became the operating officer of the property and at Mr. Thompson's death his widow sold a one-half interest in the papers to "C. K." as he is known to his friends, later arranging during her life for the transfer of her holdings to be taken over at her death.

During the pinch of newsprint production about ten years ago Blandin, realizing how dependent the newspapers were on the vagaries of the news print market, bought a "hay-wire" outfit at Grand Rapids, Minn., where he has developed one of the finest newsprint mills for its size in the country. He also built up a woodland supply in northern Minnesota. The present holding of his company represent a 30 years' supply of pulpwood.

SNAPPY CATECHISM OFFERED AS AID TO FUTURE COPY DESK MEN

BY CLARENCE E. STAATS

For the benefit of students in schools of journalism who contemplate a career of copy-reading the following abbreviated catechism has been prepared. With little observation of current newspapers the student should be able to expand it to several times its length.

It will be found a valuable desk reference in the search after headlines which will both fit 12-em columns and imply action. With a few hours study the student should be able to fit himself for a position on most any daily newspaper as a headwriter.

TEXAS TO SEND 150 TO A.A.C.W. MEET

Tenth District Directors Consider Convention Plans at Waco—Also Discuss $500,000 State Ad Campaign

The seven-Pullman train which will take Texas advertising men and women to the annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at Philadelphia, June 19-24, will start from Fort Worth June 16, it has been announced following the recent Waco meeting of directors of the tenth district, A. A. C. W. It is expected that a Texas delegation of 150 will attend the national convention. Dates of the 1926 tenth district convention, to be held at Beaumont, are Oct. 24-26.

Plans for the $500,000 campaign to advertise Texas nationally were discussed at the Waco conference, presided over by James P. Simpson of Dallas, tenth district chairman. Proposed method of procedure was outlined by Fred Johnston, Dallas, chairman of the committee named to devise ways and means of obtaining the fund.

It is planned, Johnston said, to raise between $125,000 and $250,000 for the first year of the five-year campaign, the remainder to be raised during the remaining four years.

Members of the committee to outline methods of raising the money include, besides Johnston, Dale Rogers, Houston; W. A. Garrabrandt, Beaumont.

In addition to Chairman Carpenter, members of the central committee entrusted with the duty of raising the $500,000 are: J. Lutcher Stark, Orange; J. H. Kennedy, Marshall; Will Hogg, Houston; J. A. Kemp, Wichita Falls; W. V. Crawford, Waco; Col. Ernest Thompson, Amarillo; Harry Rogers, San Antonio; Walter Wortham, Paris; Porter Whaley, Stamford; Ben Keith, Fort Worth; William T. Burnett, Brownsville; R. L. Kempner, Galveston; Blake Seay, Mercedes; Gus Taylor, Tyler.

The visitors were luncheon guests of the Waco Advertising Club, its president, L. M. Coyne, presiding as toastmaster. President C. F. Dumas of the Waco Chamber of Commerce welcomed the ad men.

Other than Simpson and Secretary Beeman Fisher, Dallas, those who attended the session follow: W. A. Garrabrandt, Beaumont; Mrs. Cora Kraeuter, Alfonso Johnson, Dallas; R. G. Coulter, San Antonio; J. M. Binkley, Sherman; Fred Johnston, Dallas; President Karl H. Moore of the Fort Worth Ad Club, and Otto Bruck of Beaumont.

MRS. KUHN RESUMES WRITING

Wife of Late U. P. Shanghai Correspondent Opens Office in Chicago

Irene Corbally Kuhn, writer and newspaper correspondent, formerly of Shanghai, China, has opened an office-studio at 605 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, and will devote all her time to writing.

Mrs. Kuhn has lived abroad for five years and was on board the "Empress of Canada," sailing from Vancouver, B. C., Feb. 20, to rejoin her husband, Bert L. Kuhn, then United Press correspondent at Shanghai, when the cabled news of his sudden death was handed to her. With her small daughter she returned immediately to Chicago, where she is now making her home.

Following her graduation from Columbia University, Mrs. Kuhn entered newspaper work on the Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald. She afterwards joined the New York Daily News under Phil Payne, then city editor. Mrs. Kuhn went abroad and in 1921 joined the staff of the Paris edition of the Chicago Tribune. She made a tour of the occupied area in the Rhine country in Germany and wrote stories of her observations of army life there.

With Peggy Hull, a war correspondent on the Mexican border in 1916, in France during the World War, and in Siberia, after the Armistice, she sailed from Marseilles for China, via Suez, on a Japanese freighter.

Romance began to break out at Singapore where Peggy Hull met a sea captain whom she had known previously. She left the ship at Hongkong, the next port-of-call and was married, while Mrs. Kuhn, then Irene Corbally, went on to Shanghai. C. H. Webb, then editor of the China Press, engaged her as special feature writer for the Evening Star, the American afternoon paper which had just been launched. The city editor of the Star was Bert L. Kuhn of Chicago, and four months later, they were married.

In October 1925, Mrs. Kuhn returned to the United States for a five months' vacation.

Pueblo Cheiftain Editor Retires

Walter Lawson Wilder, for nearly a quarter of a century editor of the Pueblo (Col.) Chieftain, has retired to develop his 600-acre "dude" ranch near Rifle, Col. George H. Sweeney purchased the Wilder interest. The veteran editor first came to Pueblo in 1903 from Colorado Springs.

"It Makes an English Journalist's Mouth Water"

This is a summary of a survey of the American newspaper situation by editor Frank Dilnot in the current issue of "The Landmark"—the monthly magazine of the English-Speaking Union, published in London.

There is much authoritative testimony to support the statement that this achievement during the past decade has been accomplished to a large extent by the increasing confidence of advertisers in the purchase of newspaper space as the result of the work of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

"Buying the right audience" by a thorough study of entire A. B. C. reports—not accepting front-page figures or summarized figures which confessedly can only show half truths, is enabling advertisers to make advertising dollars bring in better returns, thereby enabling larger advertising expenditures and adding to the profits of publishers by eliminating waste.

This applies to publications of modest circulation as well as publications which can show more pretentious figures.

MINNESOTA EDITORS' SHORT COURSE MAY 6

National Advertising for Weeklies Important Topic Slated for Discussion at U. of Minnesota Gathering

National advertising in country weekly newspapers will be one of the chief subjects to come before the tenth annual Editor's Short Course offered by the Department of Agriculture, University of Minnesota, at University Farm, St. Paul, May 6-8.

H. Z. Mitchell

Several large manufacturers who merchandise on a national scale have been using country weekly space very effectively. It is to encourage co-operation by manufacturers, retailers, and country publishers that the subject is being made a prominent feature of the course this year. Representatives of two manufacturers doing a nation-wide business are expected to discuss the subject.

The course will open at 2:30 p. m., Thursday, May 6, with a round-table discussion of live questions submitted by Minnesota editors, led by J. V. Weber, Slayton (Minn.) Murray County Herald. A demonstration in platen press work will follow.

The Minneapolis Journal will give a dinner in honor of the visiting editors in the dining hall at University Farm, Thursday evening. H. Z. Mitchell, publisher of the Bemidji Sentinel and Daily Pioneer, will preside. W. C. Coffey, dean of the University Department of Agriculture will extend greetings and Carl Eastwood, president of the Minnesota Editorial Association, will respond. Addresses will be delivered by Lotus D. Coffman, president of the University of Minnesota, and by Fred W. Andersen, a merchant who has built up a business of $300,000 annually in Cozad, Neb., a town of about 1,300.

One of the features of the course is to be an ad-writing contest, the prizes for which are being given by the Munsingwear Corporation, Minneapolis.

The lay-outs submitted for this contest will be discussed by J. H. DeWild, editor of the Northwest Commercial Bulletin, at the opening session on Friday, and this will be followed with an address on effective advertising writing, also by Mr. DeWild. Then Mr. Anderson, the Nebraska merchant, will give a second address, telling of his own advertising methods.

Friday afternoon will be taken up with the discussion of national advertising in country weeklies noted above, H. Z. Mitchell of Bemidji leading the discussion following the formal addresses.

Following a dinner and smoker Friday evening, R. S. Vaile of the School of Business, University of Minnesota, will give a talk on community co-operation emphasizing the newspaper's place as a factor, and he will be followed by Sam S. Haislet, recently appointed field secretary of the Minnesota Editorial Association, who will outline the plans of his office.

Circulation building will be the chief subject Saturday morning. E. W. Smith will introduce the subject with an explanation of the place of farm news as a subscription getter for country newspapers, and he will be followed with a talk on contest methods.

An exhibit by the American Institute of Graphic Arts will be on display throughout the course, and a lecture on the exhibit will be one of the closing numbers of the program.

A casting-box demonstration will be one of the chief mechanical features.

The executive committee of the state editorial association will hold a meeting at University Farm on the adjournment of the short course.

Kent Press Opening New Bureau

Charles E. Calkins, business manager of the Kent Press Service, spent a week in Indianapolis recently making plans for the opening of that organization's fifth news bureau, to be located there. The service has bureaus in Detroit, St. Louis, Springfield, Ill., and Chicago. The Indianapolis bureau will open early in May.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM
W. Laurence Dickey

WHEN W. Laurence Dickey, publisher of the Kansas City Journal-Post, persuaded John G. Neihardt to write a page of book reviews and comment on the trend of literature for his paper, he achieved the unusual in the field of journalism. For John G. Neihardt is recognized as one of the best American poets. His works are a part of the study in English courses in many universities and colleges in the United States.

In obtaining the services of Mr. Neihardt, Mr. Dickey assured his paper of one of the best book pages in the Middle West and one that compares well in style and authority with any in the country.

Mr. Neihardt has written 18 published books. His nineteenth, a collection of his shorter poems, will be issued soon by the Macmillan company, his publisher. Besides being a lyric and epic poet Mr. Neihardt has written short stories.

With the reputation already established for his lyric poetry and short stories, Mr. Neihardt turned to epic poetry. He had long had a desire to make the stirring events of the early days along the Missouri river live in a cycle of epic verse. He went to live for six years among the Omaha Indians, studying their lore and hearing from those who saw it, the history of the old trappers.

The "Song of the Three Friends," the first of the cycle appeared 12 years ago. The "Song of Hugh Glass" was next. The "Song of the Indian Wars" was published last fall. Three more books of the cycle are to be written. Mr. Neihardt is working on "The Song of the Messiah" now. It will require six more years, he says, before the entire work is completed.

Mr. Neihardt writes but 30 lines a day. He polishes every line with patient care. He knows hard writing makes easy reading. And as a hobby and a pleasure he writes book reviews and literary essays for the Journal-Post.

Mr. Neihardt is a product of the Middle West. He has lived near Kansas City much of his life. He is doing his writing at Branson, Mo., a little town in the peaceful Ozark hills, not far from Kansas City.

CRIME NEWS NECESSARY SAYS PSYCHIATRIST

Newspapers More Than Offset Possible Harm by Educating Public in Causes of Crime, Kansas Declares

Publication of crime news by the newspapers is a benefit to society through its provision of a vicarious expression for the criminal tendencies of many readers, Dr. Karl Menninger, Topeka psychiartrist, told journalism students of the Kansas State Agricultural College before whom he lectured April 8 on the subject "Crime and Punishment."

Through this provision of a "safety valve" for the repressed criminal impulses of some readers, and through education in the causes of crime, newspapers more than offset whatever harm may come from publishing crime news, Dr. Menninger believes.

The average newspaper worker is much more enlightened in his attitude toward crimes and criminals than the average business or professional man of equal intelligence, Dr. Menninger stated further. He cited instances of efforts by reporters to get back of the readily apparent facts in crime cases to the reasons for the actions of the criminal to illustrate his point.

The newspapers must educate their public to shake off the traditional attitude toward the crime problem before much progress can be made toward reducing the social and economic waste caused by crime, the speaker declared. Punishment has not been successful as a curb to anti-social acts, he asserted, for "had it been, there would now be no crime. To be effective the method of treatment must produce a cure."

"Justice," he continued, "assumes that every one is master of his own affairs when, as a matter of fact, he is not. Many influences of which we, and often the criminal himself, may know nothing, are behind his actions. It is as unreasonable to punish a criminal for something he does not know why he does as to punish him for a fainting spell."

Sport writers representing newspapers in Virginia and North Carolina cities in which there are Virginia State League baseball clubs, met at Norfolk last week and organized the Virginia League Baseball Writers' Association. Sam T. Potts, sporting editor of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, was elected president; Robert Curtis Harper, of the Richmond Times-Dispatch, vice-president, and Tom Haines, of the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch, secretary and treasurer. The organization, the first of its kind in the South, is patterned after the Baseball Writers' Association of America, with which it will seek associate membership.

Those present and enrolled as charter members were: J. Curtis Lyons, Petersburg Index-Progress; Eddie Davis, Wilson (N. C.) Times; H. D. Vollmer, Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch; W. B. Lohman and W. J. Minshull, Portsmouth Star; and the newly-elected officers. The association voted to hold its first annual banquet in conjunction with the annual meeting of Virginia League directors. Present and former sports writers on newspapers in the Virginia and North Carolina cities in which the Virginia State baseball league has teams are eligible for membership.

The Ludlow
For Better Ads and Heads

THE great newspaper leaders in linage throughout the world have chosen the Ludlow system of composition because it gives them better ads and heads.

The many economies resulting from installations of Ludlows in these plants prove well worth while to publishers. But the chief advantage of the Ludlow to publisher and advertiser alike is the fact that clean-cut, superior quality ads and heads pay handsomely.

With the Ludlow, you never run short of sorts because you set matrices—not type. With equal facility, you can have condensed, medium-width, or extended faces from 6 to 60 point, or change rapidly from one to the other, thereby securing all the benefits and none of the drawbacks of hand composition.

With the Ludlow, there are no battered, broken, or worn letters. You always print ads and heads from freshly-cast new typelines.

"CASH AND CARRY" COMPETITION MET BY CO-OPERATIVE AD DRIVE IN DAILY

Local Merchants of Ashtabula, O., Unite Against Big Chain Store Combines — Educational Campaign Placed in Star-Beacon Wins Success for Independent Merchants

IN practically all lines of business, the competition of big chain store combines has become one of the most vital problems of small independent merchants. Selling at low prices on a "cash and carry" basis, the local link of a nation-wide group frequently makes disastrous cuts into the sales of the native business man.

In Ashtabula, O., the Star-Beacon has found one way of assisting the home town retailer. Copy for an educational advertising campaign was written by Charles Abbey, of the daily's staff, and space for its publication purchased by the Local Butchers and Grocers Association. The drive was prepared to run 26 weeks.

Believing other publishers would be interested in how Ashtabula grocery and meat dealers are meeting the situation, J. W. Quigley, business manager, of the Star-Beacon this week sent EDITOR & PUBLISHER tear sheets of the first two advertisements of the series and adjoining pages showing how the local merchants were supporting the co-operative campaign by purchasing large space for their own stores.

The educational campaign began with a sensational presentaion of the small independent merchant's positon as compared to that of the chain store. Copy measures nine by twelve inches. As illustration, the spiralling winds of a cylone threaten the city's homes, and the headline reads: "A Cyclone Isn't the Greatest Calamity That Could Happen to Ashtabula."

"The tremendous damage of a big wind storm MAY BE repaired," the text reads. "Business may be IMPAIRED for a brief period but HUMAN INGENUITY soon overcomes physical difficulties and in a few months, at the most, things are going on about as usual.

"A VISITATION THAT WOULD CAUSE THE ESTABLISHED BUSINESS INTERESTS OF THE CITY TO CEASE FUNCTIONING would be far more critical and far reaching than would the wildest storm that could hit us.

"ELIMINATE the SMALL BUSINESS INTERESTS OF ASHTABULA and you have eliminated practically all of the institutions that must depend for support on the public.

"Eliminate the business man who has the little store on the corner or in the center of the block and you do away with our Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A. the RED CROSS ORGANIZATION, the BOY SCOUTS and every other activity which must stage annual campaigns for funds with which to carry on.

"The little business man of Ashtabula isn't appealing for SYMPATHY, but he is APPEALING TO YOUR OWN SENSE OF FAIRNESS—he does want to know just how YOU stand in relation to the FUTURE PROSPERITY of YOUR city.

"He wants to know whether you want your money to STAY IN YOUR OWN CITY and be used in the UPBUILDING OF YOUR OWN CITY or if you had rather lend your efforts to the prosperity and growth of NEW YORK and CHICAGO and CLEVELAND and other large cities.

"The small business man of Ashtabula doesn't want to build a fence around the town, he WELCOMES HONEST COMPETITION, he stands willing to aid his fellow townsman whenever the opportunity occurs, but what he does RESENT is the coming of the GREAT COMBINES which have just one interest in coming and that interest is PURELY COMMERCIAL."

The advertisement concludes with the announcement that similar copy is to be published each week thereafter and the expressed hope that some thought may be brought out causing readers to retain their confidence in "the neighbor who has served you faithfully and well."

Advertisements of four independent grocers and two independent meat markets find space on the same page as the co-operative copy.

The text for the next advertisement in the series attacks the "cash and carry" principle of the chain store. A picture of a storm swept house, cut out to expose a cozy interior, shares attention with a close-up of a telephone, ably picturizing the idea of small store service in sunshine or rain. The sentiment that the native merchant is the one who stands ready to support local charity and not the corporation controlling the chain store is also carried over from the opening advertisement.

The chord of reminiscence is struck to turn the mind and the eyes to the advertisement, which is headlined with the question "DO YOU REMEMBER LAST TUESDAY?"

"—surely you remember that far back," the small type takes up the strain struck by the bold-face head. Homely, small-town words then seek to lead up to the real message for which the Local Butchers and Grocers Association purchased the space.

"Gee! it was a fright of a day—part of the time it was raining, remember, and then it snowed and the wind blew and the mud oozed and all in all it was a day when the fireside seemed doubly inviting."

Obviously the next paragraph asks the reader what he or she did. Did she bundle up, get out the umbrella, and slosh through the mud to the "cash and carry store"? Or simply lift the receiver from the hook and call the neighborhood grocer?

"—what we're trying to put across is this," the advertising text continues: "THE SERVICE YOU ARE GETTING NOW IS EXCLUSIVE WITH THE LOCAL, ESTABLISHED STORE.

"—and what we want you to do is decide whether you want the small store eliminated through outside competition or if you will show by your patronage that the EFFORTS OF YEARS and YEARS is, in a measure, appreciated.

"—your local GROCER and MEAT-MAN are striving to SUPPLY YOU THE BEST possible product for the least possible amount of money. They buy carefully, conscientiously, and with the thought of YOUR HEALTH and happiness in view.

"—your local merchant is making a bid for your business with QUALITY, CONSISTENT PRICE AND EXCLUSIVE SERVICE.

"Is that fair?

"—don't forget that your telephone is the medium between you and the stores that are owned by YOUR NEIGHBORS, the men who SUPPORT ASHTABULA'S ACTIVITIES and who will pay willingly to maintain the CHARITIES of the city. JUST THINK IT OVER PLEASE."

Application was made to the district court at Fergus Falls, Otter Tail county, Minn., April 16, for a double liability stock assessment on the stockholders of the Otter Tail Farmers Publishing Company. The latter ran a daily paper at Fergus Falls when the Nonpartisan League movement was at its height in 1918. Philip R. Monson is in charge of affairs. The time for filing claims has just expired. The indebtedness is $27,581.58 and assets $4,607, nearly all in uncollected notes. The stockholders are practically all farmers.

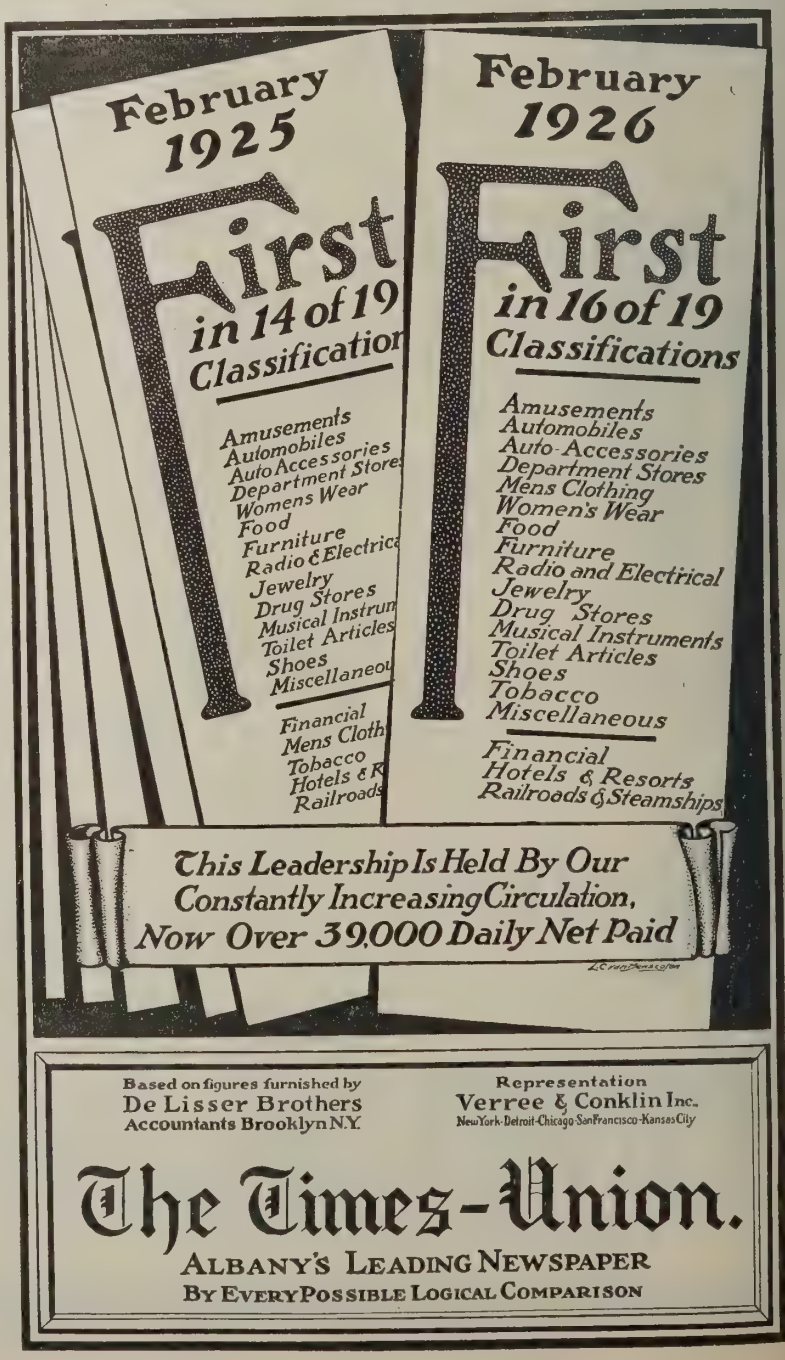
AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM
Edgar B. Piper

ONE of the conspicuous accomplishments of Edgar B. Piper, editor of the Portland Oregonian, aside from his newspaper work, has been to take the leading part in putting the Portland Symphony Orchestra on the map. Portland holds a position, musically, far in advance of other cities in the Pacific Northwest, and no little part of that distinction is due to the efforts of Mr. Piper.

EDGAR B. PIPER

For many years Mr. Piper has been a director of the Portland Symphony society and is now its president. The orchestra which the society sponsors has just closed by far the most successful year in its career.

It is no small task to build up a successful symphony orchestra in a city of 300,000, like Portland. It requires a campaign of education and a perseverance in the face of many discouragements. That the Portland society, led by Mr. Piper, has persevered is attested by the fact that the Portland orchestra now draws capacity audiences to all of its concerts in the Public Auditorium, a building seating 4,000 people without the use of available side sooms. Hundreds have been turned away from the concerts the past season which ended with a concert in March.



One factor in the success of the past season was the engagement as director of the orchestra of Willem van Hoogstraten, famous conductor. Mr. Piper insisted that the most capable conductor available was none too good. Van Hoogstraten has achieved note as conductor of the stadium concerts of the New York Philharmonic society and in other important musical capacities. Not only was he secured to direct the Portland orchestra for the past year, but he has signed a contract for two years more.

Mr. Piper's interest in things musical may be traced back to his youth when he played a cornet in the band at Salem, Ore. That is a dark chapter in his past that is seldom alluded to and he forgot how to play the cornet many years ago. A much greater influence in inspiring his interest in symphonic music has been Mrs. Piper who is herself an accomplished musician and a leader in Portland musical affairs.

The Portland editor has taken the leadership in many activities in his city and state, but Portland acknowledges a special debt to him for being instrumental in giving that city music that is excelled nowhere in the country.

Columbus Dispatch

OHIO'S GREATEST HOME DAILY

FIRST

In News

There is no veil of mystery over the Dispatch's constantly exceeding all other Columbus newspapers. Its great leadership is built upon sound reader interest and confidence. It renders complete service to readers. During the first quarter of 1926 the Dispatch printed 4,449,189 lines of news exceeding the other evening paper by 2,741,130 lines.

In Circulation

The superior news service of the Dispatch is reflected in its circulation which has grown from 72,534, April 1st, 1922, to 106,451 April 1st, 1926, greatly exceeding that of all other Columbus newspapers in City, Suburban and Country circulation. Analysis shows that 94%, or 100,400 is concentrated in the 33 Ohio counties shown on the map.

In Advertising

Advertisers used 5,345,741 paid lines in the Dispatch during January, February and March, a gain of 422,050 lines over the first quarter of 1925. The total advertising for the three months exceeded the linage in the other newspapers combined by 709,885 lines. During 1925 the Dispatch was FIRST in Ohio in advertising volume, publishing 2,648,383 lines more than any other newspaper.

READERS FIND EMOTIONAL ESCAPE IN DAILIES

Glamor of Great Events in Distant Places and Stories of Thrilling Adventures Bind Public's Interest to the Newspaper, Journalism Professor Declares—Cites Examples of Vivid Reporting

By H. F. HARRINGTON

Director, Medill School of Journalism, Northwestern University

ONE of the most popular indoor sports in America is criticizing the newspapers. Whenever everything else fails to produce fuel for argument someone calls attention to several glaring mistakes in the evening daily; somebody else stoutly declares that many papers are controlled by the advertisers; a third critic stands ready to make solemn affidavit that all reporters are liars.

H. F. Harrington

The upshot of the discussion is that every mother's son admits he could run the newspapers much better than they are being run. Occasionally one of them tries it and becomes a sadder, wiser man,—and a more charitable citizen.

I am not saying that some of these criticisms are not justified. The newspaper does make mistakes because it is planned by the human mind and put together by human hands.

The lawyer draws up a faulty indictment and the prisoner is acquitted; the doctor makes a wrong diagnosis, and the patient dies; the banker finds blunders in his bookkeeping; the merchant stocks up on goods that do not sell. All of these men keep their blunders to themselves—but when the newspaperman makes a slip he shouts his mistakes from the housetops.

Most of the errors you see in print cannot be traced to any deep-laid conspiracy to deceive; but rather to such obvious causes as haste, carelessness, elusive memory, and scarcity of facts. These human shortcomings, by the way, are not the exclusive property of reporters and editors.

In this article I have no desire to join the ravens' chorus of censure. Instead I want to show how the printed sheet satisfies our natural, insatiable curiosity about life and is, therefore, entitled to our respect and thanks.

Most of us read and enjoy the newspaper because we find in it a little gallery of vivid portraits representing people we know in situations at once dramatic and real. We read the newspaper because it calls us by name, Floyd, Eleanor, Irvin, because it talks about our friends and neighbors, because it is the discerning artist of the human scene. Hence its popularity as a daily guest in our homes.

Suppose we visit for a little while this picture gallery of the news, to discover if we may a few miniatures—some gay with sunshine, others gray with shadow—all hastily produced by reporters who failed to attach their names, but who found their reward in a reader's sympathetic response.

Our first "little masterpiece" bears the apt title "The Call of the Light." It is the handiwork of a writer for the Associated Press. Note the simplicity of theme and treatment.

Baby Franz Sches, aboard an Atlantic liner, was to have arrived in the United States, the land of promise, today. To their steerage companions his parents told of their ambitions centered in the boy and of the wonderful future dreamed of for him. Two days out from the Statue of Liberty the boy sickened. Early today the ship's surgeon carefully examined the boy and gave a hopeless negative to the mother's entreaty.

"But he must live to see America," cried the father. "It is for that we came." Again the surgeon shook his head.

Just then a light twinkled like a firefly on the horizon. Some one shouted that it was the Fire Island light, the first signal of the new country.

With the gasping baby in his arms, the father went on deck. He held little Franz aloft and the child's drooping eyelids lifted for a moment at the sight of the far-off beacon. Then they closed forever.

Such a bit of pathos makes us forget our own trivial discomforts and stirs our feelings into unwonted warmth.

Every day the newspaper furnishes just such a gateway of emotional escape for thousands of folk who live dull, uneventful lives. I wonder if you have read that little poem by Florence Kiper Frank entitled "The Movies," which might just as easily be called "The Newspaper," for both institutions often achieve the same end. It runs:

She knows a cheap release
From worry and from pain—
The cowboys spur their horses
Over the unending plain.
The tenement walls are small;
Their walls press on the brain.
Oh, the dip of the galloping horses
On the limitless, wind-swept plain.

Now we stand before another "little masterpiece" in our gallery of the news, in this instance an animated cross-section of a Chicago courtroom with the judge on the bench. The title of the picture is "The Tale of a Horn and a Wise Judge," and it was done by a correspondent for the Minneapolis Tribune:

Chicago, Nov. 18.—Now it came to pass in the reign of Calvin the Silent that two musicians brought a certain matter to a judge of the city for settlement. And the judge was John Richardson, and great was his wisdom.

And with them they brought a cornet, and shewed it unto him. And one saith: "It is mine." And the other saith, "Nay, my lord, but it is mine, and this nutty bimbo hath swiped it from mine house."

And the judge was sore vexed to know which of the twain spake the truth. But he had a hunch, and spake unto the one:

"Let's hear you play it."

And the one to whom he spake took the instrument, and swelling up like one sick with the dropsy, he blew with all his strength. And it was a sour note, so that the judge lay as one dead and those who were in the court cried out to put the musician to death, saying he was a murderer as well as a thief.

But he heeded them not, and blew a second time and the plaster fell like rain, and a centurion named Gilhooley came with certain of his men to carry him out to be stoned.

But the judge, awakened from his swoon, and would not suffer them to kill him until his adversary had blown upon the horn.

"But remember when thou blowest," he spake unto the other, "that if the note is not dulcet and easily harkened unto, thou also shall be torn asunder and thy bones divided among the junkmen who have paid their tax.

And the other blew, and lo, it was music, even as Alexander's Ragtime Band. And the centurions and those who were in the court danced and made merry.

Then saith the judge unto him who had first blown upon the horn: "Thought you could outsmart me, hey? Throw him in the hoosegow."

And they cast him into a place of utter darkness. And his name was Walter Berry.

But on the other, Preston Helm, he bestowed much praise, and gave him the horn. And the fame of his wisdom was noised abroad.

Here is another finely executed picture recently added to the gallery, one which presents with high color the merry days of childhood when hobby-horses cantered in the playroom amid squeals of laughter. It is based on the death of the man who invented the hobby-horse and is dated:

Buffalo, N. Y., March 4: (United Press) In thousands of homes and on hundreds of merry-go-rounds, little children today sat astride the hobby horses, laughingly riding "to Banburry Cross to see an old woman ride on a white Hoss."

But not many of them knew that the man who invented those mechanical horses which never falter as they gallop countless imaginary miles through lands of childish dreams, died here last night. The man was Benjamin Crandall and he had lived 104 years.

Once he had been wealthy—enjoying riches gained through the joy he brought to childhood.

But he helped a friend who was in trouble, as might be expected of a man whose imagination ran to the building of children's toys; merry-go-round horses; and the things which bring gaiety to carnivals and amusement parks. The troubles of his friend were lifted but they came back to him; he was ruined financially and died here almost in poverty. It had been 20 years since money had been plentiful in his purse.

Crandall was a native of Westerly, R. I. He came to New York when a young man and worked as a mechanic.

Over his bench he dreamed of things that would amuse the children who played on the streets near his shop. From these dreams he evolved the hobby horse.

The world was not slow to take it up. It was not many years before his horses were being ridden, through the wide spaces which open in childish dreams, by thousands of children. Today hardly a nursery is complete without one, and no merry-go-round could draw a penny, were it not for its galloping animals.

Until 20 years ago Crandall manufactured his creations. Then he failed in business. He came here and spent the remainder of his life living with relatives.

A few months ago he was stricken with paralysis. Death came last night.

The body of this 104 year old benefactor of childhood will be buried in New York City—not many miles from the spot where the first hobby horse galloped.

Mention of hobby-horses suggests a contrasting animal picture, only in this case it is about two dogs, of all four-legged friends the most faithful, lovable, and forgiving. It is credited to the Portland (Ore.) News:

"THE TWA DOGS"

By Howard H. McGowan

There follows the story of a dog—a black and tan puppy—a mongrel of unknown origin and of no breed whatsoever, except dog.

Wet, thin and shivering, he slunk into the story, acted his role, and wet, thin and shivering, he slunk out again. Nothing except what is in this story is known of him. He went as he came and his present whereabouts is unknown.

He was every inch a dog. He had those qualities of loyalty and sportsmanship which have endeared his kind to man, and though a puppy, accounted for himself well.

It was last Saturday that he made his entrance. The day was wet and cold. The little black and tan wandered across the fields between Ryan Place and Hillsdale, homeless and masterless.

If dreams haunt the minds of dogs as they do of men, greasy soup bones and a warm dry mat beneath a kitchen range must have filled his head as he pushed through the brush and drenched grass on his solitary search.

He had reached a cart road through the open countryside where the walking was easy, when suddenly, with arched back, tail erect and front paw lifted, there appeared before him Gretel, a handsome police dog, who acknowledged Benny Titus, aged 4, of Hillsdale, her master.

Now Gretel, as dogs go, was royalty when compared with the little black and tan. The blue blood of dogdom flowed through her veins. She had a long line of aristocratic ancestors behind her, and a sealed and patented pedigree that set forth the prizes they had won and the good points they had achieved.

What is more, she had a home and a hearth and a little master for whom she was responsible.

All this, however, was passed over in the thrill of the meeting. Her maternal dog heart was warmed at the sight of the forlorn little black and tan. She forgot that gods should stay upon their pedestals and aristocrats in their homes. She sympathized with the little wayfarer. Soon they were good friends and set off romping across the country, leaving two lines of parallel tracks as evidence of their friendship.

Down the cart road they frisked and played, chased tails, chewed at each other's throats, rolled and tumbled. The sport grew uproarious when suddenly, like the black shadow of death, an automobile whirled up, honked its horn and passed.

After it disappeared the sport was not resumed, for Gretel, country-bred and slow at dodging, had been struck down and lay in the wet grass, dead.

The little black and tan walked up to her, his tail between his legs, sniffed and then quietly sat down.

Night fell. The rain poured down in torrents. The wind blew, but the puppy stayed by his friend of a few minutes.

All next day he remained at his post and all the next night.

The few people that passed that way thought nothing of it. There was nothing exceptional in the little hobo dog that all alone kept cold and hungry vigil.

Meanwhile great stir was caused by the loss of Gretel. Advertisements were put in the newspapers and inquiries were started in the neighborhood. Finally on Monday evening a woman called up the master and stated that a dog similar to the one advertised was lying dead by the cart road.

Benny's father went out to see and found the dead Gretel. But the little mongrel black and tan was not there. The neighbors said he had sat in the weather for 48 hours and then some one came and carried him off bodily. Some thought it was the mailman, some thought it wasn't. But the pup was gone, and his story ended.

Next to ourselves and our friends we respond most eagerly to the adventures of celebrities as chronicled upon the pages of our newspapers. President Coolidge, Mary Pickford, Charley Chaplin, Helen Wills, Irving Berlin—to mention just a few—instantly lure our attention and capture our interest.

A few weeks ago the entire country read the story of Marion Talley, a Kansas City girl, who had made her debut as a singer at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. Her great adventure was a triumph of youth; hence it satisfied the love of the romantic that thrills all of us. We rejoiced in her success. Behold her portrait—painted by a writer for the Associated Press:

DAILY ENDORSES PRACTICAL VALUE OF UNIVERSITY JOURNALISM COURSES

New Orleans Times-Picayune Will Celebrate its 90th Anniversary Jan. 25, 1927, by Establishing Chair of Journalism at Tulane—Instruction Starts Next September

"UNIVERSITY courses in journalism are no longer experimental. Their practical value is proven by the successes of their graduates in the journalistic field."

This quotation represents the editorial judgment of the New Orleans Times-Picayune, of which L. K. Nicholson is editor. The Times Picayune recently announced it would celebrate its 90th anniversary which falls on Jan. 25, 1927, by establishing a chair of journalism at Tulane University to start in September, this year.

"While the graduate journalist, like his fellow graduates in other departments, emerges from classroom and campus with much still to learn," the editorial continued, "his training nevertheless sets him forward on the right road to honorable success.

"The main purpose of the Times-Picayune's endowment is of course to make available in the South and at New Orleans an efficient and fundamentally sound course of training for the young men and women planning to engage in newspaper work."

The details of this unique manner of celebrating a newspaper anniversary were told by Mr. Nicholson in a letter to Dr. A. B. Dinwiddie, president of Tulane, when the proposal of establishing a chair of journalism was first made. He wrote:

"The board of directors of the Times-Picayune Publishing Company has authorized its officers to establish the Times-Picayune Chair of Journalism and to appropriate the sum of $6,000 a year for ten years for that purpose. The year 1927 will mark the ninetieth anniversary of The Times-Picayune and it is to commemorate this milestone of our service and progress that the chair is to be established. Subject to a mutually satisfactory understanding with you and your board, Tulane University has been selected as the logical seat of learning for the chair.

"It is thought that a course in journalism could form a part of a general instruction in economics, literature, history, languages and possibly commercial law. A student pursuing studies of this nature would obtain a broad vision that would enable him to successfully follow journalism as a career. On the other hand, if he ultimately selected some other profession or business we feel that he would be sufficiently equipped to intelligently understand the nature and scope of journalism, as well as its aims and functions.

"It is not our intention to urge the use of part-time instructors, but it is suggested that the person chosen for the chair may find some benefit in calling upon some of our staff to present certain parts of the course. The present day tendency is toward full time professorships, and we endorse that principle, but we want you to have this freedom if you believe there is any merit in the suggestion. There is always a danger in the possibility of placing a man of radical tendencies in a chair of this sort. We are not dwelling upon the point, as that part of it is left to your judgment.

"As additional background to the thing we have in mind, it would be an error for any prospective student to take this course with the belief that he was assured of a lucrative position on the staff of The Times-Picayune. We are not entirely altruistic in this matter, and it is hoped that well qualified students will find their way into our ranks, as well as those of other newspapers in the South, but we do not subscribe to the theory of education that attempts to promise a student immediate financial reward for his meritorious efforts. A Red Grange of the educational field is not in our thoughts.

"We know the power of the daily newspaper. We believe that the proper use of this power is a necessary benefit to the social group served. We are justified, therefore, in using our means to strengthen the attainment of this ideal. The service to our community should be a good one, and in that way we could mark our ninetieth anniversary.

"We await your pleasure with the hope that this chair can be established for the beginning of your next year in September, 1926."

PICAYUNE FOUNDED IN 1837

THE New Orleans Times-Picayune was founded as the Picayune by George Wilkins Kendall and F. A. Lumsden in 1837. The present paper represents the consolidations of the old Picayune, the Times, and the Times-Democrat.

Lafcadio Hearn worked for a while on the paper, as did Walt Whitman, Irwin Russell, Page M. Baker, Pearl Rivers (Mrs. Nicholson, mother of Leonard K. Nicholson, the president of The Times-Picayune Publishing Company), Stephen Crane, George W. Cable, Brander Matthews, Henry Rightor and Catherine Cole; and there were many other famous names signed to copy that came across the desk in the old days.

(Signed) Leonard K. Nicholson, president, the Times-Picayune Publishing Company.

The board of administrators of the Tulane educational fund, at its meeting, accepted the offer.

The same day, Dr. A. B. Dinwiddie, president of Tulane, sent the following letter to the Times-Picayune:

The Tulane University board of administrators, in accepting the offer of the Times-Picayune Publishing Company to establish The Times-Picayune chair of journalism at the university and to appropriate the sum of $6,000 yearly for ten years for that purpose, requested me to write you a letter of appreciation of your action and to thank you for the service rendered the university thereby.

"The board of administration was particularly pleased with the broad background suggested for the course in journalism and for the high professional aim indicated by this. The university will be glad to carry out this purpose to the best of its ability and to show in this way the real appreciation of the service which you have done not only to the university and to journalism, but to the public in providing the highest form of training from the standpoint both of education and of ideals for men who are intending to enter this profession."

UNFILTERED OIL A MENACE

SOURCE OF MOTOR TROUBLES

"Dirt, dust and tiny bits of metal accumulating in the lubricating oil are the source of most of our engine troubles", says

[illegible] years ago the car manufacturers started a strenuous educational campaign to make owners realize the importance of clean oil in their engines.

One of EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S subscribers in the Southwest sent this week the above interesting space mooch exhibit. This is the kind of stuff that some of the general advertisers are handing out to their local agents, all over the country.

Observe the underscored lines (underscores our own) which speak so eloquently of the business acumen of newspaper managers and editors—when they do not get paid advertising they like to publish free puffs just to fill up the paper.

Just such communications are flooding the mails, causing all sorts of confused notions about newspapers, lowering confidence of local business men in local papers, and encouraging space grafting.

Mr. A. T. Abeles, who signed the above letter, is of course a very hopeful optimist; still, there is enough truth in what he says about "easy" newspaper managers and editors to make his communication uncomfortable reading in newspaper circles. The free publicity evil must be met by the organized press! It is not only a question of "good business"; it is a question of professional honor.

The more than 100,000 circulation of The Star — Evening and Sunday — completely covers the National Capital, and its twenty-five mile shopping radius. A circulation that is 33 1/3% or more greater than the other papers here — and by a thoroughly organized carrier service delivered directly into the homes — which cannot be reached so definitely by any other medium.

The advertising lineage for 1925 of 26,569,189 lines gives The Star fourth place among the papers of the entire country: is an increase of 1,255,449 lines over the previous year — half a million lines greater than all the other Washington papers combined — and 16,173,141 lines MORE than was carried by the second paper.

Here are nearly three quarters of a million prosperous people reached regularly and directly by The Star.

In planning an extension of your business you cannot afford to overlook the National Capital and its suburbs — but you need reckon on but ONE medium. The Star is the necessity in this field.

Gentlemen:

Answering your inquiry regarding the utility of Kohler magazine reels installed in our plant.

We are entirely satisfied with the efficiency of the reels in our operation. Press room production in our new plant, through the operation of unit type presses and reels, has increased approximately fifty per cent. In view of our experience, we are convinced that magazine reels operated in conjunction with unit type presses are the answer to the newspaper publishing problem of today.

We are very much pleased with the service you have rendered in connection with our purchase and installation of Kohler reels. We shall be very glad at any time to answer any inquiries that you may care to refer to us.

DAILY PRESS ANALYZED AT CLUB SESSION

Merits and Defects of Newspapers Subject of Philadelphia Group—Bliven, Douglas, Cheyney, Woodruff, Speakers

The merits and defects of a modern daily newspaper, from the viewpoint of the reading public and from that of the newspaperman himself were analyzed Monday night by speakers at a symposium on "the Daily Newspaper," conducted by the Contemporary Club, of Philadelphia.

The speakers were Bruce Bliven, formerly director of the Department of Journalism, University of Southern California, and at present on the editorial staff of the New Republic; George W. Douglas, of the editorial staff, Philadelphia Evening Ledger; Dr. Edward P. Cheyney, professor of English history at the University of Pennsylvania; and Clinton Rogers Woodruff, former member of the Legislature and member of the Philadelphia bar.

Mr. Bliven pointed out to a more or less antagonistic audience that the newspaper of today, the big, metropolitan daily, really has its superior virtues, and among these he mentioned its cheapness to the consumer, the speed with which it is printed and the news of the world presented promptly, and finally the optimistic fact that the personnel of journalism is increasing in intelligence and responsibility.

"Does the press do its duty on the side of brain as well as on the side of morality," he asked. "The press is an integral part of the great experiment in political democracy now in progress in the United States. This political democracy is predicated on the question as to whether or not the citizens involved in the experiment can be intelligently informed as to how to carry out their duties. The newspaper is simply an extension of the old New England town meeting, the sole machinery by which the people may be kept informed.

"The ordinary newspaper wants the largest circulation, not the best circulation, and it is not concerned with getting into the best homes. It lies with the public, with the votes it casts with the pennies it pays for the paper it reads whether the newspaper is to be a menace to the nation or a great aid to democratic institutions."

Mr. Douglas, assuming the hypothetical premise that the audience and he were to get out a newspaper, said they would first decide that an ideal paper was impossible of realization, that they would then seek an audience, realizing that people will not buy a paper "if it contains only what we think they should read.

"The fundamental interests of every one lies in sex, life and prosperity," said Mr. Douglas. "The great novels are often stories of crime. If the story of Paola and Francesca were published in the newspapers, some people would say, 'such things should not be printed.'

"On the afternoon that the verdict was brought in at a recent murder trial the paper with which I am connected sold 100,000 more copies than it ordinarily sells. Some persons again would say, 'People should not be interested in such things,' but we cannot change man.

"The newspaper tells the story, but the moral makes itself heard in trumpet tones, for every one who reads the story said, 'I shall not let myself get into an entanglement that might lead to crime.'

"The standard of honesty in newspaper work is as high or higher than in any other profession. The paper is your eyes and ears, it gives you information of what your legislators are doing; when you lie down on the job, as evidenced by the way the great number of persons who do not vote, it fights your battles."

Dr. Cheyney was pleasantly ironic about newspapermen in general, and wondered why it was that university students who appeared to be such promising young men while in the classroom turned out to be such monsters of ignorance and misrepresentation when they became reporters. He did not indicate whether it was the environment of the university or of the newspaper office which contributed the greater part of their dereliction.

Correction

In a recent story concerning the start of the Atlantic City (N. J.) Times, it was erroneously stated that the Times was an A.B.C. member. The paper has applied for membership.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

J. M. Stephenson

BACK in 1917, a young bank cashier, then 25 years of age, had a serious conversation with his father-in-law, and forgot his banking career for that of publisher. J. M. Stephenson was the bank cashier. The South Bend (Ind.) News-Times was his opportunity.

The paper had had a very unfortunate career up to that period. The father-in-law had from time to time yielded to the persuasion of those who managed it to advance money, always in the hope that it would soon be earning dividends and justify its existence.

At the time it had a circulation of 7,000, and its advertising patronage was obtained more by favor or pity than by any hope of real returns.

That was the situation which confronted the young banker who started on the basis that there would be no more loans, no more advances of funds and that it must operate on its own resources.

Nine years later finds the News-Times with a net paid circulation of over 27,000 in a city of 100,000 and with an advertising bulk that is more than enviable.

No additional money was put into the paper from the time Mr. Stephenson took charge. He had decided that any enterprise to be self-respecting must be self-supporting and he made it so, largely by economy of management. He decided very early that the advertiser must obtain what he pays for in terms of results and additional business. He decided that subscribers must have what they pay for in terms of news, entertainment and strict fidelity to their interest.

Aside from that, he admits that banking as a business never did offer the thrill or the prospect of satisfaction which is to be found in type and printed page and that he really succeeded because he had a keen and continuing interest in every line of every column which goes into the paper.

"Newspaper making is the same as that of any other manufacturing business" says Mr. Stephenson. "It all depends upon the product.

"The publisher who forgets that he must keep his model new each day and keep abreast of public thought will soon join the makers of tallow candles or hoopskirts. It's a new business every day. It all depends on just how much you are ready to put of personality and thought into it. In building newspapers if one keeps in mind a personality that everyone likes, it is easier.

"We all like a man who is honest, truthful, jovial, forceful and broad-minded in all the affairs of life.

"Make your newspaper reflect these qualifications and your job is half finished."

IS ADVERTISING FREE IN THE NEWSPAPERS?

Fisher-Brown Advertising Agency Outlines $350,000 Magazine Campaign for Candy Makers and Expects Publicity Free in the Dailies

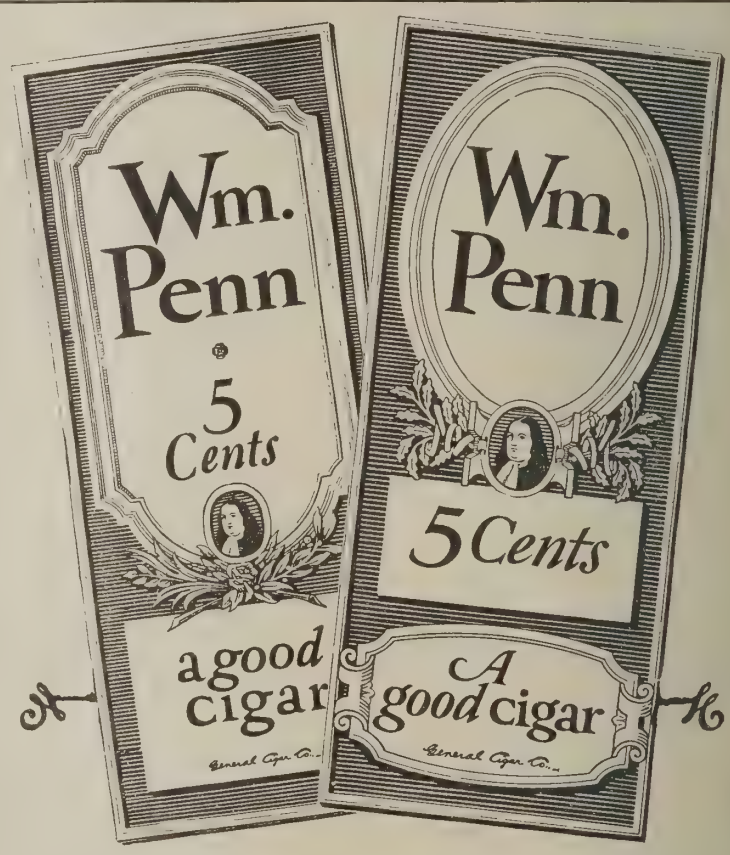
Advertising may be obtained free of charge in American newspapers was in effect what H. R. Wilson, vice-president of the Fisher-Brown Advertising Agency, St. Louis, recently told a group of candy makers meeting in Young's Hotel, Boston. He outlined a proposed $350,000 campaign in the magazines to be conducted co-operatively by the candy and allied industries, and said:

"Publicity will be issued to the newspapers for use in their 'food departments' concerning the value of candy as a food and its place in the household menu."

The idea of the campaign, he explained, is to combat "misinformation" concerning the fat producing properties of candy and the properties which make it deleterious to the teeth.

Parenthetically, Mr. Wilson said, that if there were any newspaper men in the room he hoped they wouldn't feel too badly about the plan not including them just now. He declared that in time the campaign might grow to include the newspapers, but just now the committee in charge believes it can afford only magazine advertising.

"We aim," he said, "to reach the entire country, and with the proposed budget of $350,000, we feel we will be unable to use the papers."

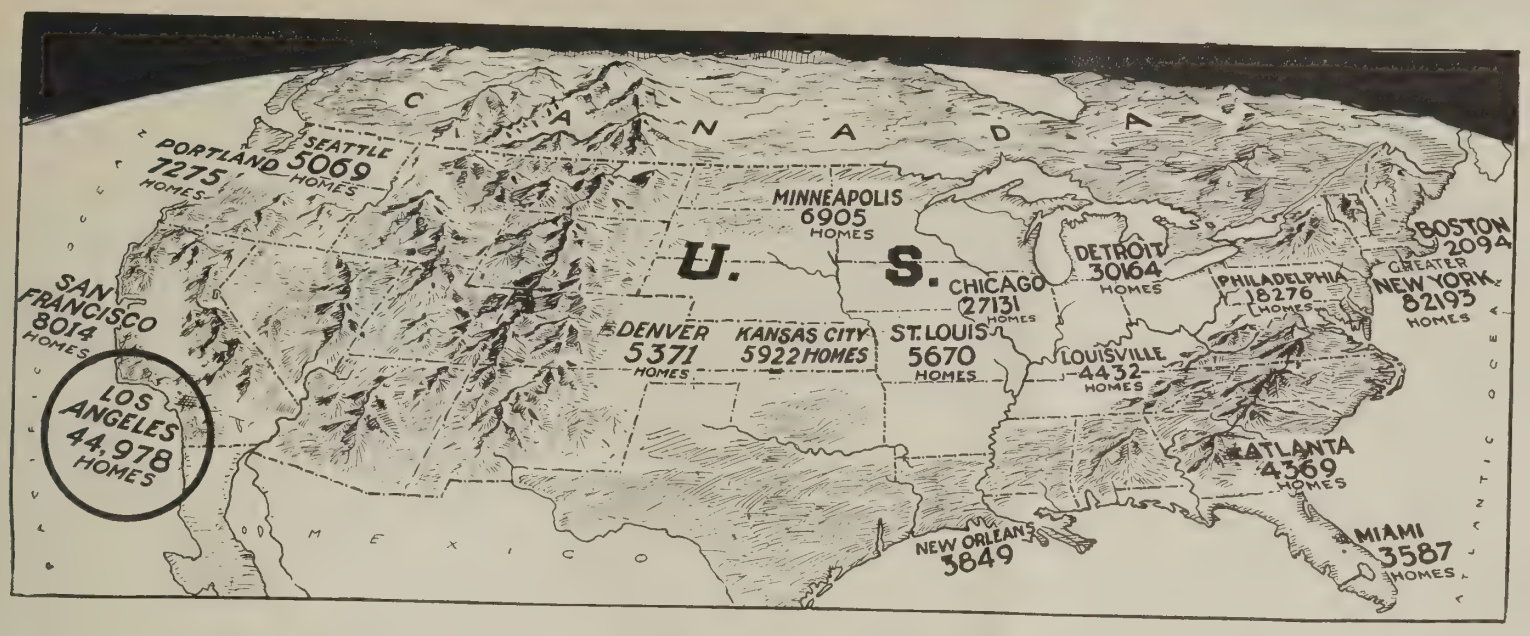


V. L. Price, St. Louis, president of the National Confectioners' Association, urged adoption of the plan. George H. Bunton, president of the New England Manufacturing Confections Association, presided.

Those who made speeches favoring indorsement of the plan included W. H. Raye, president; Walter M. Lowney Company; George S. Schrafft, treasurer, Frank G. Shattuck Company, and Horace S. Ridley, vice-president of the New England Confectionery Company.

General indorsement was then given by a standing vote.

Subscription Receipt Sold at Auction



For the first time in history, at least so far as Indiana is concerned, a paid-in-advance receipt for a newspaper subscription has been considered collateral and sold at auction. A receipt for five years subscription to the Brownsburg Record was found among the effects of Lincoln Canary, who died there some time ago. It was put up at auction at the administrator's sale. As a result, Miss Nettie Canary of this city, is richer by $7.50. She was heir to the estate. Just a few days before the death of Mr. Canary, he paid $7.50 for the five years' subscription, but between the time of his death and the sale the subscription price of the Record was advanced from $1.50 to $2 a year. Bidding for the receipt was spirited.

built more homes in the past two years than any other city except greater New York (and greater New York is 10 times larger)

44,978 new single family dwellings were built in Los Angeles during 1924 and 1925, according to figures compiled by the Santa Fe Railroad!

That number of homes would accommodate an additional 179,912 people, and is a sizable market within itself.

Greater New York, 10 times larger than Los Angeles, built less than twice that number, so you have here a concentrated and expanding new-customer group, coming to Los Angeles from all over the country, and open to buying-suggestions.

It is important, therefore, to know what newspaper these newcomers prefer. OVER A PERIOD OF FIVE YEARS, THE LOS ANGELES EXAMINER, SWORN STATEMENTS SHOW, WAS BOUGHT BY 66 OUT OF EVERY 100 NEW SUBSCRIBERS to a morning paper in Los Angeles.

Check against your present advertising plans! Are you placing schedules where you are reaching the greatest number of home-builders; are you getting as much new business, year after year, as you could here in Los Angeles with its rapidly growing population? Is the medium you are using, reaching the greatest number of these newcomers?

The Merchandising Service Department of the Los Angeles Examiner renders MORE than co-operation in obtaining retail distribution and dealer enthusiasm; it also provides accurate surveys on all lines, around which strategic advertising campaigns can be built. CLUB WOMEN TO HEAR VALUE OF ADVERTISING

Women's Ad Groups Planning Series of Educational Talks—To Tell Influence of Advertising

A national movement among women's advertising clubs to familiarize club members with advertising and its value to the home is now being launched by the Federation of Women's Advertising Clubs.

Mrs. Anita Simpson, president of the Women's Advertising Club of Chicago and the originator of the movement, has presented to the 18 clubs in the Federation, through Mrs. Bernice Blackwood, Federation president, an outline for educational work in the form of advertising talks for club women.

To reach the greatest number of women within its territory with this talk, each club will be asked to organize from its membership a speakers' bureau. Each advertising club member who gives the talks will prepare her own address, incorporating in it the 14 points given in the outline which cover the basic points of advertising. The talk will be non-technical and will be illustrated, if desired. Each speaker will also be prepared to conduct a round table discussion.

Some of the points brought out in Mrs. Simpson's outline are:

That the last articles to advance in prices during the world war were the nationally advertised products.

That people dress better, eat better, sleep better and live better because of the influence of advertised products.

That no matter how well she manages her home, when the housewife allows herself to be taught efficiency in buying and the cheapest and best markets through advertising, she and her family profit accordingly.

That the tremendous increase in savings and investments among the American people during the last ten years has been chiefly due to advertising—financial advertising coming into existence only a decade or so ago.

That advertising, by constantly calling attention to the care of health in connection with the use of advertised products, has performed a great public service.

"Realizing that women represent more than 85 per cent of the country's buying power," Mrs. Simpson said, "the necessity exists for acquainting women with the part advertising plays in life and living."

More than 2,500 club women have already been reached through the advertising clubs' talks.

CLINTON DAILY IN NEW PLANT

Herald Now Printing From Remodeled, Modern Structure

The Clinton (Ia.) Herald is now occupying its newly enlarged, remodeled and rebuilt plant.

In the composing room, production equipment includes eight Linotypes, while a Goss quadruple, high speed press, 32-page capacity, is the backbone of the press room equipment, with stereotyping machinery in keeping with the press.

The composing room, now on the second floor, is well-lighted, three of the composing room walls being almost completely windowed and is a large portion of the fourth.

The news department, also on the second floor, consists of a series of glass-enclosed private offices, one for each member of the staff. A separate room, with solid walls, is provided for the Associated Press operator, while the International News Service telegraph printers of the latter being enclosed in sound proof cabinets.

Cleanliness, light and air are outstanding characteristics of the new plant. A ventilation system that changes the air in the building every few minutes is a feature. Smoking is prohibited during production hours in all departments.

FIND EMOTIONAL ESCAPE IN DAILIES

spellbound tonight with the beautiful, full tones of "Caro Nome."

At the last note a storm of applause swept the packed auditorium, stopping the show for five minutes, and the name of Marion Talley of Kansas City was securely inscribed on the roll of prima donnas.

As the curtain fell on the second act of Verdi's "Rigoletto" the applause broke out again, and the audience called the youngest prima donna ten times before the footlights before they would let her go.

The huge auditorium resounded with the shouts of "Bravo" and "Talley."

Seated at the sending end of the special leased wire of the Associated Press twenty feet away from the scene of his daughter's performance, Charles M. Talley sent the first words that told the world of the successful fulfillment of his dreams.

Back stage there drifted the murmur of the audience still excited over the startlingly mature voice that had come to them from the throat of the little Kansas City girl.

Mr. Talley ticked off over the keys the following message of his delight:

"The things that the Talley family have been dreaming of for fifteen years have come true.

"Our little girl is singing to the world, as we always thought she could some time do and would do.

"CHARLES M. TALLEY."

And now for one of the larger canvasses, a picture that records the solemn scenes that marked the ceremonies attending the burial of the Unknown Soldier in Washington. It was done by Kirke L. Simpson of the Associated Press. You probably recall these majestic opening paragraphs with their vivid word pictures and bugle-like clarity—newspaper prose at its best. The story begins:

WASHINGTON, November 11 (Associated Press).—Under the wide and starry skies of his own home-land America's unknown dead from France sleeps tonight, a soldier from the wars.

Alone he lies in the narrow cell of stone that guards his body; but his soul has entered into the spirit that is America. Wherever liberty is held close in men's hearts, the honor and the glory and the pledge of high endeavor poured out over this nameless one of fame, will be told and sung by Americans for all time.

Scrolled across the marble arch of the memorial raised to American soldier and sailor dead, everywhere, which stands like a monument behind his tomb, runs this legend: "We here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain."

The words were spoken by the martyred Lincoln over the dead at Gettysburg. And today with voice strong with determination and ringing with deep emotion, another President echoed that high resolve over the coffin of the soldier who died for the flag in France.

Great men in the world's affairs heard that high purpose reiterated by the man who stands at the head of the American people. Tomorrow they will gather in the city that stands almost in the shadow of the new American shrine of liberty dedicated today. They will talk of peace; of the curbing of the havoc of war.

They will speak of the war in France, that robbed this soldier of life and name and brought death to comrades of all nations by the hundreds of thousands. And in their ears when they meet must ring President Harding's declaration today beside that flag-wrapped, honor laden bier:

"There must be, there shall be, the commanding voice of a conscious civilization against armed warfare."

Each of these stories had been produced by a reporter impelled by the goading finger of the clock. He has had no "delusions of grandeur," no false notions of his importance as a literary personage, but has rather been content to paint the picture with as much artistry as he can command and with the sole desire to tell the truth as he has seen it.

The reporter's mission is to study life at close range, to discover something that affords the reader a moment's pleasure or to uncover a bit of information the everyday man would not otherwise secure. To do this the reporter must rub elbows with humanity daily. If he goes out on the street, he is assailed by incidents and situations. A gang of boys is at noisy high tension in a game of baseball—the darting figures, the excited voices, the crack of the bat, and the flight of the yellow rawhide into the mit of the second baseman. An ambulance is carrying the freshly wounded to the hospital. It carves its way through choked traffic, like an arrow seeking the white. Fire engines are pounding down the asphalt. Bells, whistles, voices are in the air. Human faces, friendly conversation, shop windows gay with color, these cross the area of vision. It is life, life that attracts him. Life is his open book, to be studied word by word, chapter by chapter.

"ONLY A NEWSPAPER GUY"

I see a man strut through a jam in the hall,
Take a seat 'mid the speakers and chat with them all,
"Is this Hoover?" I ask, "that the crowd he defies?"
"No," says someone, "he's one of the newspaper guys."

I see a man pushing his way through the lines
Of cops where a fire brightly glimmers and shines,
"Chief Collins?" I ask, but a fireman replies,
"Oh, no, why, that's one of those newspaper guys."

I see a man start on the trail of a crook,
And he scorns all assistance, but brings him to book,
"Mr. Burns?" I inquire. Someone scornfully cries—
"Burns? Naw. He's just one of them newspaper guys."

I see a man walk through the door of a show
Where great crowds are blocked by the sign S. R. O.
"Is that Arliss, himself, that no ticket he buys?"
"Well, hardly. He's one of those newspaper guys."

I see a man knock on a president's door
And the sign, NO ADMITTANCE, completely ignore.
"Is this Morgan, that privacy's rights he denies?"
"Morgan? Shucks! It's just one of those newspaper guys."

And some day I'll walk by the great streets of gold,
And see a man enter, unquestioned and bold,
"A saint?" I'll inquire, and old Peter'll reply:
"Well, I should say not, he's a newspaper guy."

These "little masterpieces" of the reporter's art reveal the human newspaper with the ruddy color of life upon its bright face, a newspaper by no means perfect but as absorbingly interesting as the men and women it presents to view from day to day.

Still Going Strong

Don C. Seitz, in Editor & Publisher, says:

"The buying power of the mass has become the fetish of the advertiser and not the buying power of the individual. Yet where will you find two more successful newspapers than the New York Times or the Boston Transcript, both of which have sturdily refused to be swept from off their feet?"

Apropos of this the Transcript's gain in Local advertising for the month of March was 33,004 lines, and in National, 41,804 lines.

TWO essentials are necessary to a successful newspaper feature syndicate—a feature of quality and a newspaper in which to give it a daily showing.

The feature without the newspaper is lost. A newspaper without features weakens its opportunities for circulation growth.

Since these two agencies are necessary to the profitable operation of the newspaper syndicate it is the policy of Editors' Feature Service, Inc., to offer to publishers a well balanced service of quality and interest at an attractive price and with a protection guarantee as to cost, territory and length of contract that makes it safe and profitable for the publisher to take on the service and to promote it as a part and parcel of his newspaper.

Editors' Feature Service, Inc., is an independent organization interested only in building an economical service of high quality for a select list of newspapers.

PROMOTER SUES WHEN ADS ARE REJECTED

Los Angeles Times Accused of Conspiracy With State Official by Mining Stock Seller, Who Asks $350,000 Damages

The Los Angeles Times was recently made co-defendant with the California commission of corporations in a suit filed by C. C. Julian, alleging that Harry Chandler, publisher of the Times; Ralph W. Trueblood, executive editor; W. H. Bryan, an advertising solicitor; Albert Nathan and A. M. Rochlen, reporters, had conspired with E. M. Daugherty, commissioner of corporations, and his subordinates, to wreck Mr. Julian's promotion of the Western Lead Mines Company. Damages of $350,000 were asked. The Times was sued after it had discontinued publication of Julian's advertising as soon as official action by the commissioner cast doubt upon the merit of the proposition from a mining standpoint and as a security.

That the Times was moved by considerations fundamental to the integrity of advertising in its action was set forth in the answer filed by its publisher and employees.

In taking such action the answer declares, the Times carried out its long-standing advertising policy, one well understood and practiced by the better class of newspapers and periodicals everywhere.

This policy is predicated upon the fact that advertising is valuable to the public, to the advertising medium and, in the long run, to the advertiser himself only to the degree that it is trustworthy, that any publication which continues to carry advertising after doubt as to its merit is known to exist is betraying its obligation to the public.

In suspending publication of the advertising in question pending the outcome of the official inquiry as to the merit of its subject, the Times pursued its established practice of nearly half a century, which answer describes thus:

"By this jealously guarding the integrity of its advertising columns and the public against imposition, and by establishing and maintaining a news and editorial policy vigilantly and militantly in the public interest, the Times has earned and enjoys public confidence and respect as a newspaper and the highest repute as a valuable advertising medium, which confidence, repute and respect would be jeopardized by knowingly publishing news or advertising matter inconsistent therewith."

The answer sets out various circumstances which came to the attention of the Times calculated to cast doubt upon the merit of the Julian enterprise, culminating with the citing by Commissioner Daugherty of various brokers selling Western Lead stock. One of these were articles in the Mining Journal-Press, a national mining magazine, questioning the merits of the proposition and challenging the standing as experts of men cited by Julian as indorsing it from an engineering standpoint and quoting one of them as repudiating his supposed indorsement. Another was the report of the engineer for the State Corporation Department declaring the Western Lead proposition to be an undeveloped prospect with very little ore in sight and scant outlook for success.

The answer makes a general denial of the conspiracy and other charges contained in Julian's suit. Appended is a demurrer to the promoter's complaint setting forth that the latter shows no proper cause of action.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

W. B. Bryant

"BILL BRYANT" as the publisher of the Paterson (N. J.) Press-Guardian is known among his associates, is believed to be the only newspaper publisher in the U. S. who does not play golf, although his father, the late W. C. Bryant, introduced him to the game 30 years ago before it became popular. At that time Bryant said, as many others have since, that it was an "old man's game" and that he would refuse to play it until he was at least 50, and he has not as yet reached that age.

"Bill" has always been more or less athletically inclined; was considered one of the best all around horsemen in Brooklyn, having been in the Cavalry Service of New York State for nearly 15 years. He has always held tennis to be "the game," but admitted during the past year that he was going to slow down on tennis, put it on the shelf and take up golf.

But after all, Bryant's first love is the newspaper business and if he's obsessed with one thing it's his appreciation of the value of organizations. He has been active for years with most of the newspaper organizations.

He is a past president of the Passaic County Publishers' Association, New Jersey Press Association, New Jersey Daily League, the Associated Press Members of New Jersey, which group he organized and represents as a member of the Eastern Advisory Board. He is also a past president of the Paterson Chamber of Commerce and Paterson Rotary Club.

Bryant is the typical all around newspaper man, having served his apprenticeship in pretty nearly every branch of the business. He is one of the few publishers who is equally at home in all departments of the paper. He knows the mechanical situation from the proper melting of metal for linotype machines to the latest installation of modern controls and press equipment.

He was circulation manager and assistant business manager for the New York Tribune for ten years and has been a publisher for 15 years.

WALTER L. PATTESON

Veteran Illinois Newspaper Man Dies of Apoplexy

Walter L. Patteson, 67, an editor of the Springfield (Ill.) State Register and one of the most widely known newspapermen of the state, dropped dead the afternoon of April 14 while at his desk. He was apparently in good health when he came to work but a reaction from the strain of the election the previous day is believed to have induced apoplexy which caused death almost instantly.

Mr. Patteson was born Feb. 11, 1859, in Curran township and after graduation from the University of Illinois joined the staff of the Springfield Morning Monitor, of which he became city editor. He was Springfield correspondent many years for the Chicago Herald and later did editorial work for the News-Record and the State Journal, joining the Register staff about nine years ago.

BEE-LINE PRESS

THE BEE-LINE PRESS is made especially for the smaller-city publisher who wants to give his readers as handsome a sheet as the metropolitan daily. It enables him to do this without the metropolitan publisher's heavy investment charge or his high operating costs.

Being ultra-modern in its printing qualities the BEE-LINE is capable of turning out first-class tabloid work. Having fewer parts, being more cheaply installed and more easily handled than any other press, the BEE-LINE is the most economical newspaper printing press on the market.

The Bee-Line Press may be purchased on the time payment plan at current rates for the accommodation furnished.

The simplest and swiftest small-city newspaper printing press in the world.

Prints at the same speed and as handsomely as the larger metropolitan daily presses.

From a single location, the pressman may view every operation of printing, folding and delivery.

It requires neither pit, motor base nor paper hoist.

Made in three standard units:

No. 1-16 (Single Unit) 4-6-8-12-16 pages.

"BARGAIN SALE" BILL UP

Hearing on Capper-Kelly Measure Set For April 22-23

The individual consumer, and especially the housewife, has awakened to a realization of his or her interest in the suppression of fake bargain sales, Edmond A. Whittier, secretary-treasurer of the American Fair Trade League, says in a bulletin notifying League members that hearings on the Capper-Kelly Bill will begin before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on April 22.

"The interest of the general public in this bill," says Mr. Whittier, "lies chiefly in the fact that it seeks to protect consumers against deceptive 'combination selling' which, under the guise of offering well known standard merchandise at 'cut prices,' gave the 'bargain sale' operators the opportunity to dispose of un-trade-marked and unguaranteed goods at an exorbitant profit. The purpose of the bill is described in its title as 'to clarify the law, to promote equality thereunder, to encourage competition in production and stability, to prevent injury to good will, and to protect trade-mark owners, distributors and the public against injurious and uneconomic practices in the distribution of articles of standard quality under a distinguishing trade-mark, brand or name.'

"Through this measure the manufacturers, jobbers and retailers of the country seek to have restored the right of contract to prevent misuse of popular trade-marked merchandise as fake bargain sale bait, a privilege of which they were deprived by erroneous judicial interpretations of the anti-trust laws."

ENTERTAIN SPELLING CHAMPS

Des Moines Register and Tribune Host to County Winners

The Des Moines Register and Tribune entertained for a day 99 spellers, champions of as many counties in Iowa who came to the capital city to compete in the state-wide spelling contest held under the paper's auspices April 16.

The winner of the spelling bee, 12 year old Janet Miller of Brooklyn, Ia., will represent the state at the national contest in Washington in June. She won when Perry Emmert of Hawarden, misspelled the word "hieroglyphics." Each county champion was presented with a medal by the Register.

EDITORIAL

"BUSINESS OFFICE—MUST"

HERE are two sets of circumstances which recur often enough in the routine of newspaper publication to be commonplace:

The advertising solicitor tells the story of his newspaper's circulation and influence with readers, gets the space buyer's answer that his competitors have been preferred for the account, returns to the fray with an offer of a "good news story" for the advertiser in the same issue with the advertisement, gets the order, brings back copy for the advertisement and the "news story" and gets both printed.

Or, the managing editor sees in a magazine, or a trade journal, or in a newspaper exchange a tip for a picture or feature of peculiar local interest, telegraphs to probable source for the desired information, prints it, and is informed by the business office that his story is "free publicity" for a magazine advertiser.

If either of these hypothetical cases is pernicious in its influence on the integrity or earning power of the press, which is the more pernicious?

One answer is found in the annual report of the Bureau of Advertising, presented to the A. N. P. A. this week. The committee which made the report gives special emphasis to a case similar to the second, makes no mention of the first, and asserts:

"The remedy is in the hands of the publishers of newspapers who can stop this flood of destructive material by instructing their editors better to inform themselves about the character of free publicity which they consider 'news' today, but which has a disastrous effect upon newspaper advertising, and, in our judgment, tends to lessen the confidence of readers in newspapers. . . . The editor rather than the press agent is responsible for this situation."

That is sound sense, and it is true, but it is not the whole truth about the subject. The editor needs education along this line, no doubt. He also needs a budget sufficient to employ and pay competent reporters and copy-readers, to cover all essential and important news points in the circulation area, and to buy wholesome entertaining features. With these at his disposal, the editor of the small or medium city newspaper will not have to drop a press agent matrix into a hole at the deadline. It is lack of copy to fill the available space, or lack of machine facilities to set the necessary copy that is advanced by most small-paper editors as an excuse for letting the press agency see the light of day. They have no illusions as to its news value, usually.

Some improvement has been noted in recent months. Run-of-mine publicity finds access to the public more difficult through the news columns than it did a short time ago. The recipes for somebody's jam, the short story about somebody's perfume, and the panegyric for tailor-made clothes go to the waste-basket or the copy-paper drawer. The editor is now doing a fairly good job in this respect, but there is no doubt that he will appreciate and be assisted by the report of the A. N. P. A. committee which the Bureau wishes appointed to investigate the free publicity subject.

While the Bureau does not mention it, the other kind of free publicity, the "quid-pro-quo" variety, where the publisher gives five inches of "reading matter" with a 20-inch advertisement, deserves the close attention of the committee. This breed is poisonous to the whole newspaper fabric. It is in essence a rebate from the published rates. It consumes space and newsprint which might have a beneficial use for the entire circulation group. Its purpose is obvious to the most uninformed reader and it creates the belief that if an advertiser buys the back page, he is entitled to a news story on the front page. Even if there is no basis in fact for this belief—and there has been at certain times and places not remote—there is no doubt that its existence "tends to lessen the confidence of readers in newspapers."

This is an old evil, which has continued to exist either because publishers so wished, or because they lacked the resolution to end it. The editor's responsibility in this case is usually that of a subordinate, a good soldier, who obeys orders or gives place to someone who will. He knows what "business office must" means at the top of a sheet of copy. If the committee can find some means to rid the newspaper vocabulary of those three words, it will find little further need of educating the editor in the wiles of the press agent.

Debate thy cause with thy neighbour himself; and discover not a secret to another.—Proverbs, XXV; 9.

PAN-AMERICAN UNITY

TWENTY-NINE interesting and important resolutions were the tangible fruits of the First Pan-American Congress of Journalists, published in full text in last week's EDITOR & PUBLISHER. Creation of a permanent body, to perpetuate the work so auspiciously begun, was recommended and will unquestionably be followed.

Through these means the peoples of North, Central and South America are at last to know each other, bridging an absurd chasm of popular misunderstanding. In a few days the journalists at Washington made more progress toward this desirable objective than diplomacy has made in many years.

American newspaperdom will rejoice that there is to be a permanent Pan-American Press Association. The next Congress to be announced by the Pan American Union, will doubtless be held in Central or South America and newspaper men of the United States, who have come to know and thoroughly to enjoy the Latin American visitors will journey South to continue the friendly and helpful relationship. Newspaper men who take their profession with the spirit and the degree of honor that the twenty-nine resolutions indicate deserve high position at the press tables of the world.

The presence of the Latin Americans was easily the feature of the Spring publishers' conventions in New York this week. The period of stiff formality was worn out in the first few days at Washington and here the visitors seemed to feel themselves among old friends. Everywhere they were welcomed with warm cordiality.

Pan America has become a fact as well as a name.

"No newspaper in the land would have given 'Hatrack' space," says Mefo in "Houston (Tex.) Chronicle." But they gave Mr. Mencken and his magazine a million dollars worth of advertising.

REPORTING A STRIKE

DURING the recent coal strike EDITOR & PUBLISHER complained that the American press had badly neglected news vital to a vast number of citizens and commented upon a seeming attitude of disinterest in disputes between capital and labor in recent years. It seemed to us that the newspapers had treated the stupendous struggle in Pennsylvania as if it were a routine and wholly dry subject. EDITOR & PUBLISHER knew that the press did not fear to speak out, as was alleged in some quarters, but held that the strike had been underplayed.

Those who do feel that there is such a thing as a "capital-controlled press" might witness how the press has "covered" the outrageous treatment of mill strikers in northern New Jersey in recent weeks. Here is a conflict that is not marked by massacres such as made Homestead, Ludlow or West Virginia strikes historic, but the great dailies of New York have for many days been giving the event from three columns to a full page, detailing the condition of the unfortunate people and the series of monstrous denials of constitutional rights by the authorities. Editorially, many newspapers have demanded state and federal investigation of the whole wretched business. Sharp-eyed reporters have informed the public of evident dynamite planting to discredit the strikers and similar obvious deceptions. News-pictures, taken by men who have been beaten by ruthless mill hirelings in police uniform, continued for weeks to be plain evidence to the reading public that the stories of cruel clubbing of men and women strikers were true. Some of the news stories of this ghastly travesty on justice have been masterpieces of reporter skill.

The American press is as free to speak the truth concerning matters of interest to the public as it has ever been.

"The editor rather than the press agent is responsible for this situation," the Bureau of Advertising, A. N. P. A., comments on the wholesale defeat of advertising columns. Except when the business office orders graft bunk in over the editor's head.

HUGE HEAD-LINES

THE late Foster Coates, brilliant Hearst editor, long held the opinion that first pages should be made for newsboys to sell. Head type could not be too big, in his opinion. Startle the boy on the street into drawing an armful of papers and leave it to his own devices to sell them, was the Coates' circulation formula.

Years ago a negro murdered "Father" Green, a famous New Yorker, author of the charter of the Greater City, as he walked on Park Avenue one morning. It was a case of mistaken identity. Coates was managing editor of the New York Journal and that paper was first to get the news of the shooting. An excellent report was written and Coates put a head over it that filled half of page one.

New York Evening World at that time had a conservative make-up policy. It used conventional one and two column first page heads and editorially ridiculed Journal box-car type. The World was slow on the murder story. After the Journal had been on the street for fully 20 minutes the World came along with an extra, carrying only meagre details, but displayed a lively, black, three-column head. Coates sent an assistant to the street to ascertain what the newsboys were doing with the two papers, and learned that the World, with its unusual three column head, was on top, blanketing the Journal's huge, but not uncommon, spread. Then Coates turned a trick which probably has no parallel in newspaper history. He made up page one with the column rules running from the outside margin, instead of from the top to the bottom of the page. He turned page one half way around. This gave space for a head-line, "Father Green Murdered," in letters stretching 20 inches across the page and at least 10 inches deep.

Newsboys had never seen such a paper, of course, and they held it up and it sold amazingly. In that edition box-car head type reached its peak.

The stupendous headlines of twenty years ago look absurd today. They are on file at the Fifth Avenue Public Library and one wonders as he inspects them that the public ever stood for such scare lines. The theory that metropolitan city newsboys and not the public are to be "sold" on first pages is equally out of date.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

DR. MAXIMO SOTO HALL, one of the chief editors of La Prensa of Buenos Aires represented La Prensa as a delegate in the Pan-American Congress of Journalists which closed April 13. Dr. Soto Hall was a prominent figure in the Congress and delivered a number of spirited addresses on the topics considered by the congress. On Tuesday, at the invitation of the delegates by unanimous vote, he delivered a brief address on the ethics of journalism, outlining the ideals which should be followed by newspaper directors throughout the three Americas.

DR. MAXIMO SOTO HALL

Dr. Soto Hall is a native of Guatemala and retains his citizenship in that country. He is one of the best known writers in Latin America. From New York he will leave on a journey during which he will visit every country in Latin America, fulfilling a mission given to him by La Prensa to establish more direct contact between La Prensa and those countries and to arrange for the best Latin American writers to collaborate with La Prensa.

In his youth, De Soto Hall was active in the war for the liberation of Cuba from Spanish rule and was an associate of Maceo, Marti, Maximo Gomez and other Cuban liberators.

ON THE MECHANICAL SIDE

ROBERT LUTTRELL has succeeded Frank E. Wade as mechanical superintendent of the Leroy (N. Y.) Gazette-News. Mr. Wade will become a member of the business office staff of the newspaper.

A Serial Story with a Grip

That Terrible Thorne Girl

By FREDERIC ARNOLD KUMMER

is about to be released with Central Press Service. It's the kind of a serial that keeps the readers looking for next day's instalment. Hollywood, adventure, a good girl wrongfully suspected, and final vindication of virtue. The author is widely known for his woman's page stories.

It's about as good as a serial story can be made, and they can be made so good that they get circulation and hold it. And you get it as a part of a wonderful all-purpose service.

SCHOOLS

STUDENTS in the class in news editing at the University of Nevada are acting as judges in a Nevada "better newspaper" contest. The students will select, according to their standards, the most representative daily and the most represnetative weekly in the state. The contest is sponsored by the Nevada State Press Association.

Maurice Hicklin is instructor of the recently organized journalism class at the Humboldt State Teachers College, Arcata, Cal.

Students in journalism at the University of Nevada, Reno, under the direction of Professor A. L. Higginbotham, traveled to Sparks, nearby city, and, without assistance from the regular staff, wrote and edited the issue of the Sparks Tribune for April 9. The Tribune, which is published three times a week, doubled its number of pages for the occasion.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Luther T. Long

MEDICAL science may not agree on the best food for babies, but if you will ask Luther T. Long, publisher of the Huntington (W. Va.) Advertiser, he will tell you there is nothing to compare with printer's ink. He was raised on it. And both he and the Advertiser have thrived on it.

Twenty-five years ago Mr. Long began to stick type, sweep floors, run errands and play the "devil" generally around the Advertiser. He was a little boy then, and the Advertiser was a little newspaper. Both have gone far since then—but not without heroic struggle.

Since Luther T. Long left school at the age of 15 to help his father, Col. J. H. Long, get out his newspaper, the paper has grown from a puny, four page daily to one of the largest and most influential newspapers in the state.

Mr. Long was a boy in knee pants when the Advertiser was a babe in swaddling clothes. The paper then was housed in a ramshackle rented building. The Long family also was housed in a modest rented home. Today both are domiciled in mansions of their own.

From an investment of less than $5,000 the Advertiser has grown to an institution representing an outlay of more than $500,000. It moved into its new home, one of the finest newspaper plants in West Virginia, more than a year ago. Its equipment has expanded from a little drum cylinder press and a few cases of type to a 48 page Hoe press, 13 multi-magazine linotype machines, monotype and Ludlow machines, a complete photo-engraving department, and all the modern equipment of a metropolitan newspaper. From a four page daily, to an average of 20 pages a day, and from eight employes to 125 is some climb!

This, in brief, is the history of Luther T. Long and his newspaper.

Some growth! And all on printer's ink—combined with gray matter, plus elbow grease!

ASSOCIATIONS

W. FRANK McCLURE, of Albert Frank & Co., Chicago, was the speaker at the meeting of the COLUMBUS ADVERTISING CLUB, Columbus, O., Monday. His topic was "The Advertising Man's Laboratory."

An intensive advertising campaign with 200 new members as its objective, was put under way by the ADVERTISING CLUB OF RICHMOND at its last weekly luncheon. The campaign beginning officially last Thursday will close on June 1.

Denver newspapermen, members of the DENVER PRESS CLUB, staged their annual breakfast and gridiron entertainment of the club Sunday, April 18, at the Broadmoor Hotel in Colorado Springs, Colo., where they were the guests of Spencer Penrose.

Charles W. Brooke, senior member of the firm of Brooke, Smith and French, and president of the Better Business Bureau, was elected president of the DETROIT ADCRAFT CLUB at the annual meeting last week. He succeeds Ward H. Marsh. The other officers elected are: Vice-president, Ralph L. Yonkers, advertising manager of the J. L. Hudson Company; treasurer, Elmer Grierson, business manager, American Boy; secretary, Ward Gavett, manager, R. L. Polk & Co. Harold M. Hastings continues as manager of the club. New Directors of the Adcraft Club are: Clinton H. Berry, advertising manager, Union Trust Company; Gordon W. Kingsbury, former manager of the Club, and now advertising manager of the Electrical Refrigeration Corporation; Joseph Scolaro, publishers' representative, and Earl T. Sutton, of McKinney, Marsh & Cushing.

Randall Henderson has purchased the interest of his partner, Myron L. Watson, in the Calexico (Cal.) Chronicle, after a business association of eight years, dating back to the time when they owned the Blythe (Cal.) Herald.

Gateway (Cal.) Gazette founded 18 years ago by A. J. Burdick, has been sold by the original owner, due to ill-health. A. J. Kuhn, with the Gazette for the last eighteen months is the new publisher. He has also purchased the Leader and combined the two papers.

Paul Dutcher, publisher of the Brookings (S. D.) Register has sold his interest to Vern Pratt, former publisher of the Elkton (S. D.) Record.

Wewoka (Okla.) Capitol-Democrat has been sold to local interests and L. G. Hardy has been made managing editor.

Jay (Okla.) Delaware County Chieftain, published for the past several years by Guy A. Tweedle, has been sold to O. E. Butler, newspaperman of Talequah and publisher of the Talequah Arrow-Democrat. O. L. Butler, son of the owner, will have charge of the paper.

BLUE GRASS EDITORS CHOOSE PINEVILLE

Kentucky Group to Hold Mid-Summer Meeting There June 24-26, Executive Committee Decides

The midsummer meeting of the Kentucky Press Association will be held June 24, 25 and 26, at Pineville, Ky., it was announced by the executive committee of the association at a meeting held in Louisville last week. The invitation was extended by Herndon Evans, editor of the Pineville Sun, on behalf of the various organizations in Pineville.

Editors who attend the meeting will be entertained at Middlesboro, 15 miles from Pineville, by Major E. S. Helburn, member of the Kentucky State Highway Commission and by State Senator Joseph Bosworth. Tentative plans calls for an automobile tour over the mountains to Cumberland Gap, Va., one of the most historic settings in the country.

Other places to be visited are to the new Cumberland State Park, Pinnacle Mountain, King Solomon's Mines and to Lincoln Memorial University at Harrowgate, Tenn.

The committee decided that the matter of pooling and pro-rating members' expenses to all association meetings in the future would be discussed at the Pineville meeting, on the theory that some adjustment of expense would be an inducement to all Kentucky editors to "see Kentucky first."

Members attending the meeting of the executive committee included the following: Ben Cozine, Shelbyville, chairman; Cecil Williams, Somerset, president of the association; J. Curtis Alcock, Danville, secretary; Joe Richardson, Glasgow; E. A. Jonas and Malcolm Bayley, Louisville and Herndon Evans, Pineville.

TOLEDO BLADE

The TOLEDO (Ohio) BLADE has a circulation of 120,845. This is about 33-1/3% larger than the circulation of its nearest competitor. Not only does the BLADE lead in circulation, but it leads in every classification of Advertising—Local, National, Classified, Department Store, Automobile.

An indication of the strength of the BLADE may be found in the comparative National Advertising figures for the first three months of this year: The BLADE carried 711,407 lines and the News-Bee 316,386 lines.

The BLADE averages from 150 to 200 Exclusive National accounts every month.

WORCESTER TELEGRAM GAZETTE

The WORCESTER, Mass., TELEGRAM GAZETTE covers Worcester and surrounding territory like a blanket. Its average Daily net paid circulation is 93,652 copies. This is three and a half times as large as its contemporary. In advertising lineage the TELEGRAM GAZETTE leads by a very big margin in every classification.

The national Advertising for the month of March broke all records. It was the largest month of any month in the history of the paper.

WASHINGTON POST

The WASHINGTON (D.C.) POST is the leading morning newspaper at the National Capital. Its big Sunday edition is one of the best result producing mediums in the country.

The POST is delivered into over 90% of the "worth-while" homes in the District of Columbia every day in the year.

The closest students of advertising conditions use the POST in Washington for best results. In circulation the POST has 10,000 more than either the Evening Times or the morning Herald. The March national advertising was the largest March in the history of the paper.

MANCHESTER UNION-LEADER

The MANCHESTER (N.H.) UNION-LEADER has more circulation than all the other daily newspapers in New Hampshire combined. It covers the rich territory of which Manchester is the center and it produces wonderful results for advertisers. New Hampshire can be covered in no other way. Circulation over 30,000.

The national advertising during March was the largest for any month in the history of the paper.

EFFICIENT PROMOTION CAMPAIGN MUST HAVE DEFINITE OBJECTIVES

Overcoming Prejudice Or Indifference To a Publication Should Be Chief Goal—Dramatic Methods Necessary For Best Results

By A. J. SOLMANSON

IN the advertising field at large, a knowledge of the worth of the average publication is slow to penetrate. The advent of new publications into the field, their rapid growth, and the existing congestion of the field are factors which retard recognition. Added to the natural obstacles which many publications meet, there are prejudices which unfortunately arise to the detriment of the publication, such as circulation slighted as off-par in buying power and responsiveness, etc. Such prejudices, however formed, take strong root. They must first be thoroughly understood and then specific measures must be applied to remove them.

To educate the advertising field about the merits of a publication is the purpose of a promotion department. A promotion program must be laid out to accomplish three things. It must mitigate prejudice in the quarters where prejudice is detrimental to progress; it must adopt a dramatic method to accomplish these purposes, and bring the publication, with the pertinent facts of its rise and power, into sharp dramatic focus in the advertising world.

The following is an outline of a promotion program designed to these ends. The campaign includes intensive direct contract work on agency and advertiser executives in co-ordination with the general program.

General Campaign: General Advertising; Trade Paper Advertising.

Direct Agency and Advertiser Contact: Correspondence Campaign; Broadsides Advertising; Reprint follow-ups and other promotion literature.

Liaison Service: Co-ordinating the selling staff to the promotion campaign; Staff Letters; Staff Consultations; Preparation of Salesmen's Equipment; Preparation of New Salesmen Lists; Current Suggestions for Agency Solicitation.

Investigation and Research Service: The Assemblage and Arrangement of Selling Data.

As the general campaign swings into action, agencies and selected advertisers should be subjected to a sustained bombardment by direct mail contact. Currently published advertising would be given double effect by reprints sent direct through the mails within a few days after publication. The promotion literature, as far as possible, should carry the character of news; it should convey fresh information rather than dogmatic and general phrases; it should be made to mean something concrete. A broadside once a month should be employed to sustain the impetus.

Since the campaign would be expected to exert a valuable influence upon the selling organization, and since the staff must follow closely in the wake of the campaign to convert its effort into signed business, the salesmen must be fitted closely into the program.

Weekly and special staff news letters, together with joint conferences, should apprise the salesmen of the developments of the campaign, the amount of money that is being spent currently, and the effects that the various measures are desired to produce. It is desirable to cultivate an aggressive attitude of mind on the part of the staff and dissipate any defensive feeling that may have been occasioned by the encountering of prejudice.

Fresh promotion literature should be added to the salesmen's selling equipment, harmonizing with the other material that would be reaching the field. Helpful assistance could very probably be given in augmenting the salesmen's working lists with selected prospects, and in offering timely suggestions for solicitation.

Before starting a promotion campaign it is well to have a clear conception of just what prejudices are directed toward the publication. A general analysis of the attitude of the big advertisers toward a certain publication was that its chief component was disregard rather than hostility, and that if their antagonism was present, it would be found to be predicated upon rather loose generalities or conditioned by past experiences supposedly but not factually parallel.

A very brief test by means of a blind letter of inquiry addressed to a small selected group of standard advertisers fully supported this view. Some of the significant letters of reply from half a hundred or so received showed that four large advertisers were non-committal and presumably merely indifferent through ignorance of the publication or otherwise. Three of the letters evidenced a spirit that was definitely antagonistic, and the writers of these letters were advertisers who could undoubtedly employ the publication with profit. It was especially noted that no single specific point of objection or criticism was advanced in any of these letters. One letter was conditionally favorable and was received from the one writer in the group who was best informed and best able to exercise sound judgment.

While an inconclusive indifference to the publication was probably the prevailing attitude among the large national advertisers, due in some measure, no doubt, to the failure of educational efforts to penetrate to source, there was, unfortunately, no question that an attitude varying from a persistent disregard to expressed prejudice existed among the agencies.

A similar investigation was made for another publication in the field only about five years. The results showed that wilful disregard of new mediums was a familiar phenomenon in the agency world. Such disregard bore little or no relation to the intrinsic or comparative merits of the medium involved. It was supported by a closed and inflexible attitude of mind where openmindedness and keenness to appraise the medium on its imminent merits might be expected to prevail.

In setting out to contend with this admitted condition, it seemed highly important to understand that the prejudicial state of mind blocking its expansion had very little connection with the facts back of the publication, and would be found to exist, if variously phrased, whatever the facts were. It was equally important to understand, as a corollary, that since the attitude confronted was not a deliberated or rational one, it could not be argued away by the presentation of facts no matter how irrefutable the logic employed, or how masterly the salesmen's presentation. It was then understood that the problem presented went much beyond one of education to the facts, although, of course, such education was a necessary part of the corrective program.

These before related investigations are mentioned merely to emphasize the importance of knowing what the general attitude is toward the publications. Such investigations are conducive to starting promotion campaigns on the right track and toward a definite objective.

Investigations of this kind should also include an analysis of responsiveness, and the economic or price reach of the publication's readers. However strong a theoretical case can be set up to establish the responsiveness of a publication's circulation to its advertising, a thorough, concrete canvass and analysis of advertising responsiveness should be made. It should be conducted over as wide an area as possible, should avoid generalities, should seek specific facts, and should, where possible, identify all sources of data. It is generally known that space selling and promotion must be based upon an accurate knowledge of the circulation's economic range. Without comprehensive data on this subject, the selling program must be, to some measure, hit-or-miss, and may involve much futile effort if the actual limits of the range, whatever they may be, are exceeded.

If the price reach is found to be comparatively short, there is, of course, no desire to operate in a fool's paradise. Accounts belonging to a possible higher circulation range might be sold but the effort to hold them without productive results would be wasteful, and in the end unavailing. Concentration of effort within the ascertained range, having the merits of efficiency of effort and confidence in the circulation's productiveness, is desirable from any approach. Startling facts that would serve to expand the productive price reach might be uncovered on the other hand by investigation.

Other phrases of promotion could be executed according to the character of the campaign, but the suggestions as before related are of paramount importance in making a promotion campaign productive.

ROCHESTER DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE

The ROCHESTER (N.Y.) DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE is the only morning newspaper in Rochester. Its recent purchase of the Herald gave the DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE by far the largest circulation in Rochester. It has the prestige and standing and it produces the greatest results for Advertisers. On "keyed" copy the DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE demonstrates its pulling power and the confidence and responsiveness of its readers. The National advertising in March was not only the largest March, but the second largest month in the history of the paper. Circulation over 75,000.

SYRACUSE POST-STANDARD

The SYRACUSE (N.Y.) POST-STANDARD blankets Syracuse and Central and Northern New York. It produces great results because, unlike the other Syracuse papers, its big circulation has been built up without the use of contests or schemes, but purely on its merits as a newspaper. Wise advertisers use the POST-STANDARD in Syracuse, many of them exclusively.

The national advertising for March was the largest March in the history of the paper, and 20% bigger than last March.

Circulation over 55,000 net Daily, 60,000 net Sunday.

SCRANTON REPUBLICAN

The SCRANTON (Pa.) REPUBLICAN delivers a paper into practically every "worth-while" home in Scranton and surrounding territory as far as Carbondale.

Local agents of national advertisers always request that the REPUBLICAN be used because it has no waste circulation and because it produces results. It leads in many classifications.

Circulation over 34,000 Daily.

TOPEKA STATE-JOURNAL

The TOPEKA (Kan.) STATE JOURNAL is the only afternoon newspaper in Topeka. It is "home-delivered" by Washburn College students into every home of standing and purchasing power in and around Topeka. Its news and editorial pages carry conviction and its advertising pages bring results. Topeka cannot be covered without the STATE JOURNAL.

ISOLATION OF U. S. NEWS MEN ABROAD REFLECTED IN STORIES THEY SEND

Editor of Greek Daily Says Inability of Many Writers to Speak Language of Country Hurts Quality of News—Many Stories Untold

By ADAMANTIOS TH. POLYZOIDES
Editor, Atlantis Greek Daily, New York

IT is not very often that we hear people speak ill of the American correspondent abroad. Quite the contrary seems to be the rule. We think that the representatives of the American press in foreign lands, not only rise above anything and anybody that foreign newspapers put up, and we maintain that in point of dash, resourcefulness and sheer professional excellence, the American correspondent has no match. Naturally by so doing, we ignore the fact that England is still the leader in the field, and we are also apt to minimize the excellent work done by Italian and French correspondents in foreign fields.

And so when the other day an American publisher, John H. Fahey of the Worcester Evening Post, came out boldly before the Pan-American Press Congress in Washington, and frankly denounced 50 per cent of the correspondence from Europe as irresponsible, sensational and superficial, he created a stir among the profession, and opened an interesting discussion, whether he was aware of the fact or not.

The question then is this:

Are we getting what we are entitled to, from our American correspondents in Europe? Have we the right personnel for this most important branch of the service? Does the American public receive from Europe that kind of news which is most interesting, and knowledge of which is so important at a time when the various sections of the globe are daily being brought closer by radio and cable?

Now, much as I dislike becoming personal, I must say that I keep track of what is published in the leading newspapers of Europe. Eighteen years ago EDITOR & PUBLISHER gave me credit for keeping close watch on what is going on on the other side. I was a newcomer then in America, and I was thinking that with the passing of time I would be used to finding all the foreign news I wanted in the New York papers. At that time, however, I was depending for news on the foreign press. I am doing the same thing ever since, because the majority of the American correspondents in Europe, and I may add in Latin America, have not as a rule given us the news to which I think the majority of the American reading public is entitled. We are getting long dispatches; we are getting, I must add, some very excellent critical correspondence; some of our correspondents are doing a work which is splendid beyond mere praise. All of this, however, is exceptional, and as a rule most of the cabled matter that we get from abroad, falls very short of American requirements, and should have no place in our papers.

On my desk, as I write, I have some of the foremost newspapers of Europe and Latin America. My ability to read French, German, Italian, Spanish and Russian, enables me to find a wealth of information and editorial comment concerning questions of some importance to the American reader. And yet this information and this comment somehow as a rule escapes the attention of hte American correspondent in Paris, Berlin, Rome, Madrid and Buenos Aires, not to say Moscow.

I remember the time when the three American seaplanes flew to Europe. The Latin American papers gave the matter such space, that it made the account of Captain Franco's flight to Argentina a few weeks ago, as it appeared in our papers a trifling one by comparison.

Sometime ago an important controversy arose between Spain and Argentina, regarding the export of Spanish fruit to the Latin American republic, and the export of Argentine beef to Spain. That was an important bit of news for the American public, as the controversy teemed with statistics and other matter of considerable value. And yet not a word of that have I seen in our press. About that time Spain organized a fair of its export merchandise; that was under the auspices of the United Spanish Chambers of Commerce. A very important thing. Not a word in the American press.

There is a wealth of material concerning America in the French, German and Russian press. Some of the best stories about the turmoil in China appears in the Moscow papers. And yet our correspondents very seldom pay any attention to it.

Now what is the explanation of all this, some wonderful scoops of our correspondents always expected?

The main draw back of the American correspondent in Europe is his aloofness, and his isolation from the press, the public, and the life of the country in which our man operates. There is no better source of information than a newspaper office located in the country wherein one happens to represent an American paper. Yet how many American newspapermen establish relations with their colleagues abroad? How many of them have seen the inside of a European newspaper office? How many of them have an absolute command of the language of the country where they represent us? How many of them read carefully their foreign papers? Very few, and they are the ones who are a credit to their papers and to the profession. The rest assume the snobbish and highbrow airs of prewar diplomats, they confine their daily visits to the Propoganda Department of the local Foreign Office, sometimes they take tea in the Embassy, they occasionally go to Parliament, in order not to be there whenever something of importance breaks up, and for the most part are with American friends, having a pleasant time, reading the papers from home, and wishing they had an assignment to some other country to break the monotony.

The American correspondent, of the type referred to, considers himself as above his class; he thinks he is superceding his Ambassador. And when in a pinch for news, he falls victim to the first rumor given him confidentially by a casual acquaintance.

This situation may be remedied, and the remedy is comparatively easy. Only experienced newspapermen should be sent abroad, and that after a severe scrutiny as to their ability and skill. They should know thoroughly the language of the country to which they are accredited; they should live the life of the country and familiarize themselves with conditions. They should try to cover all kinds of news and they should subordinate sensationalism to real facts and their intrinsic value and importance.

No matter how complete our political isolation, no matter how reserved our official attitude towards Europe, we are living at a time when better international relations, and better understanding of the most conflicting aims form the keystone of future human progress. The American press is in a position to accomplish wonders in that direction. Some of our best foreign correspondents are showing the way to their lesser brethren. We need a first rate representation abroad, all along the line. We can, and should have it.

NORRISTOWN TIMES-HERALD

Norristown is a separate and distinct community by itself. Though only eighteen miles from Philadelphia, the Philadelphia papers have practically no circulation in Norristown. It can only be covered by using the NORRISTOWN TIMES-HERALD which is the big dominant newspaper in this rich territory—Circulation 13,000—over three times that of its competitor.

The National advertising during March was not only 37% greater than March, 1925, but was the largest month in the history of the paper.

JAMESTOWN POST

The JAMESTOWN (N.Y.) POST has about 50% more circulation than any other Jamestown newspaper. It blankets its field and of course leads in every classification, local, foreign and classified. Many advertisers use it exclusively to cover South-western New York.

The National advertising in March was the largest month in the history of the paper.

PAUL BLOCK, Inc., Publishers Representatives, New York Chicago Boston Detroit Philadelphia

NEWARK STAR-EAGLE

The NEWARK (N.J.) STAR-EAGLE broke all records in March.

The circulation average was 90,148 net paid. For April the average circulation will probably reach 95,000 net paid Daily.

Local advertising was the largest March in the history of the paper.

National advertising was 20% larger than any individual month in the history of the paper.

In the city of Newark proper there are about 105,000 homes. The STAR-EAGLE sells 56,-407 copies in Newark against 54,973 sold by our contemporary.

To cover Newark, Advertisers must use both newspapers.

DULUTH HERALD

The DULUTH (Minn.) HERALD is the only Evening newspaper in Duluth, and has a circulation of 42,390, which is nearly 50% greater than the circulation of the morning newspaper although the HERALD sells at 15c. per week for six evening papers, against the morning paper selling at 10c. a week for seven morning papers (six Daily and one Sunday).

The HERALD circulates more papers in Duluth than there are houses. There are few cities in the entire country where one paper covers its field so thoroughly as does the HERALD in Duluth.

During the month of March alone, the HERALD (six days a week) carried nearly one-half million more lines of advertising than the other paper (Daily and Sunday combined).

Practically every National Advertiser that goes to Duluth uses the HERALD, most of them exclusively.

MEMPHIS NEWS-SCIMITAR

The MEMPHIS, (Tenn.) NEWS SCIMITAR is the leading evening newspaper of Memphis. Its net paid daily circulation is now over 60,000 copies. In the city and immediate suburbs, the net paid circulation is close to 47,000 net paid. The DAILY NEWS SCIMITAR carries more department store advertising than any other Daily Memphis newspaper.

LANCASTER NEW ERA

Lancaster, Pa., has a population of 53,150, and has three daily newspapers.

It is usual for an Advertiser to use but one newspaper in a city of this size.

The Evening NEW ERA is the logical choice in Lancaster because it has a circulation of 22,122, which is over 50% larger than the circulation of either of the other newspapers.

The National Advertising during March was not only over 25% greater than last March, but it was the largest individual month in the history of the paper.

The Local Advertising increase for March, 1926 over March, 1925 was 27%.

BEGINNINGS OF JOURNALISM TEACHING IN U. S. TRACED BY PROFESSOR LEE

(Extracts from a report on "Schools of Journalism," presented by Dr. James Melvin Lee, Director, Department of Journalism, New York University, before First Pan-American Congress of Journalists, Washington, April 7-13.)

THE earliest American book to deal with the editing and making of newspapers was published by Charles C. Chatfield & Co., New Haven, Conn., in 1872. On its title page appeared the following, "Hints to Young Editors, by an Editor." The preface says that it is "the first text book" and it was published because "journalism is now making such demands on educated young men that a few chapters on its practical working cannot be uncalled for." Long out of print I was able to obtain a copy only when the library of that newspaper poet, Eugene Field, was publicly sold.

Dr. J. M. Lee

The book, however, is in error when it refers to instruction at Cornell University as being the first to prepare the newspaper man for his work. Three years before General Robert E. Lee, then president of Washington College at Lexington, Va., had recommended to his board of trustees the establishment of "fifty scholarships for young men proposing to make printing or journalism their profession." To make the technical instruction practical the faculty arranged with a local printing office for the admission of a "limited number of boys without charge of cost to the college."

This pioneer work by General Lee can scarcely be said to have been welcomed by the working press. Of the success of such instruction the leading editors of the time were extremely skeptical. Indeed, about the only important editor who openly and publicly advocated special training for journalism was Whitelaw Reid, editor of the New York Tribune. On April 4, 1872 he delivered at New York University a lecture on "The School of Journalism"—a lecture which was later printed in Scribner's Magazine. His views differed from those of General Lee in that practical instruction in the printing plant was omitted and was left to be obtained when young men had obtained active employment on a newspaper. "No man," said Mr. Reid, "ought to be an authority about a newspaper office who does not understand at least the rudiments of typography; but for these the best school is the composing room." Both General Lee and Whitelaw Reid were unanimous that "one of the best results of the proposed collegiate training would be the fostering of a professional feeling"—to quote the words of the latter.

In suggesting the outlines of the work which a school of journalism might well lay out for its students Mr. Reid put first the study of political parties in the student's own country. A study of political parties should prepare the student for the intelligent discussion of every new phase demanded by politics. Mr. Reid emphasized the importance of a study of practical politics rather than theoretical politics and pointed out that many of the college courses in this subject were limited to the latter.

In his second course Mr. Reid went a little farther down the trail of history when he said, "No young man fitting himself for journalism should fail to add a comprehensive knowledge of the entire history of his own country, for which, fortunately, he will find the materials a little better digested and more accessible."

The third course which Mr. Reid advocated for the curriculum of a school of journalism was a study of the general history of the world. How true today are his words though spoken in 1872.

> Whatever tells how governments have borne the stress of unexpected peril, and men have prospered, suffered, advanced, or lost ground in this or that condition of rule, will furnish invaluable guidance for any intelligent discussion of today's problems of public affairs.

The fourth subject suggested by Mr. Reid was a study of the fundamental principles of common, constitutional, and international law. He pointed out its need in the discussion of "the international obligations involved in the French arms question." In passing it may be remarked that this need mentioned by Mr. Reid is even greater today in the newspaper world than when he outlined courses of study for the newspaper men of tomorrow.

Though Mr. Reid put political economy fifth in his list he practically put it first in importance. He gave his reasons as follows:

> To the newspaper reader, questions of banking and currency, of the growth and management of national debts, of the present insane recklessness of municipal indebtedness, of taxation, of insurance, and the like, perpetually present themselves; and he looks to the editor for an elucidation of each that shall be popular in form, yet fairly abreast of the latest and best thought of the men who have made it the study of their lives.

Mr. Reid suggested his sixth subject in the form of a question:

> Might not a sixth subject of the most careful study in a course of training for journalistic work be fitly found in some such essays on exact reasoning as should make our popular writing conform a little to the severe processes of logic?

If one examines the catalogue of the modern school of journalism he may not find a course in logic specifically listed but if he reads the description of the courses carefully he will find that logic is taken up, usually in the class devoted to the study of editorials.

In his seventh group Mr. Reid put the study of modern languages. He mentioned specifically French, German, and Spanish. But of course he put first the study of the language in which the newspaper is printed. For the school in the United States it would of course be English. Of the manuscripts coming to the copy desk in New York, Mr. Reid made this observation to justify courses in writing news, features, etc.:

> Yet the fact remains that of the average manuscripts received in almost any of our New York dailies, from professional or semi-professional writers, nor more than one-half can be safely put in type without previous careful revision for more errors in grammar. To use the right words and only enough of them, to say what is meant so simply and directly that the sentence goes like a bullet straight to its mark, and, having said it, to stop—that, alas! is the achievement of scarcely one in three-score. To secure some approximation to it is the daily toil and tribulation of every sore-tried office editor; the writer who fairly reaches it has already made good his place beside the foremost.

In his eighth group Mr. Reid included criticisms of books, paintings, music, and drama. Finally Mr. Reid put a study of modern scientific and metaphysical thought and of course a comprehensive study of English literature, which, to quote Mr. Reid, "every man of letters begins in his teens and closes only with his life."

To these courses often called cultural in character—others purely technical in character have been added to meet changed conditions. To what extent the so-called practical courses in printing, circulation, advertising, management, etc., should be added is a problem which each school in later years has had to decide for itself. The pivotal point in such a decision has usually been the needs of the section in which the school is located.

The only important omission in the curriculum outlined by Mr. Reid may be found in the study of the history of Journalism. But doubtless such a study was so obvious when Mr. Reid was discussing the importance of history that he did not think it necessary to mention it by name.

One fact should not be lost sight of: too much must not be expected from the school of journalism. The graduate of the United States Military Academy at West Point must prove his ability on the field before he is put in command of an army. Just what might be accomplished from special training for journalism was well pointed out by Whitelaw Reid in the address from which I have quoted so extensively:

> West Point cannot make a soldier, and New York University cannot give us an assurance of an editor. But West Point can give the training, the discipline, and the special knowledge without which the born soldier would find this best efforts crippled, and with which men, not born to military greatness, may still do valuable service. This university may yet do as much for the embryo Bryants, Greeleys, Woods, Raymonds, Ritchies, and Hales, who are to transform American journalism into a profession, and emulate the laurels of those earlier leaders, with larger opportunities on a wider stage to more beneficent ends.

Joseph Pulitzer of the New York World may have been influenced by these words of Mr. Reid for about 20 years later he was asked the following question by a newspaper man of Philadelphia, "Granting ability and aptitude, can oral and written instruction accomplish as much for the future journalist, as for the future doctor or divine?" In reply Mr. Pulitzer said:

> I see no reason why a chair of journalism, filled by a man of real talent and character, could not be made beneficial. Of course, the highest order of talent or capacity could no more be taught by a professor of journalism than could the military genius of a Hannibal, Caesar, or Bonaparte, be taught in military academies. Still, military academies are of value, and so could a chair of journalism be made beneficial, if filled by a man of brains this subject, and think well of the idea, though and experience. I have thought seriously upon I know it is the habit of newspaper men to ridicule it. The value of the idea would depend upon its execution.

The result of this serious thought of Mr. Pulitzer may be found in the school that bears his name at Columbia University.

Mr. Pulitzer insisted that "business instruction of any sort should not, would not, and must not form any part of the work of the college of journalism." In that respect the work of the Pulitzer School of Journalism at Columbia differs from that of the other schools and departments connected with universities offering technical instruction in journalism.

What these schools and departments of journalism are now doing does not belong to this informal chat in which, as a historian of the press, I have tried to sketch the background of the cradle days.

New Asks Air Mail Bids

Announcement was made this week by Postmaster General New that bids will be opened at the Post Office Department at noon on June 14, for the proposed air mail route from Cleveland, to Louisville and return. In addition to Cleveland and Louisville the proposed route will serve the cities of Akron, Columbus, Dayton and Cincinnati, O.

The Price of Leadership

We Pay It Gladly

How much does it cost to publish a good daily advertising medium?

That's not just another crazy query. Quite the reverse. The answer is logical to the point of obviousness.

Assuming that proper intelligence and discrimination are exercised in making disbursements, the greater the cost the better the medium.

The Dallas News probably invests more money every day in brains and operating facilities than any other newspaper in the huge area west of the Mississippi and south of St. Louis and Kansas City.

Its organization of more than 500 people, at the home plant, is the largest in the Southwest. One out of each 80 families in Dallas has a representative in this body of workers.

The home of The News is visited annually by thousands of sightseers and students. A courtesy man devotes his time to escorting visitors through the plant.

What has all this to do with the value of News advertising space? A very great deal indeed. Even more than The News circulation leadership.

Only by maintaining an establishment of outstanding character can this paper put the stuff into its pages that will guarantee outstanding influence.

The price of leadership is inevitable, but we pay it gladly.

The News today is fairly launched upon the most brilliant era of accomplishment and influence in its history. It is the greatest newspaper its field has ever known.

Allen S. Olmste representing the Liberties Union, provision for dep any time limit as who came to the U years ago.

He introduced as Prof Ernst Freund in the University of Chicago. Professor Freund found several objections to the pending bills, chief of which was placing the burden of proof on the alien.

Direct Evidence Barred

"This makes the burden of proof on the alien more severe than it has ever been before. The Supreme Court has upheld the present law, but you are going to the absolute limit in this proposal, and I think there might arise do[u]bt as to its legality," he told the committee. "I also question the provision that the Secretary of Labor, who alone has authority to render decisions in such cases, is debarred from taking direct evidence. This is an extraordinary provision.

"Further, the bill would subject to mandatory deportation many persons who entered the United States legally and the provision placing on them the affirmative burden of proof would work great injustice in many cases where such proof could not be obtained. It subjects the unnaturalized alien to the most severe measures. The Government should legitimately bear the burden of proof if it desires to deport aliens long resident in this country."

Professor Freund also raised the question of the alien who cannot gain admittance to his native country after being away for over a 10-year period. Norway and several other countries have such provisions. "Can you justify this deportation as against the nation to whom you are returning the alien?" he asked. "The provision is all right from the viewpoint of American constitutional law, but they may possibly be held in conflict with the jus gentium, or law of nations. This whole problem may come before the World Court for decision. It is bound to come up for international negotiation sooner or later."

EMIGRANT INSPECTION TO BE DISCUSSED

Special from Monitor Bureau

LONDON, March 15—The complications of the present methods of inspecting emigrants on board ship are shown in a document which has been sent to governments by the International Labor Office of the League of Nations, in preparation for the next session of the International Labor Conference.

This session, which will be the eighth to be held, will open at Geneva on May 25 and will discuss an international agreement on the question of simplifying such inspection.

'OUTLAW GYPSY' BUS LINES ARE DESCRIBED

WASHINGTON, March 24 (AP)—"Outlaw gypsy" motorbus and truck operators "who maneuver their routes," particularly in New England and the eastern states, to gain an interstate commerce status "and thus escape regulation," were described yesterday to the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

Proponents of a pending bill to regulate interstate bus and truck operations urged the actions of the "outlaw" as a reason for immediate enactment, but opponents of the measure said it would obstruct constructive development of truck transportation.

Alonso Williams, representing the United Electric Railway of Rhode Island, said "gypsy" truck men competing with lines of that company run one mile from Woonsocket to the Massachusetts border, "go 250 feet along a country road, turn around, come back to Rhode Island and run to Providence."

He also said truck operators on the Woonsocket-Pawtucket route run one mile into Connecticut "along a road on which there are three houses—two deserted."

Efforts of the Rhode Island State Commission to regulate these operators, he said, "to tax them or safeguard the public, are met with the contention, upheld by the courts, that they are engaged in interstate commerce, subject to restriction only by the Federal Government and the Federal Government has no laws to regulate them."

Five per cent of the liquor revenue will be devoted to aviation, the army and the navy. More Turks recently have gone into the liquor traffic than ever before in Turkey's history. They have displaced the Greeks as owners of saloons in Constantinople as well as in manufacturing alcoholics. The Moslem prohibitionists regretfully admit the increasing inclination of the Turks toward strong drink.

AMERICAN-TURKISH PACT TO BE PUBLISHED

WASHINGTON, March 25 (AP)—Publication of the long-pending treaty to re-establish diplomatic and commercial relations between the United States and Turkey has been ordered by the Senate at the request of the Foreign Relations Committee.

This pact, known as the Lausanne Treaty, was submitted to the Senate May 3, 1924, and has been reported favorably by the committee. It is opposed vigorously by a majority of the Democrats and Administration leaders concede there is no probability of its ratification, at least at this session.

Accompanying this treaty was an extradition pact which also was ordered made public. The general contents of both pacts have been published.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 25 (AP)—Coincident with enlarged privileges for women in Turkey more of them are landing in prison than ever in the history of the country. Special Correspondence

AT THE New York Central station here is a bootblacking chair operated by a little Italian, Frank. For many years he has been on duty here, until his hair has grown quite gray. People have come to consider him one of the fixtures of the station.

The station is not a crowded one, and the holiday travel furnishes one of the few busy times during the year. It is a time when a business man is looking for extra trade, and it might be expected that Frank would consider it his harvest time.

When the writer entered the station she found Frank busy at his chair. His face was beaming and he seemed to take unusual care with his customer. Then the cause was learned. He was giving everyone who wanted it a shine free of charge, and said it was his Christmas present. It was his way of celebrating, and the public, as he said, is his family. He wanted to give something, and he offered the best he had. Many a traveler learned of that loving act and left the station with a humbler thought. To one at least it revealed the true spirit of Christmas.

CONFISCATION BILL URGED IN GERMANY

BERLIN, March 25 (AP)—Germany probably will hold a national plebiscite to decide whether the Reich and its component states shall confiscate, without compensation, the properties of the former ruling houses.

An official estimate published showed that 12,500,000 voters have entered their names on lists demanding the submission to the Reichstag of a bill providing for such confiscation. This is 8,500,000 more than the number of signatures necessary to compel the Reichstag to act on such a measure. Should the Reichstag fail to adopt this bill, as it seems likely that it must, the decision must next be submitted to a national plebiscite. In such a plebiscite 50 per cent of the total electorate, or, roughly, 20,000,000 voters, must take part in order to make the plebiscite's decision effective.

MEXICAN SCHOOL TO AID BUSINESS

Special from Monitor Bureau

NEW YORK, March 25—American manufacturers will feel the benefits from the strong educational program now being furthered by President Calles in Mexico, a group of business men were told by Dr. Jose M. Puig Casaurance, secretary of education for the Mexican Government who was the chief speaker at a luncheon given at the Railroad Club here under the auspices of the Mexican Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

"Every Mexican freed from poverty and ignorance is a potential consumer of United States products," Dr. Puig Casaurance said. "The Department of Education in Mexico is fighting a very har battle, but it will result in great benefit to the United States manufacturers.

"After 12 years of war, we have found almost desolation and ruin in Mexico. In order to transform the land into a real country, a real nation, we have very difficult task before us; but we are working toward a point of realization when those of us who are more fortunate in Mexico will be ashamed to remain happy when thousands of others are absolutely miserable, because of ignorance and poverty.

"There are now 1,200,000 boys and girls in school in Mexico. When President Calles started his educational program, there were only 250 rural schools in the whole country. Now there are 3000. The number of students in the University of Mexico, in Mexico City has increased from 5000 to 10,000 during this time. By education we are hoping to transform the negative units of Mexico into active units and to prepare the way for a better understanding between Mexico and the United States than there has ever been."

The problems of the Department of Education in Mexico were contrasted with that of educators of this country by Dr. Lester M. C. Wilson, assistant director of Teachers' College at Columbia University.

"The Department of Education in Mexico has not only to offer education, but to persuade the people that they want education," Dr. Wilson said. "It is the task not simply to teach the Indians to read and write, but to create conditions wherein a knowledge of reading and writing will be worth while, to fill these people again with the hope and ambitions to carry on the industrial progress that will make them happy."

Samuel M. Vauclain, president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, commended President Calles and the Mexican Government in its educational accomplishments and expressed his confidence in the ability of Mexico to rehabilitate itself.

Mr. Vauclain said that since 1921 the company he represents has done $8,000,000 worth of business in Mexico, and that less than $2,000,000 of this remains due. He added that the fact that Mexico is privileged to receive additional credit from his company as fast as she pays up this debt, is an indication of the confidence which is felt in Mexico's desire and ability to do the right thing.

James W. Gerard, formerly American Ambassador to Germany, spoke of the progress Mexico was making toward the happiness and prosperity of her people and predicted that even greater progress would be made in the future.

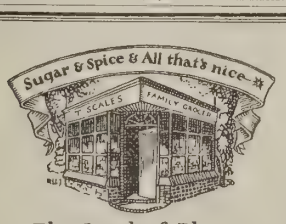
TRADE UNIONS FEDERATION TO CONFER ON IMMIGRATION

Co-operation of International Labor Office of League of Nations Promised at World Conference to Be Held in London May 18-21

Special from Monitor Bureau

LONDON, March 5—Some time ago a movement was initiated by the International Federation of Trade Unions at Amsterdam with the object of convening a fully representative world conference of labor to discuss various problems connected with emigration and immigration. It was agreed that if the most fruitful results were to be obtained from such a conference it would be necessary to have the co-operation of the International Labor Office of the League of Nations. In this way the various governments and national employers' organizations would be brought into consultation through their representatives on the governing body of the office.

The preliminary negotiations on the matter have now been completed, and a definite decision to hold the conference in London from May 18 to 21 next has been taken. If all the bodies to be invited agree to send representatives, it will be one of the most remarkable assemblies of its kind ever brought together. These bodies include the International Labor Office, all the national trade union organizations affiliated to the Amsterdam Federation, the national Labor movements affiliated to the Labor and Socialist Political International, and trade union and other labor bodies not affiliated to the internationals—chiefly in the United States, Mexico, India, Japan, Brazil, and Australia.



The agenda will be wide in its scope. Much attention will be given to the post-war policy followed by the American Government in restricting immigration to definite quotas from selected countries. The rigid restrictions on the entry of aliens into various other countries also will be discussed, as well as the definite prohibition of the entry of people of colored races into certain countries. The effect of these restrictions on the social and economic conditions in those countries which have hitherto relied on emigration as the solution of the problem of surplus population also will be considered.

MAINE DEMOCRACY FOR DRY ENFORCEMENT

PORTLAND, Me., March 25 (AP)—Maine Democrats face the June primary campaign today on a platform of impartial law enforcement, business economy, and aid to agriculture and the fisheries.

The platform was adopted at the close yesterday of the biennial state convention. Earlier, delegates heard Representative William A. Oldfield of Arkansas, Democratic whip of the House, predict success for his party at the polls this year. Representative Oldfield declared the Democrats would carry the House and Senate next fall.

The resolution putting the convention on record in favor of strict enforcement of prohibition declared that "one of the fundamentals of our Government is respect for and obedience to legally constituted authority. We therefore pledge ourselves to an honest and impartial enforcement of the prohibitory and all other laws."

CONTRACT FOR DAILY'S $400,000 PLANT LET

Charlotte (N. C.) Observer Home to Be Ready for Occupancy October 15—New Equipment to Be Installed

Contract for the new home of the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer, to be built at the intersection of South Tryon and West Stonewall streets, has been let to the J. A. Jones Construction Company, of Charlotte.

The building and lot on which it is erected will represent an investment of approximately $400,000. When the building is finished it will be one of the best and most modern newspaper plants in the South. The contractors promise to have the building substantially completed by Sept. 15 and fully completed by Oct. 15 of this year.

The building will be three stories high with a basement and will be constructed mainly of light face brick and Indiana limestone, the limestone furnishing an ornamental finish to the front. The building will face 50 feet on Tryon street and will extend back parallel a distance of 185 feet to a 17½-foot alleyway that leads to the tracks of the Columbia division of the Southern Railway. On the south side of the building in the rear there will be an "L" or wing, also with a basement. It will be 103 feet from where the wing joins the main structure southward, and 153 feet from Stonewall street to the railway tracks.

On the first floor of the building at the front will be located the general business offices, including the accounting, circulation and classified advertising departments, along with private executive offices. There will be also toward the rear a mezzanine floor, on which will be located the display advertising department, along with private executive offices, and general conference rooms.

On the second floor front will be the offices of the publisher and editor, the reportorial and editorial departments, quarters for the managing editor, the Associated Press and other departments connected with the general editorial department. The rear of these offices will be located the composing and stereotyping rooms, with communicating passages giving quick access between the two main departments.

On the third floor will be located an auditorium, which will be utilized by the Observer establishment as a conference room, a room for staff meetings, or other occasions on which the personnel of the Observer establishment may be brought together.

This room will also be available for meetings of civic organizations.

A feature of the architectural design of the building is that a spacious room has been provided for the comfort and pleasure of the boys who carry and deliver the paper, offering protection from the inclemencies of the weather.

The basement, which will contain nearly 20,000 square feet of space, will be utilized as the press room, so designed as to give maximum efficiency and convenience in getting the finished paper to the mailing rooms. The mailing rooms will be located in the "L" extension of the building.

The mechanical facilities of the plant will be increased considerably, particularly in the matter of presses and composing equipment.

A feature of the plant will be a garage where the Observer's fleet of trucks will be kept.

Stern is publisher of the Camden Courier, evening, and the Morning Post, the only two newspapers in Camden, N. J. Six years ago, he was editor and publisher of the Springfield (Ill.) News-Record.

A young man, he gathered about him an unusually able force. Because he wanted to live back East, he sold the News-Record, jumped in his automobile, and drove East to find another paper. Within a short time, he was back in Springfield to induce most of his former staff to come with him on the new venture of the Camden Courier.

Among those who joined him were: Harry T. Saylor, city editor, now managing editor of the Camden Courier and Morning Post; Elmer C. Pratt, mechanical superintendent of both Camden papers (and incidentally, Pratt has been associated with Stern on six newspapers during the last 14 years); Frank J. Kinsella, advertising manager; Alfred Neef, auditor; George Keary, promotion manager; C. C. Testerman, night composing room foreman; Waldo R. McAmis, copy reader; Sam Laird, telegraph editor; Paul Kienzle and Irvin Burroughs.

It was six years ago that this migration began, and all this transplanted Springfield crew are still together in Camden, except for Kienzle who returned to Springfield to become circulation manager of the Illinois State Journal, and Burroughs, who is in the automobile business in Camden.

The staff shows even better form in the East than in the Middle West. A few months ago the Courier bought out its only competitior, the Camden Post Telegram, which is now being published from the Courier's enlarged plant, as a morning newspaper.

Incidentally, there has been growth in other ways besides circulation. Men of the Springfield group, who were not married when they came East, are now married and have families.

At a "Springfield re-union" a few weeks ago, noses were counted and combined "transplanted families" showed 41 men, women and children, now living in Camden and its suburbs.

NEW ENCYCLOPÆDIA EDITOR

James L. Garvin, Noted London Journalist, Appointed to Post

James L. Garvin, editor of the London Observer, and prominent British journalist, was this week appointed editor of the Encyclopædia Britannica.

Mr. Garvin was born in Birkenhead, England, in 1868. In 1895 he began writing for the Fortnightly Review, and in 1899 joined the staff of the Daily Telegraph in London. After writing many trenchant articles which attracted widespread notice, he became editor of Outlook, which he conducted from 1905 to 1907.

Soon after that he was asked by Lord Northcliffe to edit the Observer. When Lord Astor acquired control of the Observer he retained Garvin as its head.

During the World War he wrote an entire page weekly on the war situation which was among the most widely read and influential contributions to war-time journalism.

Mr. Garvin is also a historian. A "Life of Joseph Chamberlain," from his pen, will soon be published.

TRADE CONFERENCE PLANNED

To Be Special Feature of the A.A.C.W. Philadelphia Convention

An international trade conference will be made an outstanding feature of the 22nd annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, it was decided at a meeting of members of the program committee in New York last week. The convention is to be held in Philadelphia, June 19-24. The trade conference will occupy the entire day, June 23.

Representatives from Great Britain, France, South Africa, England, Canada and the United States will address the conference. Senator Paul Dupuy, editor of the Paris Petit Parisien; Marcel Knecht, Le Matin, and M. Renier of the Havas Agency, have accepted invitations to speak for France.

H. G. Sayward, of H. G. Sayward Limited, London advertising agency, attended last week's meeting. He is assisting in naming British conference speakers.

Others present were H. H. Charles, Charles Advertising Service, New York, chairman of the international program committee; W. G. Hildebrandt, of the Gotham Advertising Agency; Earl Pearson, A. A. C. W. manager; R. E. Hutchinson, Washington representative, and O. K. Davis, secretary of the Foreign Trade Council.

Dr. Julius Klein, director of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce of the Department of Commerce, Washington, will preside at sessions of the trade conference in Philadelphia.

Danville Daily Holds Building Show

The Danville (Ill.) Commercial News, which last year promoted a successful Building Show staged its second event at the Armory last week with exhibitors and display space nearly double that of 1925. The show continued three days. No admission was charged. An 18-page section filled with builders' advertisements was printed on the opening day.

John L. Stewart

JOHN L. STEWART, publisher of the Observer and Reporter at Washington, Pa., and the Beaver (Pa.) Times and the Beaver Falls Tribune has just returned from a trip around the world. He was accompanied by Mrs. Stewart and daughter Lucy Donnan Stewart, and by Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Caldwell, of Washington, Pa.

John L. Stewart

The party left Washington, Pa., Nov. 10, 1925, sailing from San Francisco about two weeks later. The main points visited on the voyage were the Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Japan, China, India, Egypt, the Holy land Italy, Spain and France.

During the trip Mr. Stewart wrote for The Observer and the Reporter a series of articles, Impressions of an Editor on a Tour of the World, which were confined largely to the political and economic conditions in the places visited as he found them. The articles were widely read and most favorably commented upon.

In many of the cities visited Mr. Stewart was entertained by newspapermen and was frequently importuned for an expression, from an American viewpoint, on international questions. In Yokohama especially he was accorded a veritable ovation on arrival at the port, and was compelled to submit to repeated interviews on the subject of the attitude of the American press toward the Island Empire and her people.

Small classified ads in Editor & Publisher penetrate the field.

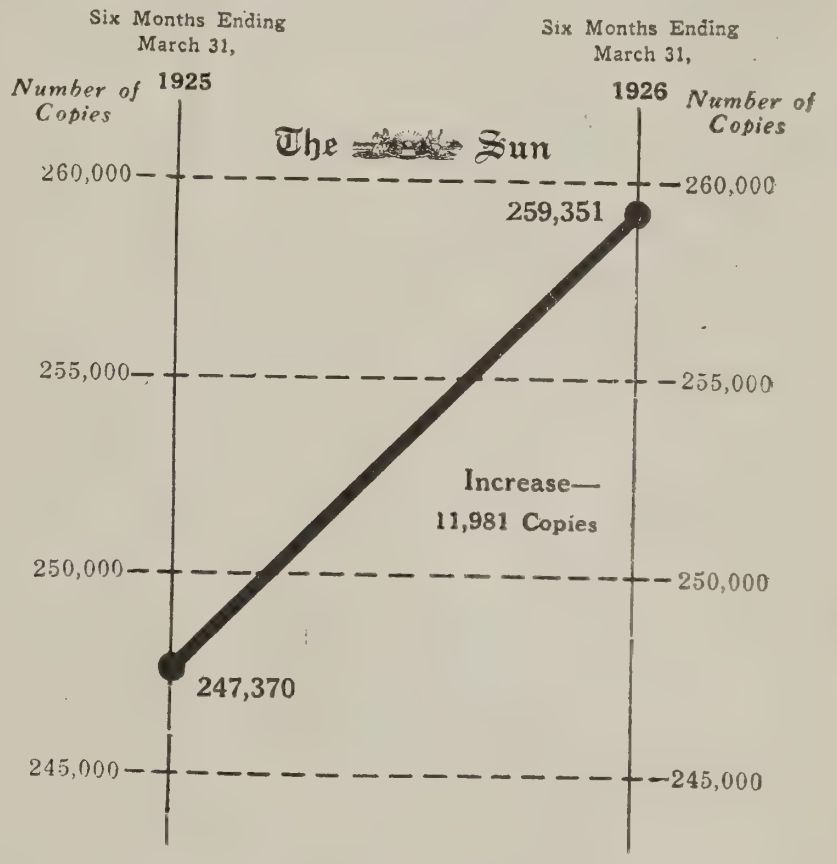
Superior Selling Power

in the World's Greatest Market

THE continued preference which advertisers show for The Sun is due to its superior ability to produce results—which is based, in turn, on its large, responsive and growing circulation.

LEADERSHIP IN ADVERTISING

New York Evening Newspapers
First Three Months, 1926 and 1925



For nine consecutive months The Sun has led all New York evening newspapers both in the volume of advertising published and in gain.

The advertising columns of The Sun are equally productive for manufacturers who sell their products through local retailers and for New York merchants who draw customers from all parts of the trading territory into their individual stores.

GROWTH IN CIRCULATION

Six Months Ending March 31, 1926
Compared With March 31, 1925

The Sun's increase in circulation has been won without prizes, contests, special articles or similar forms of promotion. It is an increase won purely on the merits of The Sun as a newspaper and for this reason it has more than ordinary value to advertisers.

The circulation of The Sun—already the largest weekday circulation among the better class homes of New York—is going ahead steadily on a sound, healthy basis.

STRONG LOCAL NEWS IS WEEKLIES' BEST WEAPON AGAINST ADVANCING DAILIES

City Competition Can Be Met by Making Paper Indispensable to Its Own Community, Overholzer Tells Western Iowa Editors

A HIGHLY efficient local and county news service which builds circulation and creates community spirit, is the best weapon country weeklies can employ against the encroachment of large city papers, Ralph E. Overholzer, editor of the Red Oak (Ia.) Express told members of the Western Iowa Editorial Association at their recent meeting in Council Bluffs, Ia.

Mr. Overholzer said:

Our competitor is no longer the fellow publisher across the street; rather is it the metropolitan press which is gradually encroaching on our news sources and our circulation. Good roads, modern machinery and motorization have been advantageous to the distribution of daily papers and because they are managed by progressive, high pressure men, they have and are expanding at our expense. This continual daily plea beckons our citizens to spend money in the urban center which should be spent at home, and in time our civic centers will be undermined unless we counteract this intrusion and go after business with the same determination that prompts the daily newspaper man to activity. The city papers have employed correspondents in our fields and our rural subscribers will be able to get along without the home-town newspaper unless we place correspondents in the same neighborhood to serve us with more personal and gossipy news. There is, however, a place for the daily and a place for the weekly or semi-weekly in the same home and if the proper kind of news is published from the rural field the local paper will be just as much in demand as the daily paper.

News is the life of our newspapers. Years ago newspapers carried the initial letters of the cardinal points of the compass N-E-W-S. These letters indicated the paper contained intelligence from the four quarters of the globe, but finally assumed the word "news" from which "newspaper" comes. The country newspaper would be entirely out of its field if it attempted to carry news from the four quarters of the globe but within its restricted area it should not leave a stone unturned until every available news source is tapped. Our newspapers ought to cover the four quarters of our trade territory. If it does we have eliminated the competition of the daily press because we have the advantage of carrying interesting, gossipy, newsy items which the metropolitan press cannot handle.

Country correspondence in our opinion offers one of the greatest opportunities for increasing reader interest. Rural communities are bubbling over with activities today and it is as important to record them as it is a society event pertaining to the 400 in our city. Our patron subscribed for the newspaper because he wanted to read about the every day happenings of his own particular locality—news which he doubtless knows about before the home paper reaches him, yet nevertheless he gets a certain amount of satisfaction in seeing the item in print. In our pell-mell scurry for big news we have overlooked the value of the personal country correspondence item. The fact that John Jones helped Henry Smith shell corn today isn't much of a metropolitan news item, we'll confess, but it means just as much to Jones and Smith as the item—"Mrs. Warren Mulford entertained her bridge club today"—does to Mrs. Mulford. And probably is worth more, we can see some sense in shelling corn but not much in playing bridge.

The first essential is country correspondence in our opinion is names. After that it's news, associating these names with activities. As soon as our patron's name appears in our paper, he feels that he is a part of our community. He subscribes to read about himself and about his neighbor. He is interested in what his other farmer friends are doing over the country; so that it is well to have every part of your trade territory covered by your correspondent. It is the personal item that ties the rural subscriber to our paper; if he becomes interested in our paper he becomes interested in our city and subsequently a purchaser of goods from our home town merchants. As the merchant succeeds, we succeed. In our opinion we cannot help but feel that the future of the newspaper and our community rests upon our ability to keep the trade territory interested in our newspaper; the trade territory will support our city in proportion to the pulling power of our newspaper—and all this reflects upon the ability of the editor to make his newspaper interesting; and the most interesting item to the greatest number is the personal item whether it is local or rural correspondence.

We are putting on correspondents to cover our fields and at the present time we have twenty widely scattered over the country. We are going to put on some more just as soon as the right persons can be found. We believe that a good rural correspondent is one of the best investments we can make in saving our trade territory. We are endeavoring to intrench ourselves and our community before hard surfaced roads arrive. If we are firmly established and if our city becomes an accustomed trading center, we need not worry about our future when the good roads do come, for our ground work will have been laid and the good roads will lead to Red Oak, not away from Red Oak.

Ed M. Smith, publisher of the Winterset Madisonian, brought out some interesting facts in a recent questionnaire. His subscribers classified their interest in news as follows: page one, first; local page second; editorial page, third; official news, fourth. It is not surprising that page one with its general news and that the local page with its names are of greatest interest to the reading public but it is astonishing to some of us at least, that the editorial page and official news should rank in third and fourth places. It proves two points: first, that people of our communities are ready to read local editorial comment if it is briskly written; second, that the public desires and wants official news published despite the tendency of law-making bodies to curtail official publication on account of expense.

The editorial page is the editor's private bulletin board and no newspaper is complete without one. It is the place for comment; the news column is not. By virtue of his position every editor is a leader in his community and has an opinion on public questions which he should make known. An original opinion half expressed is better than none at all. An editorial in every issue strengthens the paper's standing and incidentally raises the editor in the estimation of his constituents. On the same page we carry "press comment" and "readers' letters." We have found that an open column is an asset to the paper for it permits our subscribers to have their "say so" on community problems too.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Charles S. Stanton

CHARLES S. STANTON, publisher of the San Francisco Bulletin, is having studies made by that afternoon newspaper which are designed to aid advertisers in taking the waste out of advertising dollars.

The Bulletin, oldest daily in San Francisco, recently moved into a handsome new plant at Fourth and Mission streets and has increased the range of its production and other facilities.

"Members of The Bulletin's organization are firm believers in the principle that the best advertising is the advertising that moves the greatest volume of goods from the shelves at the lowest comparative cost," said Mr. Stanton.

"Low comparative cost is not always arrived at by limiting advertising. Frequently it is achieved by increasing advertising when quick turnover, as in department stores, or mass sales are desired.

"All advertising dollars would do more work if more selective judgment were employed in the matter of mediums and coverage. The work of placing advertising has to be done fast, we all know, but it is susceptible of improvement. The tendency to make quantity in circulation synonymous with pulling power is hardly scientific.

"There are fallacies in advertising that can be exploded only through original outlook—or probably it would be better to say by refusing to believe that every standard practice is the correct one for the advertiser."

The wise way to cover Baltimore, is in the Baltimore News.

BALTIMORE, you know, is an "evening paper town." The local merchants use the evening papers on week days when they want results.

There are 196,000 families in Baltimore. The News goes into 110,000 of them every day.

You can cover this field in the Baltimore News and you can cover it without having to buy a duplicating morning paper in addition!

We sell the Baltimore News alone, strictly on its own merits. If you want a morning paper also, we recommend the American that duplicates only 13% of the News circulation.

The best way to cover Baltimore is the Baltimore News!

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THIS PICTURE?

Robert R. McCormick and James M. Thomson, both Colonels, both publishers of Morning Tribunes, one at each end of the Great Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway, discussed matters of common interest at the New Orleans Country Club last week and then were photographed. Col. Thomson, the short man at the left, is only 6 feet 1½ inches tall. According to the picture and the scale of miles that can be calculated, Col. McCormick might lay claim to seven feet of altitude. But Col. McCormick towers only 6 feet 4 inches above Chicago sidewalks, according to his associates on the Tribune, and the question remains—"What's wrong with the picture?"

For the accommodation of publishers interested in the machine, headquarters will be maintained during the Convention at

Hotel WALDORF-ASTORIA

MR. CHARLES R. MURRAY in charge

MR. MURRAY is President of the manufacturing and distributing company. He will be pleased to accord every courtesy to publishers desiring to investigate this new machine, which is the only mechanical means of stuffing or gathering and inserting the various sections of the modern multi-section Sunday edition newspaper.

Halvorsen machines have for some time been in use in the plant of THE NEW YORK TIMES and equipment is now being installed for THE WORLD and THE HERALD-TRIBUNE of New York

A visit to New York Convention Week affords an opportunity to investigate, which should not be neglected.

The machine is well adapted to the requirements of publishers issuing multi-section editions of medium circulation, as well as being a real necessity to the metropolitan publisher.

Halvorsen machines are speeding the edition and cutting the cost of stuffing for Sunday newspapers in these representative cities:

Chicago	New York
Milwaukee	Memphis
Saint Paul	Birmingham
San Francisco	Seattle
Los Angeles	Sydney [Australia]

Be sure to get in touch with MR. MURRAY at the Waldorf—and learn about the Halvorsen Stuffing Machine while in New York.

A recommendation of suitable equipment can be made for your plant—if you will have available a copy of your Sunday edition showing the order of assembling the sections, together with a floor plan of the mailing room or other available space.

A RECORD—

never before attained!

In one year and a half the New York Evening Graphic has achieved a record that places it in the foremost rank of progressive journalism.

IN MARCH, 1926, The New York Evening GRAPHIC GAINED 227,594 lines of advertising over March, 1925, A GREATER GAIN than that shown by any other New York evening or morning newspaper except The Sun.

During the first three months of 1926 The New York Evening GRAPHIC showed a GAIN of 160 per cent. over the same period of last year.

More and more are advertisers and local merchants realizing that The New York Evening GRAPHIC is one of the most potent advertising mediums among New York evening newspapers.

CIRCULATION GROWTH

On April 7, 1926, the net paid circulation of The New York Evening GRAPHIC was in excess of

265,000

—a figure fast approaching that of newspapers which have been in the local evening field for years. Read "What Our Readers Think" in the panel at the right—there you will find the reason why this newspaper has gripped the heart of the New York public in such an astonishing manner.

What Our Readers Think of the NEW YORK EVENING GRAPHIC

"Its personal service; its method of getting right down to the root of things and going after a situation and keeping there until something is done is making The GRAPHIC the newspaper of the times."
"The Evening GRAPHIC is doing a big work."
"It comes closer to the people than any other paper existing."
"There are so many interesting things in it we cannot wait until it is out."
"The variety of news contained in your paper is astonishing."
"I prefer it to all other evening papers."
"It would be almost the same as having no newspaper at all were we without The GRAPHIC."
"I like the way your newspaper takes an interest in public welfare and the way you put the news to us."
"I think The GRAPHIC is the best tabloid newspaper in New York city."
"The GRAPHIC is truly a home paper."
"We like your stand on all important questions, feeling you are always fair."

These bona fide expressions from readers of The New York Evening GRAPHIC fittingly reveal the intense human interest that this newspaper holds for the public—an interest greater than that expressed for any other newspaper.

The opinions quoted are but a smattering of thousands of similar expressions that have come to The New York Evening GRAPHIC since its inception a short year and a half ago.

Not only does the public accept The New York Evening GRAPHIC as a paper of intense human interest, but the people now know that this newspaper is a BIG FACTOR in journalism, fighting their battles with a fearless zeal. The proof lies in a rapidly mounting circulation plus an astonishing growth in advertising lineage.

YOUNGSTERS EDITING OKLAHOMA DAILIES

Owners of Guthrie Leader and Okemah Ledger, Themselves Under 31, Hire Staff Whose Average Age Is 22

Oklahoma's oldest and newest dailies are operated, under joint ownership, by an editorial and business office personnel of strikingly tender average age.

RAYMOND FIELDS

Raymond Fields and Edward M. McIntyre purchased the Guthrie Leader from Col. Leslie G. Niblack, eight months ago. The Leader is the direct descendant of the first newspaper published in Oklahoma Territory upon its opening to settlement in 1889.

Four months ago, these publishers purchased the Okemah Weekly Ledger and converted it into a daily.

Youthful themselves—McIntyre is 30, Fields 28—the publishers have surrounded themselves with young assistants. There are 10 department heads in the two properties and their average age is 22.

ED. M. MCINTYRE

In reorganizing the Guthrie Leader personnel, Fields and McIntyre drew on the Oklahoma News, a Scripps-Howard property at Oklahoma City, where Fields had been managing editor until the Leader purchase.

From the News came George Davis, the Leader's managing editor, and 20 years old; William Duncan, circulation director of both Guthrie and Okemah papers; and Gene Gillispie, advertising manager. Duncan is 21, Gillispie, 20.

City Editor Louis Blackburn of the Guthrie paper is 19 and Miss Virginia Filson, society editor, 18.

At Okemah, Charles Evans, 23, former assistant advertising manager of the Oklahoma News, is general manager. Gus Fields, brother of the publisher, is editor, at 21, with previous experience on the Oklahoma City Oklahoman, Okmulgee Times and the O'Collegian, the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical college's daily.

The managing editor is J. Nelson Taylor, 20, and the office manager, Lloyd Payne, 20.

"Being young ourselves," says Fields, "our associates naturally were young and we were admirers of young newspaper workers who were making good.

"Guthrie is Oklahoma's oldest city and settled in its ways. However, we have discovered that youngsters do excellent work there and have given the paper a reputation for aggressiveness which is important.

"We sit 34 miles from Oklahoma City whence 14 editions of three dailies are fired at us every day by train and interurban.

"Under this fire the youngsters work their best and we have reduced the circulations of out-of-town newspapers at the same time doubling the gross business of the Leader in eight months.

"At times we have felt the need of veteran employes who knew the field better than ourselves and knew the newspaper business through longer experience, but the need has never been serious. We have an adopted policy of trying to train our own employees and giving the young executives business opportunities."

Fields, whose newspaper experience is longest among the personnel of both Leaders, became a cub reporter on the Oklahoma News in July, 1919. He was sports editor, city and managing editor before his resignation.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

E. P. Adler

E. P. ADLER has just rounded out his twenty-fifth year as publisher of the Davenport (Ia.) Daily Times.

To him it was just another day. But to the men and women who are associated with him, the Times organization and the Lee Newspaper Syndicate it was the occasion for a celebration.

Quietly they arranged a party for him at the Outing Club in Davenport. He appeared at the club at the appointed hour supposedly to celebrate the birthday of a friend.

When he got there he found he was the guest of honor of some 200 of his employes who did not miss a break in felicitating him.

The party was unique. It was a wholehearted, spontaneous celebration such as come only from the heart.

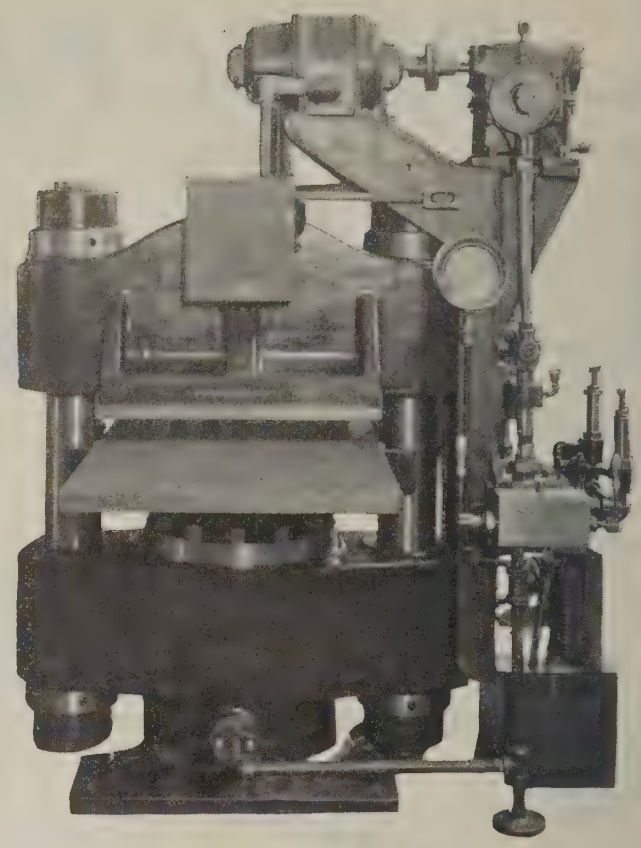
The publishers of the seven papers of the Lee Syndicate, specially invited guests, joined in congratulating Mr. Adler. Likewise they took advantage of the opportunity to tell a few of the obstacles he had overcome in the past 25 years.

Mr. Adler came to Davenport from the Ottumwa (Ia.) Courier where he had in a brief space of time worked his way from printer's "devil" to business manager, via cub reporter, city editor and advertising manager.

A. W. Lee at the time was publisher of the Courier and the syndicate which now bears his name was but a dream.

The purchase of the Times in Davenport was the first step in the realization of that dream and he picked Adler to extend the organization.

There were six daily papers in Davenport then and the Times was located in a squalid building on the river front. It was the poorest paper of the six.



Gradually, the young publisher sold the Times advertising space to the merchants of the city and convinced the citizens that the paper was fit to at least lie on the front porch, and today the Times has an enviable position in its community.

On the death of Mr. Lee, Adler became the head of the syndicate and it is through his efforts that it grew and prospered.

Through all his success, Mr. Adler has never lost the common touch with his employes. That is why they united so spiritedly in wishing him another 25 years of success.

Enlarges Roto Section

The Minneapolis Sunday Tribune has enlarged its rotogravure section from 8 to 10 pages.

Hydraulic Matrice Press and Process

Direct pressure matrice moulding under full and complete control. Works successfully on either wet or dry mats. Definite in all its functions, moulding a die cut, embossed mat ready for the casting box without loss of time.

Used Exclusively by The New York Times

The New York Times has installed three (3) Birotadruck Hydraulic Matrice Presses and are using these machines exclusively in their mat moulding department, having taken out mat rollers and steam tables. Birotadruck Hydraulic Matrice Presses have been in operation at The New York Times for several weeks with full success and have given complete satisfaction.

Demonstration at Waldorf

During Publishers' Convention Week the Birotadruck Hydraulic Matrice Press may be seen in operation under typical newspaper conditions at the Waldorf Hotel on main floor opposite main elevators and stairway.

Other installations have been made on The New York Herald-Tribune, Boston Globe, Cleveland Press and Dallas News.

MINE OF BUSINESS NEWS WAITS UNCOVERING

Dailies Missing Many Important General Interest Stories by Gathering Routine Copy in Traditional Channel, Writer Declares—Cites Department Executives' Report on Wages

By PHILIP FRANCIS NOWLAN

WOULD it be news if a number of high executives and officials of coal mining companies made a report to the operators on the wage system involving such statements as these?

"In the opinion of your committee, all these methods of compensation show a more or less selfish desire on the part of operators to induce greater production without just consideration of the miner, who is so fundamental a factor in the mining industry.

"What mine owner can truthfully say that miners were at any time ever consulted or their opinion asked as to the justification of the present system of compensation?

"Your committee believes that the present system is an acknowledgment to workers that they are not being properly paid."

That would be news, wouldn't it? Hot news.

The foregoing paraphrase, however, is not quite fair, because we have just seen the close of a great strike in the coal mines, and a hard coal famine. But suppose it had occurred last year, when there was no strike. Or suppose that this report were being submitted on conditions in the textile industry, or the steel industry, or any other leading industry today. It would still be pretty good news wouldnt it? Maybe not as red hot as in the case of the mining industry—but worth half a column on an inside page at least.

I think any editor will admit that it's worth printing, to the extent of at least half a column, when a group of high officials and executives, representing a number of leading concerns in one of the leading industries of the country, have the rugged honesty and courage so to raise their voices in protest against what they believe to be a wage injustice forced upon the workers in that industry by the owners.

When Henry Ford recently declared he believed it good economics to raise wages and lower prices I think nearly every newspaper in the country noted the fact for the benefit of its readers. That's quite all right on the part of the newspapers. And more honor to Mr. Ford for hammering away at it. But to be perfectly frank about it, that particular statement, coming from Mr. Ford, isn't so very very newsy any more, is it? He's said virtually the same thing so often before, and we all know that he practices what he preaches in this respect. It should have been printed, yes. And with just about the emphasis that most editors actually did give it.

The point I want to bring out is that the previously mentioned instance is very much more important as news. Mind, we're considering one of the biggest industries in the country, an industry represented in every town and hamlet of the United States by many employes, with its representative concerns in the big cities employing many thousands, an industry in the closest possible touch with the general public.

Is there not a tremendous social as well as economic significance when representative leaders in such an industry break precedent as described, stepping forward to tell owners just "where they get off" with this stuff of taking for their own pockets, even though unconsciously or semi-consciously, money that belongs in those of their employes?

Well, just such a little piece of news "broke" the other day under the very noses of a flock of metropolitan dailies, which apparently were giving particular attention to the spot in which it happened, the moment it happened, and not a one of them tumbled to it. Maybe I better say I think not one of them tumbled to it. I may have passed over a reference to it, but I scanned the papers pretty carefully the next morning, because I had a hunch and was curious to see if I was right.

You see, the thing was officially labelled "Report on Compensation Plans for Selling Employes, Made by the Advisory Committee to the Store Managers Division at the Fifteenth Annual Convention of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, February 10, 1926."

Of course that didn't sound much like:

Store Officials
Charge Owners
Rob Employes

If it had borne the latter heading, no doubt many papers would have "hopped on it," and played it up in just about this fashion—which of course would have been just the wrong thing to do with it, because that wasn't at all what the advisory committee meant, and, so presented, it would have amounted to libel upon thousands of the best-meaning, substantial citizens throughout the country who as yet have not all grasped the idea that liberally raising an employe's compensation may often prove truer economy than cutting it, and who are doing nothing more than publishers (many of them) do when they fail to pay a reporter or editor more than they are paying him because they know he'd rather work at the lower figure than be out of a job.

The inner significance of this story lies in the fact that for several years now retail stores in general and department stores in particular have been searching for some method of rewarding salespeople as an inducement to more intensive selling effort. There have been commission plans evolved, and combinations of salary and commissions, premiums, etc.

Of these, the system generally known as the "quota-bonus" plan has been the most widely adopted.

In many instances it has proved a good thing. On the whole, compensation to salespeople in retail stores throughout the country has risen. And this is to the credit of store owners.

The committee, however, after a thorough study, was convinced that this movement has not gone far enough, and that a straight raising of salaries would be more conductive of increased selling effort than a system under which store owners and salespeople "split the differences," so to speak, on excess business achieved.

It's no reflection on the good intentions of store owners and by no means to their discredit that the committee happened to have a greater vision in this matter than owners have yet developed.

All of which, however, does not in the least alter the fact that it took real courage on the part of these men to put the case of the working girl and man in the store as strongly as they did, and that their action in so doing is an inspiring evidence of the new idealism that is growing throughout American business as well as a matter of some interest to the vast host of American store workers and their families, not to mention workers in other lines compensated under systems involving commissions, bonuses, prizes and the like.

The report was signed by Joseph M. Meyers, of Kaufmann's "The Big Store," Pittsburgh; James H. Paswaters, of James A. Hearn & Son, New York; Merrill W. Osgood, of Jordan Marsh & Co., Boston; and Chester C. Curtis.

These men presented the following conclusions:

"In the opinion of your committee, all these methods of compensation show a more or less selfish desire on the part of store owners to induce more sales without just consideration of the salesperson, who, as previously stated, is so vital a force in the successful operation of a store.

"For example, the quota basis. What store owner can truthfully say that salespeople were at any time ever consulted or their opinion asked as to the justification of the quota system of compensation? What justification is there, to be willing to allow a crtain selling cost in a given department to be the quota, and then reduce the percentage on the excess to about one-half? Is it not obvious that if the employe is being paid a sufficiently high wage, the store is entitled to the profits on the increased sales over the quota?

"Your committee believes that the payment of a commission over a quota is an acknowledgment to the salespeople that they are not being properly paid. The quota method of compensation appears to be a method which follows the line of least resistance. It is of course an inducement to salespeople in a way. The store owner who uses this system no doubt is prompted by proper motives, and desires his salespeople to earn the bonus, but invariably he holds out this bonus as an inducement to increased sales, instead of paying a proper wage and so managing his departments through his buyers and executives as to secure the highest degree of loyalty and efficiency from his salespeople. In other words, your committee believes that the quota basis is the lazy way of inducing salespeople to greater effort.

"Another unfair feature of the quota system is that every store has certain departments that do not consistently, year after year, increase their business. If the selling cost for the quota is determined on past performances of the department, the business must necessarily increase in the department before the salesperson can get any commission over his quota.

"The quota system is unfair in this respect. A salesperson earning $15.00 a week is given a quota based on that rate. A salesperson in the same department earning $20.00 a week is given a quota based on her rate. Both salespeople sell in excess of the quota. The lower priced salesperson receives more bonus than the higher priced salesperson, because of her lower quota. This is obviously unfair. The higher priced salesperson is naturally worth the higher rate, or he would not be receiving it.

"The foregoing has convinced your committee that the advantages of the various methods of compensation described are greatly offset by the disadvantages. We cannot help but feel therefore that we would not be doing our full duty to the members of the association if we did not give you a frank expression of what we believe is the proper method of compensation. It is your committee's opinion that a straight salary basis is after all the best method, even though it be the oldest.

"Therefore, it becomes a fact in the minds of the committee that the system of straight salary is not wrong, but the method of experimenting in the past has been wrong and the system has been condemned because of the lack of adequate question. It is a fact that straight salary requires very close supervision, but overshadowing this disadvantage, or the time consumed in this supervision, is the fact of having a contented salesforce, of being able to predetermine in advance of your season the amount of money you will spend for selling forces; the flexibility of having salespeople in dull times do stock work or other work without any confusion of pay and last, but not least, of having your people just appraise you by the amount which they receive in their weekly pay envelopes."

This is but a single instance of the manner in which newspapers are missing out every day on good stuff. Others can be picked up on every hand with a little digging. But apparently they're seldom dug for unless there's a scent of scandal in the air.

Why? Maybe too many newspaper men are not themselves interested in business. Or maybe they've fallen into the habit of thinking that the public isn't.

They'll tell you that every reader belongs to either one of two sexes and that therefore the sex interest goes big.

They'll give you somewhat similar arguments covering sports, woman's page and other conventional news classifications of the paper.

But apparently people who work for a living are interested almost exclusively in bankers' opinions, stock and bond markets and real estate sales, with perhaps a mere agate dash of the eye toward hay and feed quotations.

I'm not arguing for a second that a daily paper ought to smear business all over its front page, or give most of its space to business. But I do contend that it is an amazing thing how little business news, outside of the classifications just mentioned, appears in the newspapers of the greatest industrial and commercial nation the world has ever seen.

And that's that.

A New and Remarkable Dry Mat

For all newspaper plants operating from one to three presses we are pleased to announce the new WOOD DRY MAT

The "SPEEDMAT"

The faults of dry mats have been eliminated in the make-up of the "SPEEDMAT." For instance:

1. It does not have to be oiled or chalked. Without any such preparation six or more perfect plates may be cast from it and it will not peel.
2. It has iron-like stay-back and requires little if any packing. This saves precious time and much work.
3. Its surface is splendid and the printing of the plate is sharp and clean. Positively better printing than from any other dry mat.
4. Conditioned in the usual way and properly roasted it will not buckle.
5. It may be molded to the bottom of type and half-tone stipples without cutting through on column rules and is particularly easy on type. It holds its molded depth.

The "SPEEDMAT" does not have to be handled with gloves. It is the speediest and most dependable dry mat ever made for the medium size plant.

RETAILER "BIG STICK" URGED TO WIN MORE ADVERTISING FOR SMALL CITIES

Manufacturer Spending Budget in "Key Cities" Where Jobbers Make Sales Showings by Selling in Smaller Nearby Cities

By W. W. FRAZIER

Eastern Manager, Allen-Klapp Company

WHY is it that the large metropolitan city newspapers are receiving the bulk of most newspaper advertising appropriations, with a comparatively small percentage going to the smaller and medium sized city newspapers? It will be said by the majority of advertisers that their appropriation is limited, and that their first consideration must necessarily be the big cities, with talk of "Lack of sales resistance, etc." These are not convincing arguments, however. If the principles of newspaper advertising are correct and logical, they are just as correct for every small town in which a daily newspaper is published as they are for the large cities; in fact probably more so if you take into consideration possible sales from the standpoint of bank deposits and automobiles per capita.

What, therefore, is this resistance to the use of the smaller city newspapers? Most advertisers today are not selling to the retail trade direct, but are selling through jobbers or distributors, with the result that when they scan their sales sheets or their books, they find that the bulk of their sales is in the larger cities according to these figures. Such figures are unquestionably misleading, as the jobber's sales to the retail trade are very likely miles away from the city in which he is located. This condition, therefore, is partly responsible for the present day advertising conversation of "Key City," "Jobber and Distributor Cities or Territories." What is a "Key City," and "why"? Is the term geographic, or is it determined from a sales standpoint; if so how can it be if the actual retail sale standpoint is unknown?

There may be a 30,000 population city in Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, or any other state which may be an isolated territory. If so there is very probably a good jobber located there, doing a good business, with the result that Mr. Advertiser's sales sheets show an excellent sales record in this 30,000 town. This particular jobber may be selling very little to the retail trade in his own city, but selling in considerable quantities to the trade in several other adjacent 20,000 cities. This makes no difference however, as the city in which the jobber is located is given credit for the sales, and it is probably termed a "Key City." There may be another city of the same population located comparatively close to Chicago, Milwaukee, or Detroit, with no jobber, the retail trade being covered by the jobber from the larger adjacent city. The result is that the larger city in this case gets credit for the sale actually made in the smaller city.

It is difficult for the advertiser to get at the actual retail sale situation. The jobber has his prerogatives, and is rather jealous of them. It has probably taken him years to work up the sales information, sales data, and the list of customers he now possesses. For this reason he is not particularly desirous of passing any of this information on to the manufacturer even though he might be assured that it would be used only as a guide for advertising. I believe, however, that a great deal of work can be done with the jobber in this respect to override his objections, by proving to him that any procedure which tends to move goods from the dealers' shelves quickly will also greatly increase his own sales. He is somewhat afraid that Mr. Manufacturer might possibly be so astounded at the sales in certain cities that he would deem it worth while to send a salesman to cover the trade in those cities, and away would go his livelihood completely.

As it is part of our own individual problem to obtain and create advertising for the smaller and medium sized city newspapers, we have made a thorough study and analysis of the present situation, and find there are two possible methods of counteracting the existing condition. The first suggestion is for a concerted, combined and comprehensive advertising campaign, with all newspapers as participants who believe that the present condition is affecting them; and directed at the advertising and sales officials of leading manufacturing organizations.

The other plan is to compel the jobber actually to insist to the manufacturer that advertising support be extended to the retailers in the cities in which he is selling to the retail trade. It is a rather difficult problem to handle this situation through the jobber alone, as he is good on promises until the retailer is sold, and full of alibis afterward when the advertising does not start as promised. Start educating the retailers in your city, Mr. Publisher, to use the "Big Stick" by insisting upon advertising—with a written guarantee stipulating that goods may be returned unless copy actually runs—at the time retailer buys his goods from the jobber. If he buys and then argues about it afterward, when he hears that the advertising is to run in some other city, it does not have the same effect. This "education" of the retailers is not an easy problem to solve. It is something requiring thought, perseverance, and real selling effort to get him to the point of actually saying "I refuse to handle the goods unless I receive local advertising support." If the retailers will roar long enough and loud enough to their jobbers, the manufacturer will hear more than a feeble echo.

HANSON MAKES FURTHER ATTACK ON POSTAL RATES TO PUBLISHERS

Scores Post Office Department as "Unbusinesslike Institution" —Cites High Profits Made on Carrying Newspapers in Demand for Lower Rates

By BART CAMPBELL

WITH slashing criticism of the Post Office Department, and of Joseph Stewart, chief executive assistant to Postmaster General Harry S. New, Elisha Hanson, Washington legal representative of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, this week termed the Department, as shown by its own spokesman, to be an unbusinesslike institution."

Reappearing before the Congressional Joint Postal Committee, Mr. Hanson directed attention to Mr. Stewart's statement that "one of the troubles with publishers was that they do not want all of the service offered by the Post Office Department."

Mr. Hanson emphasized the analysis offered by Mr. Stewart of the figures submitted to the committee previously by the spokesman for the A. N. P. A.

"Now what does Mr. Stewart show you by his analysis of my figures?" Mr. Hanson asked the Committee.

"First, that the Post Office Department is an unbusinesslike institution. To my mind, he absolutely proves that it has not any more appreciation of business functions than an insane haberdasher who would refuse to sell one a necktie unless one purchased hat, collar, shirt, suit, socks, underwear, shoes and handkerchief in addition, and a top coat or overcoat in season.

"Mr. Stewart says that the trouble with many newspapers is that they do not want all of the service the Post Office Department renders for the charges it makes. Of course not. And they should not be compelled to pay for something they do not get any more than a man should be compelled to pay for a suit of clothes he does not receive in order to get a necktie.

"Let us discuss his figures a little further. He says my illustration of the Syracuse Post Standard is an extreme one. My answer to that is that as everyone who knows anything about the newspaper business knows the Post Standard is typical of the fine papers published in our medium sized cities. Its situation is typical of that of other papers in hard road states and its relation to the Post Office Department is similar to that of hundreds of other papers.

"Therefore, in my opinion, it is just as proper to use this paper as an illustration before this Committee as it is for the representative of the Post Office Department to use some 260 post offices out of a total of 51,000.

"My figures on the Post Standard trip to Ithaca were submitted to this committee for two reasons. First, to show that hard roads can be used and second, that the cost of using them is enormously cheaper than the cost of using the mails.

"Mr. Stewart says I was wrong on my mail cost calculation. He says I should have used one of his averages—$2.38 per hundred lbs., I believe.

"Now, gentlemen, first taking my figures of mail cost, here is what you have:

60 miles by truck	$70.00
60 miles by mail	$232.90
Saving by truck	$162.90

"Now take Mr. Stewart's general average, which I did not use, and you have:

60 miles by truck	$70.00
60 miles by mail	$283.00
Saving by truck	$213.00 (per week)

"But that is not all, Mr. Stewart has told you how much cheaper railroad service is than motor truck. So we will take his railroad figures. Here they are:

60 miles by railroad (P. O. Expense)	$15.75
60 miles by truck	$70.00
Saving by Post Office Department	$54.25

"I should think we should pause a moment right there.

"The Government pays the railroads $15.75. According to the Post Standard's figures it would charge that paper $239.00 and according to Mr. Stewart the charge would be $283.00 for what the Government gets for $15.75.

"While Mr. Stewart and I seldom find ourselves in accord on anything, I do want at this time to thank him for his analysis of my figures and for the very effective way he has participated in our effort to prove that daily newspapers aren't such a burden to his Department after all.

"Yesterday in accordance with a request from Senator McKellar, I submitted a proposal for an amendment which would make it possible for a publisher to pay only for the service he actually gets from the Post Office Department, instead of paying for all the service the Department offers but much of which he cannot use.

"Mr. Stewart's analysis of my figures for the first zone shows that at the rate I suggested, 30 cents per 100 pounds for the 50 miles in that zone, the Department would receive $4.50 from the publisher for the 3 foot unit and it would pay to the railroad $1.87½ thus making a profit of $2.62½ on every unit of space filled.

"For the second zone the Department would receive $6.00 from the publisher and pay to the railroads $4.62½.

"Figured on the 100 pound unit the Department would receive 30 cents in the first zone and pay out $11.82 to the carrier.

"In view of the fact that we have demonstrated conclusively that more than 85 per cent of newspaper distribution is distributed within the first and second zones, it is our opinion that the profit the Government would make in these zones entirely justifies the enactment of such a rate."

Armour & Co., Executive Pays Tribute to Newspaper Space

Charles W. Meyer, director of Trade Contacts for Armour & Co., luncheon guest and speaker at a meeting of the Advertising Club of Louisville last Monday, paid high tribute to the daily newspaper as an advertising medium.

"Advertising in the daily newspapers sets people thinking," Mr. Meyer said, "and thinking more directly and more effectively than any other medium.

"Although there are many other valuable mediums for retail advertising the daily newspaper reaches by far the largest audience in the shortest time. Daily newspapers are valuable to both local and national advertisers as campaign aids or as separate advertising mediums.

"Advertising is in reality suggestion and the advertisement which most successfully describes and identifies its product is the most effective means of selling it. It is necessary to familiarize your buyers with the good will behind the product, as well as the product itself. More national products have been established through advertised good will than in any other way."

The Louisville advertising club will send a delegation of 15 members to the annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to be held in Philadelphia, June 19 to 24.

"A FARMER who wants to know how his neighbor does it. If John Smith grows corn with more grains than other farmers, that's the kind of farm news that sells papers."

That is the circulation philosophy of John Frederick Steinman, president of the News Journal, Incorporated, and publisher of the Lancaster (Pa.) News Journal and Sunday News. And those newspapers cover Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, the "Garden Spot of America," where farmers live long and prosper.

Jack Steinman ought to know. He was born in Lancaster, owns a big farm in the southern part of the county, knows the problems of farmers and what they read. He believes absolutely that a daily farm column of what reporters regard as unimportant news can get and hold farm circulation.

Steinman will tell you that his conception of heaven is a golf links on which every score tallies under par. And when he says that, he means it. But his real hobby is getting the News Journal into every farm in Lancaster county—and there are about 10,000 of them. Daily he gets nearer that goal.

With his brother, Col. James Hale Steinman, Jack has extensive mining interests in Virginia and elsewhere and real estate holdings in this city. But he is a publisher, first, last and all the time, because, as he says, there "is nothing more interesting to do."

He is a member of the Yale Club of New York City and a graduate of that University; a member of the Hamilton Club, of Lancaster, and the Lancaster Country Club. He is Rotarian, too, and lives that club motto.

Brother of Late Gen. C. H. Taylor of Boston Globe Dies at 72

Nathaniel H. Taylor, brother of the late Gen. Charles H. Taylor of the Boston Globe, died at his home in Boston Sunday. He was 72 years old. The funeral took place Tuesday.

"Nat" Taylor, as he was known familiarly to many in Boston, had a wide acquaintance in Boston. He was one of the first newspaper men to take up shorthand and beginning more than 50 years ago he covered a number of big stories for the Boston Globe. When the leaders of the Parnell movement came here for conventions Mr. Taylor covered them and he knew intimately the leaders in the fight for Home Rule.

At one time he was private secretary to Mayor Hugh O'Brien and continued the same position for four years under Mayor Matthews. This gave him an insight into Boston politics and in those days he was consulted in many matters by men in both Republican and Democratic parties.

In 1896 Mayor Quincy appointed him Collector of the City of Boston and he held this position for four years. Then he returned to active newspaper work, writing many editorials and special articles for the paper.

On Sept. 22, 1919, he was tendered a dinner by fellow newspaper men to commemorate the 50th anniversary of his entrance into newspaper work.

For the last year or so he had not been active. His funeral was attended by a large group of newspaper men.

OIL BURNER DEALERS BURN OIL

THIS letter from Mr. Bates is really a symposium of the opinion of all the manufacturers and dealers of oil burners who are now engaged in the business of selling their product to the great Detroit market.

This is evidenced by the fact that more than 80% of all the advertising of oil burners being published in Detroit is appearing regularly in The Detroit Free Press.

And what has been done so successfully by the oil burner manufacturers is now being duplicated by the electric refrigerator manufacturers who are using The Detroit Free Press either on an exclusive or preferential basis to sell their products in America's Fourth City.

C. A. Morden

MEMORIES of the early days in the printing business, which are rich in their associations, are possessed by C. A. Morden, manager of the Portland Oregonian. Mr. Morden held his present title before the death of the late Henry L. Pittock, publisher of the Oregonian, and in his will Mr. Pittock continued him in full authority over the newspaper and constituted him one of two trustees of the large estate left by Mr. Pittock, which included a major interest in the Oregonian and important properties.

Interesting as were his early experiences, Mr. Morden seldom speaks of them, for he has never been one to seek the spotlight. Last winter, however, he was induced to tell his story for publication in the seventy-fifth anniversary edition of the Oregonian, and many interesting phases of early-day printing were revealed in it.

Mr. Morden, who was born in 1853, worked as an itinerant printer in his youth in Nebraska City, Galveston, Cheyenne, Virginia City and San Francisco. He was for a time in the government printing office at Washington and he was employed on the University Press at Cambridge. The day he arrived in Boston he attended a meeting at the famous Old South Church, held to preserve the historic building from destruction.

"Those names! I can see them yet as I read them on the announcement of that meeting," said Mr. Morden. "Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry W. Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Julia Ward Howe, James Russell Lowell and Samuel Francis Smith, the distinguished clergyman who wrote 'My Country 'Tis of Thee.' For two hours or more those American celebrities, all of them famous, recited from their works or read compositions prepared for the occasion.

"I went to work for the University Press of Cambridge. Many notables, mostly literary men and women, passed in and out its doors. Longfellow I well remember, for at the time we were printing a collection of his poems, an edition in which he took the greatest interest, and every afternoon he would come to the composing room for his proofs. He was the soul of kindliness. For example his politeness to the old foreman of the composing room was a lesson in gentle manners, and in striking contrast to the flippant, disrespectful bearing of the Harvard students who used to come in and consult the foreman about the college paper."

Through association on the Falls City Journal in the early days Mr. Morden became a close friend of E. W. Howe, writer and philosopher, a friendship that has lasted through many years. They were companion printers on the Journal, roomed together and chummed together.

"I believe it to have been, even then, his great ambition to write, although I do not recall that he ever spoke of it," remarked Mr. Morden in recalling the days when he and Ed Howe were together. "I do remember that he kept voluminous books, in which he made frequent entries. It follows that I never heard him mention his plans for that splendid work of his, 'The story of a Country Town,' although it must have been forming in his mind. He had lived most of it. It was there, waiting to be written.

"We were eager for the future, like all young fellows. Ed had a wish to go to Europe and tramp all over the continent, and I was to go with him. This plan was very real to us, and we fully expected to carry it out. But something happened, I forget just what, to upset our schemes—and he went to Atchison and I went on. Later he became a great traveler, however, as his published works attest."

There were many other interesting experiences for Mr. Morden, the youthful printer, as he adventured about the country. These led him eventually to Portland and to employment upon the Oregonian. That was in the early eighties and since then his connection with the paper has been continuous. From printer he was promoted to foreman and later to mechanical superintendent. Then he was made assistant manager of the paper, with authority over all departments. Meantime there had grown up a strong friendship between Mr. Pittock and Mr. Morden and when the former desired relief from some of his heavy duties in his latter years he appointed Mr. Morden manager.

INDIANA SCHOOL PAPER WINS

Ft. Wayne Publication First in Central Interscholastic Contest

Students of South Side High School, Fort Wayne, Ind., publish the best school newspaper.

Their publication, the South Side Times, was placed ahead of 300 others by the Central Interscholastic Press Association of the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

Results of the sixth all-American newspaper contest held by the association were announced Thursday three hundred school newspapers from 43 states, the District of Columbia, British Honduras and Hawaii were entered.

Two papers, the Central High News and the Southerner, both published by Minneapolis high school students, tied for second place. The West High Weekly of Minneapolis, the Scroll of Washington High School, Milwaukee, and the Stadium World of Stadium High School, Tacoma, Wash., finished next in the order listed.

First honors for the best junior college paper went to the Bulletin, published by students at the Emporia State Normal School, Emporia, Kan., the Junior College Journal of Cleveland, was second.

Herbert B. Swope, executive editor, New York World; Lee A. White, director of reference departments, Detroit News, and Walter W. R. May, executive news editor, Portland Oregonian, were the judges.

Illinois Attorney General Says No State Law Compels Publication

Attorney General Oscar Carlstrom, of Illinois, in an opinion in response to inquiry made by T. J. Murvin, business manager of the Champaign (Ill.) Daily Illini in behalf of a local advertising club, holds that newspaper publishers in Illinois are under no legal obligation to accept advertisements for publication should business reasons or mere whim dictate otherwise.

"A newspaper is not a public utility and is responsible for what it does the same as any other private concern," Mr. Carlstrom said. "A newspaper management sells its space and may for any reason deny any and all proffered business, the same as any other private business enterprise. It appears to me under the laws of the state that a newspaper publisher may for business reasons, or out of pure whim, deny anyone the advantage of an advertisement or space in such a paper."

MANAGING EDITOR OUTLINES "IDEAL CODE" FOR A NEWSPAPER

Crusading News Spirit, Full Service to Readers Stressed in Dick Smith's Program—Ideal Paper Would Be Better Than Community

DICK SMITH, managing editor of the Kansas City Post, recently had occasion to write what might be termed a newspaper code, which has caused considerable comment among newspapermen who have read it.

Mr. Smith did not disclose what prompted him to write it, but said it would be understandable if read with the assumption that it had been written to a friend who had come into control of a newspaper and who had asked Mr. Smith what his policies would be if he were in the friend's place. Mr. Smith wrote:

"I have always believed that newspaper work called for idealism, but an idealism seasoned with common sense and flavored with practicalness.

"I like to think of the work as involving leadership. Leadership implies service.

"The first question, it seems to me, that would present itself under the given set of circumstances, would be:

"How can my paper reach a maximum in leadership and be of a maximum of service?

"The answer appears obvious to me. The job, as I see it, would be to make the paper appeal to the maximum number of persons that could be reached without sacrificing sane dignity or violating the dictates of decency.

"Success in this, of course, would complete the cycle, as the paper then also would appeal to advertisers as a desirable medium.

"Here another question arises:

"How would I go about obtaining a maximum of circulation?

"First, I would print the news without, to use a hackneyed phrase, 'fearing condemnation or courting favor.'

"News is hard to define and its values intangible. According to my conception, it is something that interests people and is of almost infinite variety. It may be something that is informative or something that is amusing. It may deal with something that affects the spiritual, mental, physical or financial well-being of the reader, or it may merely satisfy his natural curiosity about the affairs, habits or actions of others.

"I would judge each piece of news upon its merits with relation to the other news of the day, keeping in mind the limits imposed by the space available in my paper.

"I would try to anticipate news developments and keep at least two jumps ahead of my competitors, if any, leading and pointing the way rather than trailing or merely keeping pace.

"For instance, the Kansas pardon scandal involving a governor in graft was news waiting to be uncorked and I consider it to have been within the province of a newspaper to act as a corkscrew.

"I would display the news in a manner attractive to the eye, but would avoid anything that smacked too much of a three-ring circus effect, which, in my judgment, would cheapen my commodity.

"I would have the news written and printed so that it could be easily read and understood. It would be as accurate and dependable and fair as humanly possible to make it.

"I would try not to be ponderous and tedious, yet at the same time not be frivolous. There would be some froth and foam, but there also would be body and meat and heft.

"In a word, I would try to make the paper human and homely while breathing reliability, stability and strength.

"I would endeavor to make every piece of news complete, whether it occupied an inch of space or filled columns days on end. I would try not to leave any question unanswered in the reader's mind by searching out and publishing the ultimate fact—the fact that made every other fact of a story comprehensible.

"I would not stop with printing news in the ordinary sense of the word. Without self-righteousness or arrogance, I would strive to make the paper the public's advocate and try to instill in the public mind confidence in the fact that the paper's columns ever were open to righting public wrongs.

"While trying to steer clear of the shoals of intolerance and to maintain a judicial poise, I would expose and oppose with vigor and forcefulness what I considered wrong both in high and low places.

"I would resent and resist any attempt to intimidate the paper or any scheme to misuse or abuse its columns, whether by subterfuge, cajolery or bribery.

"I would try to merit the respect and confidence of all decent folk and put fear in the hearts of the other kind.

"I would avoid political commitments that might later make me an apologist for inefficiency or malfeasance in public office. My paper would be the creature of no political party and would support a party only when I believed it afforded a medium for public service.

"My paper would present the facts in its news columns and reserve conclusions, comments and advice for its editorial columns.

"An adverse verdict at the polls would not deter the paper nor cause it to deviate from its course, if I still believed it was right.

"I would try to remember that there are two sides to a story and give every man a hearing and his day in court.

"I would try to recognize and understand human weaknesses and extend a helping hand, but I would scourge anyone I found trying to impose upon the paper's sympathetic attitude.

"I would endeavor to make the paper a medium for relieving suffering and the champion of all good causes.

"The paper would be interested in its city, state and nation and try to advance and safeguard their interests. But it never would be moved to withhold just criticism or suppress facts by the frequently heard fallacious plea that the exposure of an unwholesome condition is injurious to a community.

"Ordinarily, I would stress local, state, national and international affairs in the order named.

"It would be my aim to concentrate daily upon one outstanding piece of news and handle it in a bigger and better way than my competitors on the theory that this would tend to increase interest in the paper and thereby widen its opportunities.

"I would operate upon the assumption that, as service was my ultimate goal, I, like a general who storms a fortification, must at times close my eyes to the sacrificing of a few for the good of the many.

"I would foster interest in art, music, the theater and literature, but I would not try to cram them down the public's throat. I would try to remember that appreciation of these and the other finer things of life is a plant of slow growth and that the best way for my paper to contribute its bit to the evolution of society would be to sugar coat the pill.

"In other words, I would feel that I would be defeating my own purpose—shooting over the heads of those who really need help—if I tried to pattern the paper after the Christian Science Monitor, for example.

"I believe I would come nearer achieving success if I kept in mind a practice of my wife when my boy was small. He did not like milk, which his mother knew was good for him. She found that by putting a piece of ice in the glass and telling him he could have it after he had drunk the milk, she could induce him to drink it. She felt that the harm done his tummy by the ice was more than offset by the good he derived from the milk. Sometimes such a big chunk of ice was put in that the glass was filled to overflowing and some of the milk spilled out.

"Newspapers, in my opinion, on occasion must use some ice.

"In discussing the attention given the Rhinelander case, I recently asked a minister friend who, in his estimation, was the greatest leader of all times. As I anticipated, he answered:

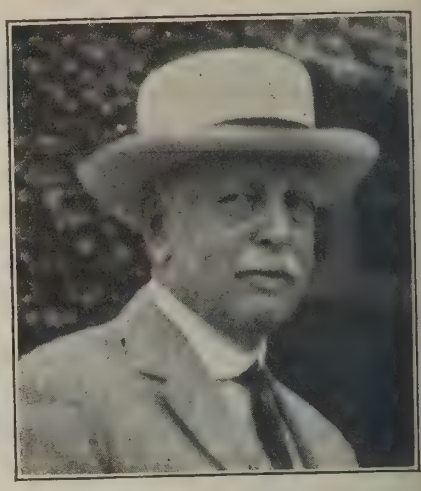
"'Christ.'

"I then pointed out that this Leader might have set Himself up in the high places and sought therefrom to convert the multitude, but that in His wisdom He went out among the people and interested Himself in the things in which they were interested, thereby getting their attention.

"A newspaper can and should be better than the community in which it is published, but it must not be too much better or it will cease to interest. Ceasing to interest, it will have no subscribers and its opportunity for leadership and service will be gone."

FOUR MAYORS CHOSEN POOR RICHARD AIDES

Kendrick, Stuart, Smith and Moore Appointed to A.A.C.W. Convention Committee by Rowe Stewart—Other Notables Picked



Mayor Kendrick and former Mayors Edwin S. Stuart, Thomas B. Smith and J. Hampton Moore, were added this week to the list of Philadelphians who have been invited to become Associates of Poor Richard to assist the Poor Richard Club in entertaining 10,000 delegates to the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, June 19-24.

A committee of the Poor Richard Club headed by John H. Sinberg, has been appointed by Rowe Stewart, general chairman of the convention committee, to invite prominent business and professional men to extend the hospitality of the city to advertising delegates who will come from every big city in America and from 19 foreign countries.

Mr. Stewart announced that special medals will be struck off to be presented to the associates designating them as official escorts and entertainers, and cards will be issued admitting them to all the convention sessions.

Among the other men who accepted the invitation of Mr. Sinberg's committee are: Charles P. Vaughan, John Fisler, William Findlay Brown, Ignatius J. Horstmann, Jerome H. Louchheim, Agnew T. Dice, Alfred W. Fleisher, J. Barton Townsend, Ernest T. Trigg, Edward H. Bonsall, A. Raymond Raff, Richard E. Norton, Henry G. Brengle, C. Henderson Supplee, Lessing J. Rosenwald, David E. Dallam, W. Pusey Passmore and Samuel T. Bodine.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM
Herbert F. Gunnison

HOW many publishers can boast of having as a golfing partner a world famous prima donna? Such is the good fortune of Herbert F. Gunnison, president and publisher of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle. The charming partner with whom he frequently plays a round of golf is none other than the fascinating Galli-Curci.

Mr. and Mrs. Gunnison have a lovely summer home at Highmount, Ulster County, New York, and one of their neighbors is the vivacious Italian soprano. She and Mrs. Gunnison have been friends and neighbors for years. When Mr. Gunnison goes to the country for a week end or an extended stay he takes his golf clubs with him and a Galli-Curci-Gunnison tournament is at once organized.

Mr. Gunnison has played golf in many lands. He has patronized many of the famous courses of Scotland and England and has played at the principal clubs on the Continent. He does not play a half-bad game. His drives do not have the length of the shots of Abe Mitchell or Bobbie Jones but Walter Travis was hardly more accurate than is the publisher. Mr. Gunnison has a famous, rusty mashie. He has had it for at least 20 years. It is a brute of a club, heavy of shaft and with a prodigious head laid at an angle not attempted by modern club makers.

He does not recall where it came from but he would not part with it for its weight in new subscriptions. He performs wonders with this remarkable-looking club. With it in his grasp he is the soul of confidence and the way he lays the ball up to the hole is the despair of all his opponents. Of course he does not do this every time. Once in a while there is a slip—when he merely gets on the green. But this is the exception to the rule.

BROOKS PAPER COMPANY

Security Building St. Louis, Mo.

After several years of investigation and experimentation, the Mergenthaler Linotype Company announces the introduction of a new newspaper body face. This new Ionic is an exceptionally readable face. The openness of the rounded letters—the height and width of lowercase—the clearcut capitals—the size and fullness of the figures—the absence of marked contrast between thick and thin strokes—the well-fitted units—the maximum letter-count—all of these things go to make this new face a most desirable newspaper face. There are no "pin holes" or sharp corners to fill up with ink; no fine lines to break down in stereotyping. The even color of the characters is particularly adapted to the "roughness" of newspaper stock. The outstanding advantage of the new face is its conservation of vision. The even tone throughout is restful to the eyes without being monotonous. There is enough variation to avoid tiresomeness, yet not enough to be disconcerting. A happy medium has been effected. It is easier to read than seven point faces, yet gives the same word-count to the column as six point. Various degrees of leading can be used to advantage, or the lines may be cast on a solid six and a half point body. The comparative shortness of the ascenders and descenders gives good legibility even when set solid. Cast on seven point body, the 6½ Point Ionic gives the effect of being well leaded—and with a decided gain in word-count over the seven point faces. The first paper to adopt the new face was the Evening News, of Newark. N. J. After a trial of several weeks, the management of the paper is more enthusiastic than ever about it, and readers continue to send in words of commendation daily. One of the most appreciative is Dr. Joseph H, Salov, a leading optometrist, and past president of the New Jersey Optometric Association. Says Dr. Salov, addressing the editor of the Newark Evening News: "It would be unfair for me or any one else who realizes the amount of good that will result from your recent change in the style of type you use in the makeup of the News if this was not recognized, appreciated and so acknowledged by every one interested in the conservation of vision; for it is the accumulated unnecessary strain on the eyes, due to the extremely small and poor type used in many newspapers, that hastens the day when artificial aid must be sought. Although not versed in the nomenclature of the type you have been using for the last few days, it is of a style and character that immediately makes itself felt, and is far more readable and comfortable than the former style. I am sure that there are many thousands of readers who, possibly unknowingly, feel the added comfort." Linotype 6½ Point Ionic No. 5

See how perfectly it meets the difficult requirements of modern newspaper printing conditions. Notice the full, round contours of the letters; no "pin holes" or sharp corners to fill up with ink; no fine lines to break down in stereotyping.

Ask the nearest Linotype Agency for copies of newspaper set in this face and compare it with the body type you are now using both for legibility and word count. You will find it easier to read than 7 point faces and that it gives the same word count as a 6 point.

The 6½ Point Ionic is made with italic and small caps and also in combination with Bold Face No. 2.

NEW ZEALAND EDITOR SAILS FOR GENEVA

Bell of Christchurch Times First to Start for Press Congress Meetings in Switzerland — Three Speakers Named

In a cablegram to Dr. Walter Williams, president of the Press Congress of the World, Robert Bell, editor of the Christchurch (New Zealand) Lyttleton Times, announces he will sail April 18, via Australia and South Africa for London, en route to attend the third meeting of the Press Congress of the World to be held in Geneva-Lausanne, Switzerland, September 14-18. Mr. Bell is a member of the ad interim committee on News Communication.

While there are several editors from the United States traveling in Europe who will proceed to Geneva and Lausanne in time to attend the Press Congress sessions, Mr. Bell has the distinction of being the first editor and publisher to depart for the specific purpose of attending the Press Congress sessions.

Elmer E. Conrath, editor of the Cuba (N. Y.) Patriot and Free Press, and president of the New York Press Association, has accepted an invitation to speak at Geneva-Lausanne on "Journalistic Organizations." Mr. Conrath is a believer in organization, being a member of the National Editorial Association, the Allegheny-Cattaraugus Press Association, the Western New York Newspaper Association, and president of the Allegheny County Publishers' Association. Mrs. Conrath will accompany him on the Press Congress European Tour.

Dr. J. W. Cunliffe of the Department of Journalism, Columbia University, who is spending six months in European countries, will attend the Press Congress sessions and will speak on "Journalistic Education."

Dr. Fred Newton Scott, of the Chair of Rhetoric, University of Michigan, has been designated to represent that institution at the Press Congress sessions. He has been invited to participate in the discussions of the various subjects on the official program.

Secretary-Treasurer James W. Brown has been advised that twelve foreign countries have already made arrangements to be represented by their most distinguished journalists, and delegates are being designated daily by the press associations and societies and circles, indicating an especially large representation at the Geneva-Lausanne sessions.

Reservations are being made by the United States, Canadian and Hawaiian publishers for accommodations on the Cunard liner Carmania, which sails from New York, September 4, bearing the official Press Congress party.

Assembling in New York August 31, the delegates and their wives and daughters will be entertained for four days by the New York publishers and the allied trades. There will be several sightseeing tours, a visit to Coney Island when that resort is at its height of interest, and visits to several of the big newspaper offices in New York City.

There will be five optional tours following the close of the Press Congress sessions for those who have more time to spend in Europe than is needed for the official tour.

Students of schools of journalism are offered special accommodations in the Student Annex of the Carmania, and they will be privileged to attend all sessions of the Press Congress of the World.

Booking for the Press Congress tour and reservations are being made through the Tour Department of the Press Congress of the World, 1700 Times Building, New York.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Harry J. Grant

"I DON'T believe there is any magic or mystery about publishing a newspaper. And I think horse sense is more essential to newspaper success than tradition."

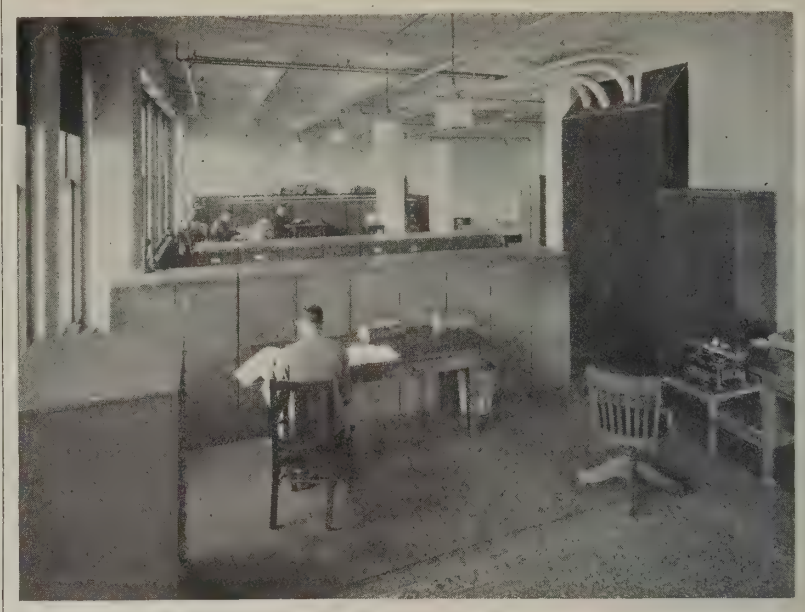
That is the conclusion of Harry J. Grant, publisher of the Milwaukee Journal, after ten years with that newspaper. Before entering newspaper work Mr. Grant had applied the same theory in the advertising business and in industrial connections and had become convinced of its soundness.

"If there is any short cut to lasting success in newspaper making I have failed to find it. Certainly, I do not believe anything is gained by spectacular flare-ups or by trying to be smart. Maybe the patrons of a newspaper can be fooled, but I have yet to see a case where they have been consistently fooled. I believe it is by far the safer policy, even aside from the moral aspect of it, to play one's patrons for intelligent and square-shooting people and put the cards all on the table. Maybe progress will not be so sudden, but we all remember Aesop's thrilling story of the race between the tortoise and the hare.

"I don't mean by that to champion the tortoise style of newspaper. No one can draw himself into his shell and get along in the publishing business. He has got to be eternally on the move toward his goal of bigger and better service to his readers even if he can't always see the road clear its entire way. A peasant of France asked by a traveler how far it was to Lille, answered:

" 'I don't know, for I have never been that far, but yonder lies the road to Lille.'

"The publisher can not always know how far it is to his goal, but he should pick his road carefully and keep everlastingly at it, and his surest plan is a steady gait rather than the spectacular, but inconsistent leaps of Aesop's hare."



ILLINOIS PROGRAM COMPLETED

Second Advertising Clubs' Convention to Meet in Peoria, April 27

Sam O'Blair, director of the second annual convention of the Advertising Clubs of Illinois which will be held in Peoria April 27, this week completed tentative programs for the session which will be held in the gold room of the Jefferson Hotel.

Among the speakers on the program are Homer Buckley, who will discuss "Retail Selling"; Frank LeRoy Blachard, of the Henry L. Doherty Investment Company, on "Popular Misconceptions of Advertising"; James R. Ozanne, advertising manager, Carson, Pirie Scott & Co., Chicago, "Backing Up Your Advertising," Robert A. Warfel, executive secretary, National Advertising Commission, "Community Advertising," and Miss Helen Bennett, managing director of the Women's World Fair, Chicago, on "The Woman Window Shopper."

The Peoria club at its weekly meeting named W. T. Smith chairman of the nominating committee which will submit a list of candidates for the annual meeting.

The Philadelphia Inquirer Modernizes Its "R.D."

When the Philadelphia Inquirer moved into its new quarters in the Elverson Building, its Reference Department was completely modernized. The old "Morgue" was left behind with all other out-of-date equipment. The new Inquirer Reference Department as pictured above is a model of its kind.

The old-fashioned "morgue" is a great waster of floor space—it sprawls outward as well as upward. And floor space in a newspaper office is much too valuable to waste.

But even with the increased space, there is no increase in efficiency. To the contrary, the more space a "morgue" takes, the less efficiently it operates.

The modernized Reference Department is compact. It saves valuable space, and in doing so, increases the speed with which any record may be found. The saving in time means also a saving in its cost of operation—a reduction in the number of persons engaged in Reference Department work.

Shaw-Walker Newspaper Reference Department Service studies the individual requirements of a newspaper and then makes recommendations for meeting those requirements.

WHEN A DAILY IS FRIENDLY WITH ITS READERS

Milwaukee Journal Finds Friendliness Bigger Force Than Friendship—Organization of Public Service Bureau Explained—500,000 Aided in 1925

By HARRY J. GRANT

(Publisher of Milwaukee Journal)

Harry J. Grant, publisher of the "Milwaukee Journal," was asked recently by EDITOR & PUBLISHER to discuss a newspaper's opportunity for performing public service, and the following article is herewith presented as his reply.

In submitting the article, Mr. Grant declared:

"Of one thing I am certain: the Milwaukee Journal has greatly profited through this kind of work, and I believe it quite possible for the average newspaper to do likewise to a greater or less degree."

GIVEN a news policy which commands the confidence and respect of the community, a newspaper by manifesting a spirit of consistent friendliness to its public, can build up an appreciation of its service which in time will become its biggest asset. Friendliness, founded on recognition of dependence and an honest desire to be helpful, is today a bigger force in business than friendship. Friendship brings favor, but friendliness brings a general recognition of worth.

The Public Service Bureau of the Milwaukee Journal is the organized expression of the Journal's wish to be helpful to the people of Milwaukee and Wisconsin, a wish that follows simply and naturally from the knowledge that whatever success it has attained has been attained with their support. The bureau controls the newspaper's latch-string, occupying the entire first floor lobby, the point of first contact of the people with the paper and, in many instances, the only point of contact. What the first impression of the visitor will be, therefore, is largely determined by the employees in this bureau.

Under the supervision of the Public Service Bureau are a lounge and rest rooms; rooms for public meetings which are assigned without charge; a tour department with an automobile license branch; general information counter; post office and library branches; a Western Union telegraph station; and a counter for the free distribution or sale of literature relating to the Journal—baseball score cards, radio logs, booklets on special subjects reprinted from the newspaper, etc. Affiliated with the bureau and under its general supervision are the counter classified ad-taking and reply services, and a cashier. The organization of the lobby service is designed to give the visitor and customer the maximum attention at this point, making it unnecessary to send him elsewhere in the building to fill his needs.

The Journal Tour Bureau is probably the oldest newspaper organization of the kind in the country, its beginning dating back fully 15 years. Long before the Wisconsin Highway Commission inaugurated its system of state highway markings, W. W. Rowland (better known as "Brownie"), promoter of the Tour Bureau, was out in the state directing the blazing of trails through the woods and marking directions on the open highways. He, and others with him, posted signs on the forest trees, repaired roads, and later put up more permanent road markings. Routes were laid out, among others, to Madison, Kilbourn, Minneapolis, Green Bay and Chicago, and a number of Wisconsin highways are still known to the older settlers as Journal roads.

Last year employees of the Tour Bureau answered fully 200,000 inquiries for travel information. Its Wisconsin highway guide, "The Call of the Open Road," sells to the extent of 60,000 to 75,000 copies each year. The Journal Tour Club, organized in 1922 and serviced by the Tour Bureau, has 30,000 members, with 43 states and several foreign countries represented in the membership.

The Journal Tour Club specializes in travel information service, particularly travel by automobile. Immediately upon joining the club, each member receives a kit of maps and travel data sufficient to enable him to take any ordinary trip in comfort and security. And this initial service is supplemented by highway information, routings, special maps, and other similar service on request, throughout the year. This service even includes making of reservations at hotels and resorts where desired. A suite of rest rooms for visitors and tourists adjoin the Tour Bureau service counter in the lobby.

Automobile licenses in Wisconsin are issued by the Secretary of State, at Madison, and previous to last year the motorist was not able to get his license anywhere else. In December, 1924, by arrangement with the Secretary of State and under the direction of a representative of that office assigned to the Tour Bureau, permits were issued for automobile licenses from the Tour Bureau. Due to legal difficulties, it was not possible to issue the license plates directly, but a temporary certificate, recognized by the police authorities, was issued and the application sent to Madison, the Secretary of State mailing the plates directly to the applicant. During 1925, licenses were issued to 60,000 persons, involving a total of more than $750,000. This service has been of benefit to the motorists in that it has enabled them to operate their cars immediately without waiting for license plates to be received by mail, and it has likewise resulted in the receipt of the plates themselves a week to ten days sooner than they are usually received when application is made to the state capital.

The Journal has three meeting rooms in its new building and a number of conference rooms, which are open to the public for civic and community gatherings without charge. These rooms, which range in seating capacity from a dozen to 300 persons, are assigned through the Public Service Bureau. During 1925, 152 distinct groups, totaling approximately 12,000 persons, held meetings in the building. In this total those organizations which met more than once during the year (and a considerable number meet regularly) were counted only the once. Commercial and retail groups; women's organizations; ministers; radio, science and photographic clubs; engineers; accountants; landscape gardeners; optometrists; cosmeticians; automobile dealers; teachers; boy and girl scouts; organizations devoted to sports; Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs; the American Legion; Modern Woodmen; teachers and church parties —these are but a few of the many activities represented by organizations meeting in the building. So popular has the Journal become as a center of meeting activity that the Public Service Bureau now experiences considerable difficulty in finding a place for the many new organizations which want to hold meetings.

Every day at the Journal is an open house day for the public. The paper conducts tours of the plant every week day on the hour between 9:00 a. m. and 5:00 p. m., furnishing a trained guide for the purpose. During 1925, more than 25,000 persons were shown through every department of the newspaper in regularly conducted tours, approximately 1,500 trips being made. Included in the total were more than 5,000 school children who made the trip with their teachers.

In the lounge, which is open alike to the public and to employees, there are conducted quarterly exhibits of the work of Wisconsin artists. Pictures shown at the exhibition must be the original work of artists who now are or have been legal residents of Wisconsin and who have previously shown their work in recognized art exhibits. Five quarterly exhibits have been conducted since the gallery was opened in December, 1924, and between forty and fifty thousand persons have viewed the pictures. The establishment of a permanent display room for the exhibition of the work of Wisconsin artists has greatly stimulated the interest in art throughout the state. The various locals of the Wisconsin Federation of Women's Clubs have used liberally the material printed by the Journal on the art and artists exhibiting in their courses of art study; and the material has also been furnished in quantity to the libraries and to the schools. At the present time, Frank Tenny Johnson, a former Milwaukeean and one of the foremost contemporary painters of western life, is showing 21 pictures in the gallery, filled with the romance of a fast disappearing life—prairie schooners, cowboys, horse thieves, Indians.

Service at the information counter includes general information, postal station, branch library, and the acceptance of gas and electric light bills for payment: In its first year, the Post Office branch handled $15,000 worth of stamps and nearly $30,000 in money orders. The number of persons given information of one kind or another exceeded 70,000. Eleven hundred library transactions were made with the public and almost the same number with employees.

The classified advertising counter handled more than 56,500 classified transactions during the year, and perhaps half that many requests for service came to the classified advertising reply counter.

If all the activities of the Public Service Bureau are considered as one, it is not overestimating the contacts to say that fully 500,000 persons received some kind of service from this department of the Journal during 1925. As a matter of fact, the actual number is probably quite a bit in excess of this, for while a record is kept of most of the service by a method of mechanical counters, it is human for employees to forget to record a certain percentage of the transactions.

Included in the Journal's Public Service activities, although not conducted by its Public Service Bureau, is WHAD, Marquette University-Milwaukee Journal Radio Station. WHAD is a 500-watt station, operating on a wave length of 275 meters. Marquette University conducts the sending station and one evening program each week and the Journal organizes and directs the programs broadcast during the year from seven different points in Milwaukee.

Daily programs, including news, music and staff talks, are broadcast from the Journal building. Special evening programs are broadcast from the Wisconsin Theatre, the largest theatre in the state, and from the Milwaukee Athletic Club. On Tuesday night of each week there is broadcast a program featuring none but Wisconsin musicians. The purpose of this program is the same as the purpose of the gallery of Wisconsin art—to stimulate an interest in good music and to give encouragement to those with musical ideals. Nothing but the best in classical and popular music finds a place on the Tuesday night programs.

On Friday night the program features high school bands and Saturday morning at 11:00 there is a program of music and stories exclusively for the children. The Sunday afternoon concerts are given by the Turnverein Milwaukee Little Symphony Orchestra, supported by the Milwaukee Society of Turnerbund, the oldest of gymnastic societies. Although it has been possible to hear the Turnverein concerts at the Turner Hall on Fourth street nearly every Sunday of the winter season since 1854, this is the first season that the regular concerts have been heard outside of Milwaukee.

In the summer the open air municipal band concerts in Washington Park are broadcast twice a week, as are the many athletic events at the Marquette University stadium.

From its experience with public service activities, the Journal management is convinced that a reasonable expenditure for these purposes is justified as promoting an increasing good will toward the newspaper. It is not enough, however, to set up an organization and announce to all and sundry that services for the public have been created. There must have been woven into the newspaper's fundamental policy and manifest over a period of years an ideal to play square and to be useful which already has established in the public mind a confidence in the newspaper which leads it to accept with equal confidence the paper's new ventures. And the spirit which inspires confidence in the paper must equally move those employed in the Public Service Bureau. In other words, they must be concerned first of all with being helpful to those who seek service, rather than considering at all times what the newspaper is going to get out of the service they render. It is service performed for service's sake, which builds mightiest for good will.

"THE FIRST PARAGRAPH IS THE HARDEST!"

Worried Cubs Can Find Encouragement in Confession of James O'Donnell Bennett, Brilliant Chicago Tribune Veteran—Takes Copious Notes and Does His "Quilting" in Long Hand

By LUCILE BRIAN GILMORE

SOME 35 years ago in Chicago, a young cub—chap named Bennett, they said around the Times office—strolled up Milwaukee avenue, through a section of tenements, nursing a grouch because he was getting "five cent assignments." Prosaic death notices were his lot and he was nearly bubbling over with literary flights which he thought his city editor was wilfully supressing.

A street scene caught his eye, held his interest, finally fascinated him and an hour later he sat at his desk in the Times office and on a rough pad wrote his first masterpiece. It was a masterpiece. The writer was James O'Donnell Bennett, whose name is associated with masterpieces of newspaper reporting wherever fine news work is discussed.

Sympathetic writing and drama—with a background of the masterpieces of the ages in a library of 5,000 volumes—are Mr. Bennett's hobbies.

It was a bit of drama acted on the curb that brought him his first metropolitan opening in the newspaper world and put him in a position to receive first rate assignments in later years. He has written some of the most vivid impressionistic dispatches published in the Chicago Tribune and has covered events in all the high and low places of civilization.

Bennett—Jim Bennett—was born in Jackson, Mich., and with some difficulties completed a preliminary schooling there. His difficulties lay in mathematics. Whenever he saw a fraction he shuddered. Trigonometry he viewed with utter despair, and so he had to be taken out of high school to go under special tutoring to acquire all the mathematics then thought necessary to the adequately equipped matriculant.

In the fall of 1889 he was sent to the University of Michigan to take his entrance examinations for the university. Twisting over his Greek he saw a fresh faced young man nearby in similar contortions, and at first glance he liked and trusted him—liked him and confided in him so much that he sidled up afterward with the query, "think you passed?"

It was the beginning of the fabled "beautiful friendship." The other boy was, so he said, Ed Beck, from Holton, Kan. Today, he is high in the newspaper world and is known in American newspaperdom as Edward S. Beck. He is the managing editor of the Chicago Tribune.

It turned out, to Bennett's despair, that the university has rigid standards in higher mathematics, and many a bitter hour they caused him. Finally he took his sorrow to his father and persuaded him that he felt a call for naught but the newspaper. The elder Bennett reluctantly permitted him to come home. The son found work on the Jackson Daily Patriot at $10 a week.

Three months was Bennett's initiatory period. He went to the Grand Rapids Herald and there met Frank Cobb, later the premier editorial writer of the New York World. Cobb, the city editor, held Bennett only three months. When they parted there were no tears—Bennett having demonstrated his aversion to routine by overlooking a circuit court probate list one busy day. When Cobb uttered bitter words Bennett took a train to Chicago. The Times then owned by Carter Harrison hired him, but Harry Woodbridge, the city editor, was not interested in Bennett's impressionistic flights. It was his discouragement with the austere Woodbridge that sent him up Milwaukee avenue and face to face with a piteous curbstone melodrama that Bennett remembers to this day.

A little girl of six years and a boy of five were re-enacting a home scene dreadfully familiar to them. Bennett saw the younger child reeling, and crying out in imitation of a maudlin voice, "I'se blind drunk! I'se blind drunk today!" The cub reporter saw the sister's eyes widen in fear and her lips twist in anguish and hatred. That was the scene which gave Bennett his start in impressionistic writing. He wrote the scene as he saw it and the Times printed it as written—and his troubles were over.

Bennett's mechanical methods, like his writing, are distinctly his own. He gets a thrill out of every story and he begins to simmer inside. But he is a slow writer—especially slow until the first paragraph—which he thinks is half the battle—has been hammered out. He and Percy Hammond, now New York Herald Tribune dramatic critic, with whom Bennett was long a fellow workman, never could get enough pencil sharpeners to keep them both busy while they were mentally wheeling through open spaces trying to get that first paragraph shaped up.

On an assignment he is a copious note taker, and from the tiny sheets of notes he puts together his story, much to the entertainment of office mates who call the method and result "Jimmie's quilting." All his copy is hand written. He tried for six months to master the letters and figures on a typewriter but he couldn't. He is a survivor of the old group of diehards who never gave in to mechanical aids in the newspaper office.

He likes to think of a reporter as versatile and strives for versatility. He likes the word "journalist," and he thinks a good reporter's work is worthy of the good old name.

"Read, read, read," he says. He does that, and he has 5,000 volumes in his "bookroom," as he calls it. With an old cap pulled down to shade his eyes—a cap which a critical outsider might jest about as too small, or as perhaps a relic of his Jackson days—he can remain quietly buried in a book for hours and come out of it knowing all that was in the book and most of what was in the author who wrote it. The book need not be profound. By his own words he gets as much joy out of "Alice in Wonderland." as out of the odes of Horace.

Bennett, the cub with new-won spurs, soon quit Woodbridge for the Chicago Herald and a year later, in 1894 went with the Chronicle soon after it was founded by John R. Walsh. A libel suit ended Bennett there and he went to the Journal where he had an occasional fling at dramatic criticism. In 1900 be became Julia Marlowe's press agent and for the next two years reveled in his adoration of drama and his admiration of Miss Marlowe. But the call of the newspaper was strong and one night when Miss Marlowe was giving the American premiere of Catulle Mendes' "Queen Fiametta" in Boston, he received a wire from the Chicago Herald. He asked Miss Marlowe for her advice and she knew where his heart was and told him to go. There Bennett remained, writing dramatic criticism, until James Keely bought the Herald in 1914, when his connection with the Tribune began.

One of his early assignments was to Europe with a Chicago aldermanic committee on a tour to study English and continental railway terminals and it introduced him to his favorite indoor and outdoor sport, watching and writing war. When the war clouds broke Bennett happened to be in Antwerp. He hurried to London and arrived at night while the streets were swarming with excited people and Big Ben was sounding the quarter hours what proved to be England's tocsin. At short intervals the king and queen with the royal children would appear on the balcony of Buckingham palace in sight of seething, cheering crowds. It thrilled Bennett. At midnight war was declared and Bennett cabled 2,800 words to the Tribune.

Bennett hastened to Liege and met John T. McCutcheon, Irvin Cobb, Harry Hansen, literary editor of the Chicago Daily News, Lewis of the A. P. That group started on a 40-mile hike in Belgium hunting a "good story." They got it. At Beaumont they halted their hazardous journey and took station in the headquarters of the crown prince of Germany, remaining for a time at the spot where years before Napoleon had passed the night before the battle of Waterloo. A German sergeant found them and threw them out. They landed in prison, got dirty and greasy and it finally dawned on them that American correspondents were not wanted around there. They were released to the American consul at Aix-la-Chapelle—a bedraggled outfit, but Irvin Cobb never let the sense of humor leave them. Cobb had lost, among other things, his coat. Somewhere he picked up a butcher's coat and with that drawn around his ample girth and with many a merry quip about their plight he helped keep up spirits during a trying period.

Bennett remained on the German side of the lines until 1917 when he had to seek neutral territory. For the next year from Sweden he sent home much Russian news, Sweden being the highway between the world and Russia. In 1918, news being best then in America, he returned to his native land.

Bennett has a pet scene which he calls the greatest spectacle of his life. It was in 1916 when the Germans took Warsaw. Near the Emperor Bennett stood while Wilhelm II reviewed his victorious landsturm men and simultaneously watched the passing of 80,000 Russians captured by his Prussians. The Kaiser admired the stature of the Russians, he was pleased by their spirit in defeat, and his was exalted by his own triumph.

The Russians, instead of being downhearted, were frankly pleased that the fighting was all over for them. They passed in carefree mood and with intensely interested eyes. When the emperor released his resounding phrases to his troops, such as "You are crowned with the oak leaves of victory," the thousands of cavalry horses drawn up before him would neigh jubilantly, as if they neighed at a signal. Perhaps they did. Who knows? The emperor was a good stage manager—the Belasco of monarchs.

Bennett was alert to the drama—to the satire—of the scene, the grandiose setting of the German Emperor, the humor of the conquered people in their open delight. Most of all he recalls the elation of the Emperor's high commanding officers, when they gazed upon the long columns of stalwart and gigantic Russians. Those Germans rejoiced in them as war material, and Bennett still wonders whether they saw that day a vision of future alliances when they rubbed hands and muttered:

"Give us these boys (The Russians) and, with them trained and us leading, we could conquer the world—yes, the moon."

ENGINEER SUES FOR $250,000

Claims Tulsa World Articles Held Him Up to Public Hatred

Damages of $250,000 for alleged libelous articles published in the Tulsa World concerning the Spavinaw water project, from which the city of Tulsa gets its water, is asked by W. R. Holway, Spavinaw engineer, in a suit filed in Tulsa.

The action is against the World Publishing Company and specifies that a series of articles carried during the latter part of 1925 were of such a character to expose the plaintiff to "public hatred, contempt, ridicule and to deprive him of public confidence."

One cause of the suit was an editorial which stated the water project was not functioning properly.

Two of the alleged libelous articles were concerning the fees of almost $500,000 paid to engineers employed on the project. A paragraph of the story referred to an alleged expense item of $880 for "depreciation on a Ford car" which Holway asserts was not on the minutes of the water board.

Holway charges that the World attempted to show he made more money than his contract called for.

Two of the articles complained of were editorials which spoke of the "reckless use of money."

ANNUAL MEETING OF ASSOCIATED PRESS

Frank B. Noyes, Washington Star, was re-elected president of the A. P. when the directors met following the meeting's adjournment Wednesday morning. It is Mr. Noyes' 27th term in that office.

Col. R. R. McCormick, Chicago Tribune, was elected first vice-president and J. N. Heiskell, Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette, was elected second vice-president.

Melville E. Stone was re-elected secretary and Kent Cooper assistant secretary, and J. R. Youatt, treasurer.

The executive committee was named for the coming year as follows:

Mr. Noyes, Adolph S. Ochs, New York Times; Robert McLean, Philadelphia Bulletin; Charles Hopkins Clark, Hartford Courant; Elbert H. Baker, Cleveland Plain Dealer; Clark Howell, Atlanta Constitution, and E. Lansing Ray, St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The following were elected members of the nominating committee: Central Division, Marcellus M. Murdock, Wichita (Kan.) Eagle, and C. K. Blandin, St. Paul Dispatch, Eastern Division, Edward Flicker, Bridgeport Telegram, and Ogden M. Reid, New York Herald-Tribune; Pacific Division, Edward A. Dickson, Los Angeles Express, and Charles S. Stanton, San Francisco Bulletin; Southern Division, H. C. Adler, Chattanooga Times, and Victor H. Hanson, Birmingham (Ala.) News.

The auditing committee chosen comprised: Chairman, Marcellus E. Foster, Houston (Tex.) Chronicle; secretary, E. E. Smith, Meriden (Conn.) Record; E. J. Fehn, Evansville (Ind.) Journal; C. A. Morden, Portland Oregonian.

The following members were appointed as the committee on credentials: Herbert F. Gunnison, Brooklyn Eagle; Herbert Bayard Swope, executive editor, New York World, and David E. Smiley, executive editor, Curtis-Martin newspapers, Philadelphia and New York.

Reading of the annual report of the A. P. board of directors, discussion of news broadcasting, and praise of the present management occupied attention of members at the special meeting held April 19. About 200 attended.

In tribute to the late Victor F. Lawson, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, and an A. P. founder, the members stood one minute in silence.

President Noyes, presiding, called upon Mr. Cooper to read the report, which follows:

"With the year just closed the Associated Press begins its second quarter of a century and the traditional loyalty and enterprise of the staff have been evidenced by the work which has been accomplished. The membership will have noticed that in the development of the news report some changes have been made. Broadly, these changes were conceived upon the idea that with intensification of effort based upon the ideals upon which the staff always has labored, the news report could encompass a more complete picture of what the world is doing. This without increasing the quantity but rather by improving the quality of the news report.

"Granted that the subjects to be reported are decent there has been no intention to avoid any matters having news interest. As always, however, the staff has continued to strive for the first essential which is truthful reporting. Although there has been no diminution of effort to obtain news of matters of prime importance, economic, political and social, there has been greater effort to obtain news of the activities of women, of art, music, amusements, including the theatre and motion pictures, of science ad of literary affairs. Domestic and foreign coverage of events having a supplementary connection with the outstanding news of the day has been stressed.

"In the latter work special attention is directed to the supplemental mail services, both the general mail service and the special state services. The general mail service has associated itself more as a feature vehicle of the regular report. The effort has been to make it human, entertaining and interesting; a service that for style, subject matter and treatment would provide a better balance to the spot news of the day. The Board feels that this is being done at no sacrifice to the fundamental essentials of our news report.

"The widespread use of all of this material and the favorable comment from members have led the board to believe that the reaction to this matter favors its continuance. Members who heretofore have looked to other sources for material of this kind report that they have found the Associated Press news service now sufficiently meets their general requirements.

"Through the foreign service member papers are now receiving the most intimate general outline of activities abroad that has ever been furnished. Aside from the news of greatest import and happenings of curious interest, there are at proper times resumes of things done and things left undone in any great foreign movement, such as international conferences, national political situations, progresses toward national self expression and always there is endeavor properly to represent the efforts of minorities.

"These dispatches are interpretative only through the statements of facts or the quotations of participants which the dispatches themselves disclose. As always there has not been and will not be any editorial opinion expressed by the Associated Press in any dispatches.

"To the regular cable letters for Sunday morning papers there have been added cable letters for Saturday evening papers. The foreign staffs have been traveling about the countries in which they are assigned, obtaining news not available in the capitals of those countries.

"Steps have been taken to bring the members into more intimate interest in the Associated Press and its affairs. The general manager himself, in the last year, has attended meetings for some thirty-five states. These state meetings have developed larger attendances by members and their staffs than ever before. They have elected members of the advisory boards for their divisions and these advisory boards have been functioning better than ever.

"Plans for expediting the transmission of the news report by the traffic department which have been introduced within the last year include the installation of high speed automatic telegraphs on every trunk circuit and on several state circuits. Thus, high speed automatic telegraphs are operating from Maine to California and from Washington to Florida. Notwithstanding that more than 500 automatic telegraphic printers have been installed, the Associated Press has today, due to the growth of state leased wire circuits, more telegraph operators than ever before, the total now being 1156.

"The board of directors appeals to the membership for even greater interest in and activity toward the development of the Association. In support of the efforts of the staff to improve the Associated Press news report it asks whole hearted co-operation from the membership. The staff cannot function at the highest point of efficiency without full loyalty on the part of the members it serves. Without the interest and loyalty of the members of the organization, an excellent staff will find discouragement if the members do not appreciate what the staff is doing and by their own attitude encourage the staff to still greater effort. With an enthusiasm on the part of the membership equal to that of the staff, the Associated Press, the greatest co-operative endeavor, may look toward the future with confidence."

Tribute to Kent Cooper, new general manager, was paid by Mr. Noyes.

"As an executive officer of the Associated Press," Mr. Noyes said, "I am very sure that since the days of Melville E. Stone's close and intimate contact with members there has been no such sincere effort to bring the executive side into close relation with the membership as there is today. Mr. Cooper is striving to learn what the members want and to do what the members want as far as possible.

"Mr. Cooper has traveled from one coast to the other since his election to the position of general manager and has been a direct benefit to each one of us.

"I speak as an individual, but I am sure the members and the directors agree with me."

After lengthy applause had died down, Mr. Cooper rose to reply.

"I must," he said, "give credit where it is due,—to the entire staff of the Associated Press, to all its correspondents from Tokio to Moscow, 2,000 of the finest newspaper men."

The present liberal policy of the A. P. in permitting members to broadcast news "of extraordinary interest" received commendation from Harry Chandler, Los Angeles Times, and Maj. Charles A. Webb, Asheville (N. C.) Citizen.

"Radio, far from hurting the newspapers is a benefit to them," was the contention of Mr. Chandler. "The bare announcement of a news event over the radio is an incentive to the listener to purchase a newspaper to read the full account."

No action was taken modifying the present ruling regarding broadcasting.

C. P. J. Mooney, editor of the Memphis Commercial Appeal, and A. P. vice-president, speaking to the members, called their attention to the increased use of high speed printers on all trunk wires, the improvement in the mail report, and the coverage now being offered of scientific and educational news.

"I suggest that you spike everything that you haven't room to print," he advised. "Then look it over before you send in complaints to the directors. You will probably find that the story which you felt you should have had was there all the time."

Col. Robert Ewing, publisher of the New Orleans States, also joined in the discussion. He praised the extension of Associated Press service into smaller cities of the nation, stating that this policy has strengthened the report considerably.

NEWSPAPER MEN MOURN LOSS OF JOHN BUDD

Famous Special Representative Dead at Fifty-eight—Tributes From Publishers Hold His Life to Have Been True to High Ideals—Stalwart Foe of Fraudulent Advertising

JOHN BUDD, president of the John Budd Company, newspaper advertising representatives of No. 9 East 37th street, New York, and one of the outstanding figures in advertising circles, died Sunday morning at St. Luke's Hospital, New York City.

Mr. Budd was born July 9, 1867, at Tuckahoe, N. J. He began his professional experience with the Pennsylvania Grit, at Williamsport, Pa. In 1902 he went to Chicago and joined the firm of Smith & Thompson, newspaper advertising representatives, and in 1908 came to New York for that concern. In 1910 the firm name was changed to the John Budd Company.

He was a charter member of the New York Advertising Club. H. H. Charles, former president of the club in paying Mr. Budd tribute called him one of the oldest newspaper representatives and a man who had won the confidence of high grade newspaper publishers across the continent.

Mr. Budd fell ill last October and went to Florida to recuperate. Last month he returned to New York unimproved. His death was due to chronic nephritis with complications.

Mr. Budd was a member of the Six Point League and the Union League Club of Chicago. He was a member of the Wykagy Country Club, a director of the New Rochelle Chamber of Commerce and a governor of the New Rochelle Hospital. His home was at No. 18 Elk avenue, New Rochelle, having gone to that place to live in 1911.

He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Ola K. Sheffer of Liberty, Pa. Funeral services were held at 8 o'clock Monday evening at the Plaza Funeral Chapel. The body was taken to Williamsport, Pa., for burial in Wildwood Cemetery.

Mr. Budd represented more than twenty of the largest American newspapers, most of his clients being in the South.

The following tributes to Mr. Budd were received by EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

F. C. WITHERS, business manager, Columbia (S. C.) State: John Budd was first of all a man. He had ideals for his life and ideals for his business. The making of money was desirable, in fact, necessary, but it was a secondary consideration with John Budd. Service came first—service to the newspapers he represented, service to the cause of clean, truthful advertising, service to his own organization. He always placed the interests of the newspapers above any immediate financial reward to himself, and his attitude was always one of a true representative of the publisher.

"He stood for all that was high-and noble in the advertising business and no thought of taking an unfair advantage ever entered his mind. His spirit permeated his whole organization, and influenced all who came in contact with him. I deem myself fortunate to have known him."

H. C. ADLER, Chattanooga Times: "John Budd died too soon. The world and the profession in which he was engaged were not ready to have him die. Those whom he represented in the newspaper business were not his employers, they were his friends. A man of the finest ideals in his chosen field having in mind the highest ethics of the business side of journalism, he never compromised in the wrong, loyal to his friends, loyal to those he represented, a man of the highest honor and strictest integrity, he will be sadly missed by those with whom he was associated and his passing away leaves a void which it will be difficult if not impossible to fill. I mourn the loss of a personal friend and associate."

W. C. COPELAND, editor Newport News (Va.) Press and Times Herald, and president Virginia Press Association: "My estimate of John Budd is that he was a valuable asset to America. Not only was he one of the ablest and most successful men in the advertising field, not only did he render serviceable aid in developing new sources of advertising, but no man did more than he to root out the fakers and promote honest advertising. He was highly esteemed by the Virginia Press Association, whose members he helped with his wise and friendly counsel. His death is a bereavement to journalism and to me it is a personal sorrow."

The late John Budd

CHARLES G. MULLEN, Tampa Daily News: "John Budd was for two decades an outstanding figure in national advertising. Few men knew the game as well or played it as energetically and conscientiously. His personal standards were high and he contributed much to the fight for improved methods and practices in his profession. He was a type of man that the newspapers and advertisers of America can ill afford to lose."

JAMES M. THOMSON, publisher, New Orleans Item-Tribune: "John Budd's death means the loss to me of a personal friend with whom I have had various business relations for nearly 25 years. I believe nearly everyone who ever knew John Budd was his friend, for his attitude toward all who came in contact with him was sincerely friendly.

"He possessed to an un unusual degree the qualities of stability and dependability. He had a long, honorable, constructive and highly successful career in the special advertising agency business. He was a substantial factor in the American advertising world."

PLEASANT A. STOVALL, editor, Savannah (Ga.) Press: "I had known John Budd for 20 years. His advertising firm has been our agent in New York, Chicago, St. Louis and Atlanta. He was something more than a business representative; he was a personal friend, taking interest in everything that concerned my paper and my family. He has been a guest in my house and I feel his loss keenly. He was enterprising and helpful, the soul of the honor and was a leader among the energetic men who have made American advertising a standard all over the world."

C. P. J. MOONEY, president, Memphis Commercial Appeal: "John Budd was not only a very efficient and energetic business representative, but he was our good personal friend. The Commercial Appeal lost by his death one of its strong supporting pillars."

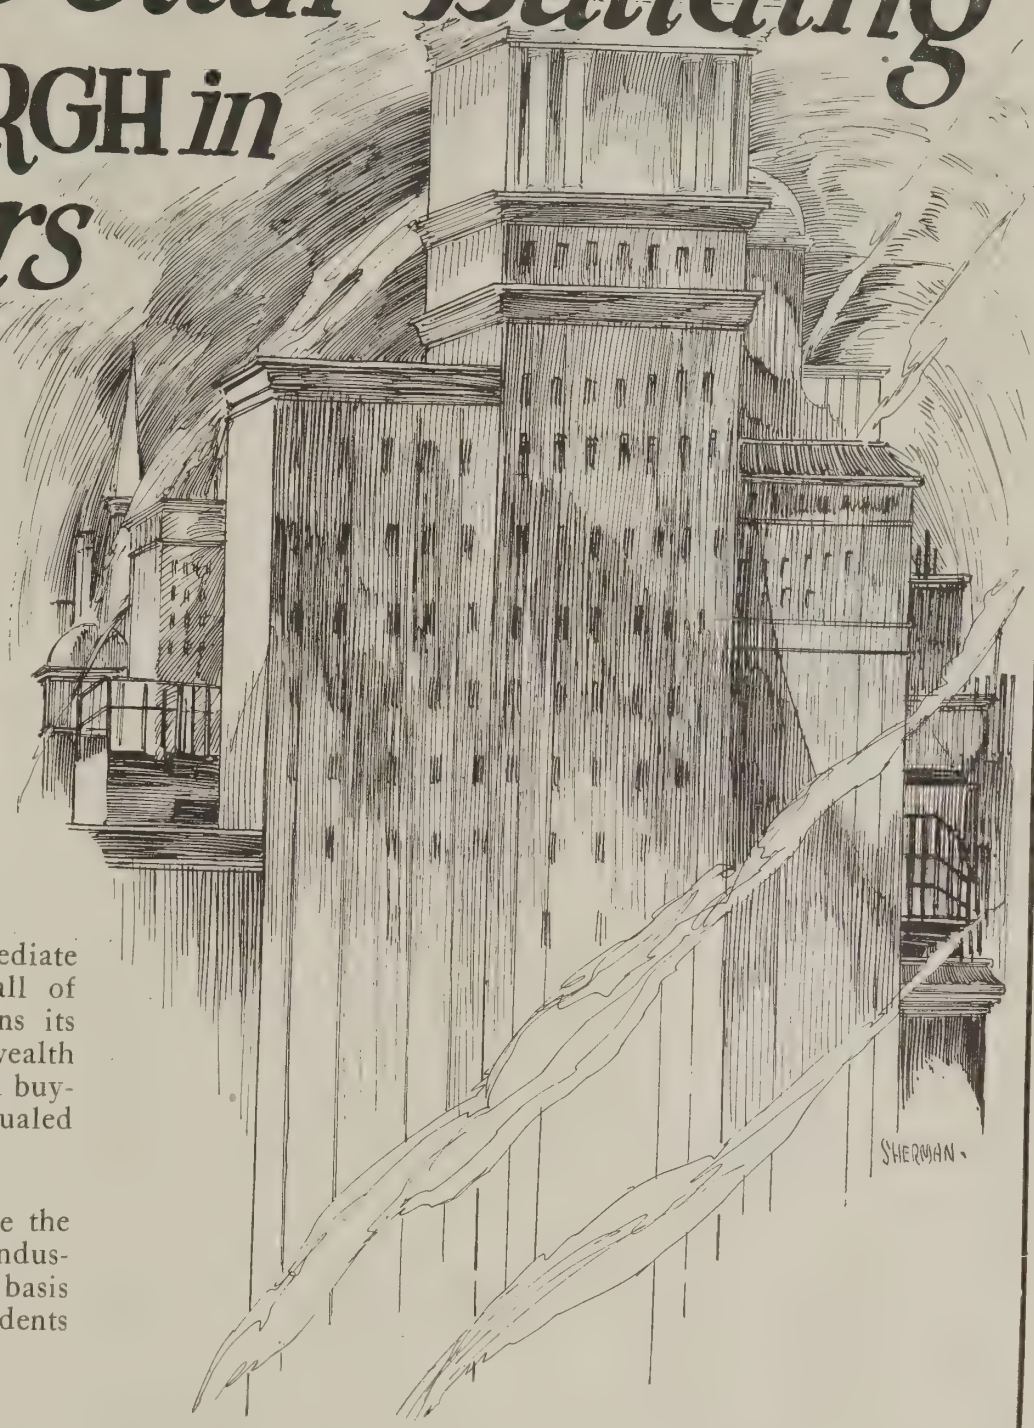
HARVEY D. BURRILL, publisher, Syracuse Journal:—"For 18 years John Budd represented The Syracuse Journal in the national advertising field. During all that time I was close to Mr. Budd in a personal as well as a business way, and it is one of the gratifying things of my life that I was permitted to enjoy the friendship of this splendid man. He was indeed a man among men, a leader in the advertising world and an inspiration to all with whom he came in contact. His passing is a distinct loss which will be long and deeply felt by a multiude of friends."

El Paso Herald and Times:—"John Budd's name was like sterling on plate. His worth ennobled his work, and his wisdom and knightly friendship stimulated all who knew him. The manner in which his large force has carried on during his illness is high testimony to his leadership."

W. W. HOLLAND, Spartansburg Herald and Journal—"To my mind Mr. Budd was one of the outstanding advertising experts of this country. He was always ready and willing to do this part to place the advertising profession on a high plane. His passing saddens the hearts of many who loved him for his sterling worth and unflagging loyalty to the principles for which he stood."

Resigns as Historian

M. L. Shipman has resigned as historian of the North Carolina Press Association. For eight years Mr. Shipman has held this post. In his letter of resignation, addressed to J. W. Atkins, of Castonia, president of the organization, he expresses regret at having to give up the position.



Mr. Shipman states that the task is an important one, and that he will not have time to give to it this year. Recently the Commercial Printing Company, of Raleigh, of which he is president, suffered a disastrous fire, and Mr. Shipman says he will be obliged to devote all his energies to rebuilding.

Billion Dollar Building in PITTSBURGH in 5 Years

Including Pittsburgh private and utilities corporations and individual private builders, it is estimated that a total of $877,000,000.00 has been expended in construction activities during the past five years. In the same period the public authorities of the city and county are credited with expenditures on construction totaling $185,000,000.00. Thus the grand sum for building construction for the period is in excess of $1,000,000,000.00.

The building program for the immediate future is based upon the same scale, all of which indicates that Pittsburgh maintains its supremacy as a market, with per capita wealth above all other cities and communities and buying power and spending practice unequaled anywhere.

Supporting this evidence of prosperity are the extremely optimistic reports in the steel industry—the steel corporation operating on a basis of 90% capacity and higher with independents running nearly as high on the average.

REPORT OF THE PAPER COMMITTEE

During the past year your committee has reported to you through the bulletins not only the production of news-print and the gains or losses in volume of advertising, but also the percentage of increase of consumption, together with other data of particular interest to those who may desire to follow the trend or forecast the future market.

The considerable installation by the paper mills of new machines during 1925 totaling some thousand tons per day had been confidently expected to provide an overplus of the product and indeed would have done so with a fair margin to spare, had it not been for the fact that production on a number of these new machines was greatly delayed. That condition and some others, together with a greatly increased demand caused by unprecedented volume of advertising during October and November, brought about at that time a very firm market in so far as spot paper was concerned. We may expect this condition to continue in greater or less degree until the approach of late spring, at which time the installation of machines which will provide additional tonnage, taken together with the seasonable falling off of consumption, should see the end temporarily at least of conditions calculated to cause a firm market.

The new machines brought into the market during 1925 have a capacity of 1,000 tons per day to which will be added an increase of some 600 tons per day during the first six months of this year, and 500 tons per day during the last six months or a total of increased capacity of new machines during the present year of some 300,000 tons, which it is now expected will be followed by installation of new machines during 1927, capable of producing an additional 420,000 tons.

Actual production, particularly in the case of new machines, is naturally somewhat less, and in some cases materially less than the capacity of the machines. Our figures are all based on maximum production and therefore will exceed to some extent the tonnage that will come on the market.

Imports from overseas amounted to 132,432 tons or approximately 15% less than during 1924, and brought the total supply for the year for the North American Continent from all sources to nearly 3,281,555 tons, or 226,197 tons more than during 1925.

Carefully tabulated information showing the experience of our members in the use of European news-print is at all times obtainable from the New York office. It is again suggested that members secure this information before purchasing. Some few but very few, importers refuse to disclose to their customers the name of the European mill, the product of which they offer, maintaining their reputation to be sufficient guarantee. Purchasers who do not contract for the product of a given known mill may expect to receive consignments varying somewhat in quality. It is therefore suggested that in all cases the mill be designated in the contract.

ABNORMAL INCREASE OF CONSUMPTION

While 1925 production of the United States, Canada and Newfoundland shows an increase of 250,000 tons, or 8% over 1924, consumption of news-prnit by the United States increased approximately 8% during the same period. The first two months of the present year show a 13% increase indicating that consumption may not yet have returned to its normal percentage of increase.

INCREASED SIZE OF NEWSPAPERS

Some 65 leading United States daily newspapers published in 23 cities printed an average of one page more in each issue during 1925 than during 1924; during the same period the Sunday papers published an average of six pages more each issue, from which we may infer it may be possible that great as the capacity of the new machines may prove to be, that is, nearly 10% additional capacity during 1926, and more than 10% during 1927, the demand may, nevertheless, crowd production unless present excessive consumption be curbed.

ADVERTISING

The constantly forward trend of advertising together with increased circulation and expansion in size of many of the newspapers, has resulted in an average increase of consumption for the eight months ending February 28th of 11.9%, against an average of 5% for the corresponding months of 1925.

During 1925 newspaper advertising, based on 105 newspapers in 27 major cities, increased 4% over 1924, the most marked increase being during the last three months of the year.

For the first three months of 1926 there was an average increase of 7½% over the corresponding months of 1925.

PUBLISHERS' STOCKS

At the beginning of 1925 the supply of news-print in publishers' hands was low, being estimated at but 43 days', yet it steadily declined and during the latter part of the year had dropped to 30 days'. This condition may have been caused in part by disinclination to enter the new year with any considerable stack of $70 paper and in part by the unprecedented volume of advertising during the last three months of the year.

1926 CONTRACT PRICE

During June through our bulletins your Committee made the first announcement of the $65 per ton price made by the Belgo-Canadian Paper Company for its supply during 1926, which reduction in price was later followed by all producers.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT'S NEW DEFINITION OF STANDARD NEWS-PRINT

The Tariff Act of 1922 provided Standard News-Print should be on the free list and later the Treasury Department defined it as consisting of: "Mechanically ground woodpulp and chemical woodpulp or sulphite, containing not in excess of 30 per cent. sulphite and varying in weight not more than 10 per cent. from 32 pounds, without regard to the color thereof."

During the early part of 1925 the Treasury Department alleging some newsprint was imported that was not intended for use of newspapers, promulgated a new definition of Standard News-Print which definition conformed in but few particulars to much of the product previously sold as Standard News-Print. The purpose of this second definition seems to have been to remove from the free list Standard News-Print imported for use other than the printing of newspapers. Unsuccessful efforts were made by your Committee to prevent promulgation of this new definition which did not properly describe the product, but as it was accompanied by instructions to customs officials not to delay importations consigned to newspapers, it has not as yet caused complications in our field.

CANADA'S NEW POLICY

To what extent Canada may go in order to confine to itself a constantly increasing manufacture of its wood products is difficult to foretell but we may expect various methods will be undertaken to secure not only increased manufacture but also increased financial returns from its natural resources.

The restrictions placed on export of Crown land wood some fifteen years ago, was followed by recent agitation for an embargo on the export of all pulpwood and then for an export tax on pulpwood, neither of which has as yet been adopted. Possibly the desired result will be accomplished by different methods now operating.

Both the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec have inaugurated the policy of limiting bidders for timber limits to those who stipulate within a definite time to erect mills at which the wood will be converted into paper in the provinces.

The Province of Quebec has recently passed a bill providing for a tax of ten cents per cord on wood when cut to be manufactured into paper or pulp within the province, or fifteen cents per cord when used in the manufacture of pulp or paper outside of the province. This is in effect an export tax of five cents per cord in addition to a royalty of ten cents on all such wood cut.

Nova Scotia, from which for years there has been free export of wood from both private and Crown lands, has recently decided to apply a tax, to become effective May 1, 1927, on all pulpwood cut but not manufactured within the province.

Attention is also drawn to the recent consolidations or new grouping of paper mills in Canada and the probable effect of such actions on future conditions. Among these may be noted the St. Maurice Valley Corporation now controlling the Belgo-Canadian and St. Maurice Paper Companies and others; Spanish River Pulp & Paper Mills, Ltd., and The Manitoba Paper Co., Ltd.; and the International Paper Company, and the Riordan Pulp Corporation, Ltd.

OUR FUTURE SUPPLY

In our report of last year we referred rather briefly to our future source of supply of news-print. During the present year Canada will for the first time produce more news-print than the United States and may soon be in practical control of the market except as that control may be effected by imports from Europe or shipments from our Northwest. We earnestly recommend serious consideration of our future sources of supply with particular reference to the development of our Northwest and Alaska.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PRINTING TRADES SCHOOLS

One year ago your Committee reported that the Association was contributing to the support of four printing trades schools, as follows:

Empire State School of Printing, Ithaca, N. Y.

Pacific Northwest School of Printing, Spokane, Wash.

Southeastern School of Printing, Nashville, Tenn.

Southwest School of Printing, Dallas, Texas.

No new schools have been established during the interval which have seemed to warrant our support.

During the year the Board of Directors approved the recommendation of your Committee that contributions be made on the basis of $100 for each student graduated during the first six months of the year by all these schools, with the exception of the Southwest School of Printing which, as was reported to you at the last Annual Convention, was consolidated with the Dallas Vocational School. As it seemed at that time to be operated for profit we discontinued our contributions.

Later an additional amount was contributed to each of the three schools on the same basis, for students graduated during the last six months of the year

Later investigation developed the fact that the Southwest School of Printing was complying in every respect with requirements of this Association in its operation, and the Board of Directors approved your Committee's recommendation that it be replaced on the list and that contributions be made on the basis of $100 for each student graduated during 1925. This School reported thirty students graduated during 1925, and therefore received $3,000.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

There was on hand in the Printing Trades Schools Fund January 1st, 192 $23,037.99. Of this amount there was disbursed $16,800 among three schools, th Empire State School of Printing, th Pacific Northwest School of Printing and the Southeastern School of Printing for students graduated during the la six months of 1924, on the basis of $1 for each student graduated. This le a balance in the fund of $6,237.99.

During 1925 there was received in th fund $22,944.55, making a total amou for disbursement during 1925 of $2 182.54.

For the students graduated during t first six months of 1925, the Board Directors approved the recommendati of your Committee to contribute to t three schools above mentioned on th same basis as that of 1924, with the result that $6,600 was disbursed, leaving a balance still in the fund of $22,582.54. The same basis of contribution was followed for students graduated during the last six months of 1925, so that there was a further contribution made to two schools (the Pacific Northwest and the Southeastern Schools of Printing) of $5,400, in addition to which a contribution was made to the Printing Department of the Dallas Vocational School (formerly the Southwest School of Printing) of $3,000, covering the entire year 1925. Miscellaneous expenditures amounted to $31.36. This left a balance in the fund as of January 1st, 1926, of $14,151.18.

Detailed financial statement follows:

RECAPITULATION

Cash on hand, January 1st, 1925		$23,037.99
1924 Contributions (Made during 1925):
Empire State School of Printing, 34 students @ $100	$3,400.00
Pacific Northwest School of Printing, 32 students @ $100	3,200.00
Southeastern School of Printing, 87 students @ $100	8,700.00
Southwest School of Printing, 25 students @ $60	1,500.00
(This School did not receive a second contribution during 1924.)		$16,800.00
		$6,237.99
Balance on hand		22,944.55
Cash received during 1925		$29,182.54
Total cash to be disbursed during 1925
1925 Contributions (Including Payments to Date):
Empire State School of Printing, 17 students (first six months) @ $100	$1,700.00
Pacific Northwest School of Printing, 24 students @ $100	2,400.00
Southeastern School of Printing, 79 students @ $100	7,900.00
Southwest School of Printing, 30 students @ $100	3,000.00
	$15,000.00
Miscellaneous expenditures	31.36	$15,031.36
Balance on hand as of January 1st, 1926		$14,151.18
Estimated receipts during 1926		25,000.00
Estimated fund for disbursements during 1926		$39,151.18

Because the Empire State School of Printing has not yet submitted information showing financial condition as of December 31st, 1925, and stating the number of students graduated during the last six months of the year, no contribution for the last six months has been forwarded to this school. Should such information be received, however, contribution will be made on the same basis as that to other schools.

SCHOOLS SHOULD BE ESTABLISHED IN ALL SECTIONS OF THE UNITED STATES

Although the four schools now established and operating have accomplished and are accomplishing satisfactory results, your Committee believes that other schools should be established in sections not now covered by the above four schools. New England and the Middle West are still without schools, and your Committee recommends to publishers in those sections that they seriously consider the advantages to be derived from having printing trades schools established in their sections.

It is hoped that publishers in sections in which there are no printing schools established will give serious consideration to the establishment of such schools, and publishers may receive assurance that such schools, if operated in compliance with standards of this Association, will receive hearty co-operation and financial support.

SCHOOLS SHOULD INCLUDE PHOTO-ENGRAVING AND STEREOTYPING

For the most part, at the present time the four schools which are receiving our endorsement and support, are concentrating their efforts on composition. It is the belief of your Committee, and of the Board of Directors, that schools should include Photo-Engraving and Stereotyping Departments.

A Photo-Engraving Department has recently been established by the Empire State School of Printing, and although it has been in operation a short time only, the effects are already being felt. Your Committee is particularly impressed with the almost instant change of attitude on the part of the Photo-Engravers' Union on learning of the establishment of the Photo-Engraving Department by the Empire State School; the former difficulty in obtaining men disappeared almost immediately and the Union suddenly seemed able to supply newspapers with the necessary photo-engravers.

It is believed by your Committee that a similar condition will prevail should Stereotyping Departments be established, and it is hoped that additional Photo-Engraving Departments will be started and that more Stereotyping Departments will be established.

NEW PHOTO-ENGRAVING SCHOOL AT CHICAGO

There has recently been established in Chicago a Photo-Engraving School; the Chairman of your Committee has made a personal inspection of this school, and recommends that it be included among those to receive contributions from the Printing Trades Schools Fund.

In the report made to the last Annual Convention, your Committee expressed its desire to co-operate with members in every possible way. It is hoped that members will not hesitate to make any suggestions to the Committee which may serve to aid in the work.

Any publishers who desire to establish new schools may count on the Committee for all possible assistance. We hope we may report to the next Convention an increased number of schools, and an even greater improvement in the printing trades field as a result.

REPORT PROPOSED CHANGE IN ASSOCIATION DUES

Recommendations of the Board of Directors on proposed change in levying dues.

Submitted in Accordance with Resolution of the 1925 Convention.

The 1925 Annual Convention adopted the following Resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the American Newspaper Publishers Association be authorized to appoint a committee of members for the purpose of conferring with the Board of Directors as to the basis for future dues and assessments to be levied by the Association and that following such consultation the Board of Directors be authorized to put into effect after due notice, such basis of dues and assessments as shall be determined by the Board.

Pursuant to this resolution your president appointed John Stewart Bryan, George M. Rogers, Charles H. Taylor, Edward H. Butler, and T. R. Williams a committee to investigate and report.

The board of directors of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, having received the following report from the Committee on Membership Matters, hereby submits it to the membership for consideration and asks its approval.

After the most careful consideration of the recommendations of this Committee your Board of Directors came to the unanimous opinion that reasons necessitating the increase in the Association's revenues are manifold, as set out in your President's address to the last Convention, viz.:

THAT the rapid development of printing machinery has made it necessary that publishers have exact unbiased engineering and mechanical advice from competent sources;

AND THAT the change in the terms of the sale of newsprint from "F.O.B. Sidewalk" to "F.O.B. Mill" has made the subject of freight rates with all of its intricacies a vital problem to publishers;

AND THAT the opportunities for a real service in these two fields alone has convinced the membership that the Association should be supplied with the necessary funds to organize and maintain departments under competent heads to secure and disseminate among the membership such necessary information;

THEREFORE, the Board of Directors approves the proposal that the income of the Association be increased to provide for such activities and submits the following plan which in substance was unanimously approved by those present at the Fall Convention.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE

The present revenue of approximately $150,000, $125,000 of which is provided by dues, and $25,000 by an assessment for the Printing Trades Schools Fund should be increased sufficiently to defray the cost of maintenance of both Traffic and Mechanical Departments as well as make unnecessary assessments in times of stress to meet exceptional burdens arising from time to time such as the newsprint paper and postal crises, contributions to a fund for the latter in one year alone amounting to $37,000.

The Association's dues have for many years been divided into two classes: a fixed sum of $75.00 per annum, paid by each active member, and monthly dues based on mechanical equipment. The method of basing dues on mechanical equipment has proved to be the most equitable and satisfactory method of levying Association dues yet devised, and the Board of Directors recommends that this method be continued. On the present basis of $1.00 per machine per month, exclusive of the assessment for the Printing Trades Schools Fund, this class of dues produces an annual income of approximately $98,000, leaving approximately $150,000 still to be raised to reach the $250,000 revenue required to meet our needs.

The Board of Directors therefore recommends the adoption of the following scale:

I.

Dues on the basis of mechanical equipment, of $12.00 per machine per year to be paid by each member:

Present mechanical equipment reported 8,111 Machines @ $12.00..... $97,332.00

II.

Dues on the basis of Circulation to be paid by each member with a circulation under 10,000 as follows:

Circulation	No. Members	Basis of Dues	Total Amount
Under 5,000	14	$50.00	$ 700.00
5,000 to 10,000	70	75.00	5,250.00
	84		$5,950.00

III.

Dues on the basis of $25.00 for each cent charged as the gross rate for national advertising, to be paid by each member with a circulation over 10,000 as follows:

Circulation	No. Members	Average of Nat'l Advertising Rate	Average Paid by Each Member	Total Amount
10,000 to 20,000	126	.06 @ $25.00	$150.00	$18,900.00
20,000 to 50,000	135	.095 @ 25.00	237.50	32,062.50
50,000 to 100,000	64	.18 @ 25.00	450.00	28,800.00
100,000 to 200,000	33	.27 @ 25.00	675.00	22,275.00
OVER 200,000	26	.54 @ 25.00	1,350.00	35,100.00
	384			$137,137.50

Total Amount from members in United States..... $240,419.50

IV.

For various reasons it has seemed best to your Board of Directors to place our Canadian and other members outside the United States on a lower basis than the members of the United States, and therefore the Board recommends the following basis for such members having a circulation of more than 10,000:

For Members Outside the United States

Circulation	No. Members	Average of Nat'l Advertising Rate	Average Paid by Each Member	Total Amount
10,000 to 20,000	2	.06 @ $10.00	$60.00	$180.00
20,000 to 50,000	8	.085 @ 10.00	85.00	680.00
50,000 to 100,000	2	.16 @ 10.00	160.00	320.00
100,000 to 200,000	4	.205 @ 10.00	205.00	820.00

TOTAL INCOME $242,419.50
$2,000.00

It may interest members to know that careful computation develops that the advertising rate and the circulation show almost exactly the same curve, but an examination of all cases investigated has led your Board of Directors to the conclusion that the advertising rate is the more equitable and more stable basis for members with a circulation of more than 10,000, and one that is less open to argument.

The above plan is submitted with the recommendation of your Board of Directors that it be adopted by the Convention.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE BY-LAWS

Pursuant to Section One of Article Twelve of the By-Laws, the Board of Directors of the American Newspaper Publishers Association hereby gives notice that at the Annual Meeting of the Association, to be held Thursday, April 22nd, 1926, at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, New York City, it will recommend the following amendments to the By-Laws of the Association:

(New Matter in Italics—Matter to be Deleted in Brackets.)

Strike out Article III, Section 1-A, which reads as follows:

[There shall be two classes of members, the first to be known as active members, who shall be entitled to receive all the bulletins and the full service of the Association; and the second, to be known as associate members, to be comprised of publishers of daily newspapers located in cities or towns of not over 40,000 population, who shall be entitled to receive the bulletins and service of the Association, but not the services of the Special Standing Committee other than the labor bulletins. Associate members may attend the conventions of the Association, but shall have no vote. No publisher who is now or has been a member of this Association or its predecessor, the American Newspaper Publishers Association, a New York business corporation, at any time within the past ten years shall be eligible to membership as an associate member. Associate membership shall be only for one year from the date of election, but upon the expiration of his associate membership each associate member shall be eligible to election as an active member without payment of further initiation fee.]

Strike out that portion of Article III, Section 2, enclosed within brackets.

Methods of Admission: The method of admitting to membership shall be by an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of the entire Board of Directors, [but members in good standing of American Newspaper Publishers Association, a New York business corporation, shall without formal application, payment of initiation fee or vote of admission, become members of this association upon signing these by-laws.]

Strike out that portion of Article VIII, Section 1, enclosed within brackets.

General Obligations: Each member shall be entitled to the bulletins and to the general service of the association and to the services of the association to assist in the settlement of differences between members and others and to protect members from irresponsible customers, to aid in the collection of accounts, and generally for such other services as may be required from time to time not otherwise inconsistent with the laws under which this association is acting or the provisions of these by-laws. Each member shall be required to pay [an initiation fee upon admission to membership and to pay a further amount as annual dues, and] such other stated dues or assessments as the members may from time to time deem necessary and proper for the purposes of the association, and shall pay such other charges [or assessments] as may be required for any special service that may be rendered to the particular member.

Strike out that portion of Article VIII, Section 2, enclosed within brackets, and insert matter in italics.

[Initiation Fees.] Dues and Assessments: Subject to change by the members, [the initiation fee, payable upon admission to membership shall be $75 for active members, and $30 for associate members, and] the annual dues shall be [$75 for active members and $30 for associate members. The Board of Directors may, however, from time to time in its discretion, for such period as it may see fit, waive the payment of initiation fee or reduce the amount thereof upon admission to membership of both active and associate members] as follows: For members under 5,000 circulation $50; for members under 10,000 circulation $75; for members over 10,000 circulation, an assessment equal to $25 for each cent charged per line for national advertising. Annual dues shall be paid in three equal payments on the first days of January, May and September in each year. The [active] members shall have power to fix such further monthly dues or assessments to be paid by each [active] member of this Association in such manner that the same may be apportioned among the [active] members according to the number of typesetting or type-casting machines or other mechanical compositors owned or operated, or the product of which is used, by each [active] member. Such assessments may be made that the total amount thus collected together with annual dues, [initiation fees,] and other revenues shall be equal to the cost of issuing bulletins, rendering service for, to and between members, the general expenses of the Association, and the setting aside of such an amount from time to time for the payment of its debts, if any, and to provide against emergency expenses as the Board of Directors shall from time to time determine. Subject to change by the [active] members, such additional dues to be paid by each [active] member shall be one dollar per month, payable on the first days of January, May and September in each year, for each typesetting or type-casting machine or other mechanical compositors owned or operated, or the product of which is used, by such member, Assessments, [fees] or charges for services special to any member shall be charged for in each instance as the Directors or officers thereunto duly authorized may determine.

CONVENTION FLASHES

Two columns of South American news were printed in Spanish in the New York Herald Tribune April 19 in honor of the visiting Latin-American journalists. The news was furnished by the United Press.

Hearst executives attending the convention were guests of William Randolph Hearst at his Riverside Drive home on April 19 for a dinner and reception. About 75 were present.

Karl A. Bickel, president of the United Press Association, was host at a private luncheon given at the Waldorf Apartments on April 21. Informal discussion of news problems of the United Press took place.

Labor matters were discussed at a private luncheon April 20. Among those attending were Harvey J. Kelly, chairman of the A. N. P. A. special standing committee; H. W. Flagg, executive secretary of the A. N. P. A. committee on open shop, and Wil V. Tufford, secretary of the Inland Daily Press Association.

Tuesday was municipal day for the Latin-American editors visiting New York. After their arrival on Monday evening and an informal smoker at the headquarters at the Commodore Hotel, the entire day April 20 was spent sightseeing in Manhattan.

After being received by Mayor Walker, the program included visits to the New York Stock Exchange, the Radio Corporation of America, the Hispanic Museum, the Associated Press Luncheon, and a dinner at the Park Lane Hotel, where the publishers of the City of New York were hosts.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FOREST RESOURCES

During the past year, your Committee on National Forest Resources has devoted its energies to two main lines of activity, i. e., the effort to secure more adequate Federal forestry appropriations and co-operation with other agencies in the promotion of American Forest Week April 18-24, 1926.

We participated in a hearing before the Director of the Budget on September 28 last, emphasizing our support of the budget principle in government, and that as citizens and taxpayers we favored economy and tax reduction. We urged, however, the necessity of differentiating between true national economy and the so-called economy which makes a small present saving at the expense of large future losses. Failing to get the proposed increases in the Budget, we co-operated with the National Forestry Program Committee in submitting the following statement to the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives:

"Now that hearings are in progress upon the Agricultural Appropriation Bill for the next fiscal year, we wish to call your attention to the very great need that the amounts listed below should be allowed for the items indicated:

Item, Amount, Authorized By

Forest Acquisition, $3,000,000, Sec. 6, McNary-Clarke Law.

Forest Fire Co-operation, $1,500,000, Sec. 1-3, McNairy-Clarke Law.

Fire Weather Service, $20,000, Act of Oct. 1, 1890.

Forest Products Investigation, $574,000, Act of June 4, 1887.

"The National Forestry Program Committee is aware that the amounts herein specified exceed those in the Budget before you, but we also know that this is due to pressure to reduce Budget totals and not to lack of merit or authorization for the modest sums requested.

"Specifically:

"An Allowance of $3,000,000 for forest purchases under the Weeks and McNary-Clarke laws is the figure recommended by the McNary Committee and also by the National Forest Reservation Commission as the minimum under which this work, begun in 1911, can be carried forward efficiently, based upon availability of suitable areas, timberland prices, and the necessary organization for the job. The time is now. Delay means increased expenditure for the same or less result. Purchases under the Weeks Act to date have an appraised value greatly in excess of cost and yield a yearly revenue greater than the administrative expense.

"There should be no trifling with fire. The McNary-Clarke law authorizes up to $2,500,000 annually for co-operation with the states in forest protection. People are flocking to the forests in increasing millions yearly, thus greatly increasing the hazards, while there is no diminution in the natural causes of fire. If there ever were a case of being 'penny wise and pound foolish' it is the state or nation which skimps its forest protection fund on the plea of economy. Burned forests yield no revenue. An average of nearly 50,000 forest fires and $20,000,000 damage yearly is more than a calamity. It is a disgrace.

"There are no fires in wet woods nor on rainy days. Fires may start by the dozen at other times. Accurate observations and records of temperature, wind and moisture conditions in the forest will enable us to predict with much certainty the periods when fire precautions must be increased. The amount asked for this purpose is insignificant compared with the results to be obtained.

"At a meeting of national character held in Washington in November, 1924, the President reviewed the entire forestry situation in the United States in masterly fashion and laid especial stress upon the great need for a reduction in forest waste. This is a public problem far exceeding the interest of any individual operator in the woods. Consumers are concerned as much as producers. Solution is possible only through prolonged and consistent technical research into the properties, treatment and uses of many species and a wide variety of forest products. The work is of such character that most of it can be successfully carried out nowhere except at the Forest Products Laboratory, Madison, Wisconsin. We are not overstating the situation therefore when we say that it is nothing but empty talk to hold meetings and discuss the importance of reducing forest waste unless this is followed by sufficient appropriations to make possible the studies without which forest waste cannot be checked. The amount asked for this purpose is exceedingly modest, and we are supplying detailed specifications therefor in a separate letter. This work ties in directly and practically with the conservation and standardization programs of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce which have had such widespread public approval.

"We plead for the true economy of protection and full utilization of a great resource as against a mere dollar economy which will eventually prove to be something far different. We know that less expenditures for these items than the small amounts asked for must inevitably result in greater expenditures later or in losses which cannot be compensated for. No solvent business man neglects to protect his resources or fails to insure his assets against hazards. The Federal Government is entrusted with leadership in the management of one of the greatest assets in America. Representing those who very largely pay the bills for such management, we respectfully request that the full amount specified for each of those items be included in the Federal appropriations for 1926-7."

The Agricultural Appropriation Bill as passed by the House carried increases for forestry items totaling $176,000 over the Budget, the most important of which was an additional $50,000 for co-operation with the states in forest fire prevention, making a total of $710,000 for this item. We cannot yet say what the action will be in the Senate.

It is worth while to note that under the McNary-Clarke Law Federal expenditures for fire protection are contingent upon the soundness of the fire protection methods of each State and the co-operating agencies within the states. It behooves each of us to know definitely whether or not our own state is co-operating in this great work, and if so, that the requirements of the Federal Government are fully met.

The total number of forest fires in the United States, excluding Alaska, in 1924, was 91,921; the area burned over 28,822,735 acres; the loss a total of $38,128,426, and all this in a single year.

In the administration of Sections 1-3 of the Clarke-McNary Act the co-operating parties have agreed that an equitable division of the cost of protecting State and private forest land is 50% by the private owners and 50% by the public—the latter represented by the States and Federal Government. The amount of current appropriation of $660,000 enables the Government to meet only a little more than 7% of this cost in those states which qualify for the co-operation, or less than one-third of the part it should bear. There are five of the country's most important timber-producing states in addition to several others of less importance which have yet to establish systems of forest fire prevention and suppression. Thirty-nine states contain a total of 375,000,000 acres of forest land including cut-over areas. At the present time less than one-half of this area is protected through Federal co-operation. Effective protection of the entire 375,000,000 is the most essential step in any policy of timber production. Much of this land contains young growth for future needs of industry when our present virgin stand is exhausted.

More than 80 organizations, under the leadership of Honorable Frank O. Lowden, participated in the observance of American Forest Week, April 27-May 3, 1925. The Proclamation by the President was followed by 23 State Proclamations and much co-operation was given by other states and localities.

The printed and mimeographed material sent out from Washington by the Forest Week Committee, the Forest Service and the American Forestry Association aggregated nearly 450,000 copies. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners distributed 10,000 special slides to an equal number of theatres. Pathé News gave space to the subject, Topics of the Day carried an extract from the Presidential Proclamation, and the Fox Film Company made a special news release depicting the ravages of forest fires. Nearly every motion picture theatre was reached through these activities. Not less than 70 radio messages were broadcast from stations located in all regions. The newspapers and other publications gave abundant space to forest protection subjects and backed them up with countless editorials. In addition to all this, the participating organizations used their own effective means of carrying to their own members and to the public the message of forest protection.

At a conference in Washington on September 28 last, called by Governor Lowden, it was decided to organize American Forest Week on a permanent basis with a Board of Directors and an Executive Committee. Your Chairman was given a place on both these groups.

American Forest Week this year is April 18-24, and for the first time United States and Canadian authorities have co-operated in emphasizing by every means of publicity the vital importance of protecting the forests of North America for the use of the people of North America.

Copies of the Proclamations of the President and the Governor-General of Canada, as well as concise editorial matter entitled "Forest Facts," have been mailed by the Chairman to each member.

It is distinctly encouraging to note the substantial progress that is at last beginning to be made in the practice of forestry by the larger timberland owners of the country. Much helpful State legislation is also being enacted, and all interests concerned are working more harmoniously than ever before toward a common end—an adequate timber supply for the United States. We still have a long way to go and many years will pass before our goal is reached, because so much of the solution of the problem depends upon informed public opinion, in which we newspaper men have a great opportunity and responsibility. We are sure that you will all continue to do your part in this matter, not because of our obviously selfish interest primarily, but because it is of such great national concern.

Your Committee asks each and every one of you to discuss this matter thoroughly in your editorial councils, with a view to keeping the public fully acquainted with the necessity of rehabilitating our timber supply and preventing, before it is too late, the destruction of our forest legacy.

Respectfully submitted,

Dependable and Speedy Delivery Equipment is a Circulation Builder

NEWSPAPERS must have dependable, speedy and economical delivery equipment. Competition compels it. Scores of the leading newspapers of the United States and Canada have standardized on White Trucks. They buy Whites year after year. They don't guess. They know truck value. They know that Whites are circulation builders.

Daily, when the presses of the great newspapers of the country start to run on their main editions, millions of papers must be delivered by motor truck to corner newsboys, news stands, main relay points and out going trains. To do this as quickly and economically as possible is the daily sales problem of a newspaper.

Such demands call for the kind of dependability that is built into White Trucks.

Let us send you free the 1926 White Roll Call listing 961 concerns in all lines of business operating 35,755 Whites in fleets of ten or more. Address Room 53

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON RADIO

Your Radio Committee has held no general meetings during 1925 nor during the early months of 1926. Up to the first of April, 1926, there were no critical or unusual problems arising which have required the joint action of the newspaper publishers as a separate group. However, on April 4, 5, 6 and 7, the Radio Committee was represented in Washington at a meeting of the National Association of Broadcasters and at the hearings on the Dill-Vestal Bill which proposes a change in the copyright law to bring it up-to-date so that radio may be included with the phonograph and player piano as a means of mechanical reproduction of music.

At these meetings the Washington Representative of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, Elisha Hanson, was also present, not only to protect the interests of the publishers with respect to changes in the copyright law but also to lend the support of the A. N. P. A. to the broadcasters in their plea for modernization of the Copyright Act.

The most important phase of radio broadcasting at the time this report is being prepared is the crying need for legislation for the control of radio. The control of radio comes under two headings:

First, the control of the stations themselves.

Second, the control of the material needed by radio stations for broadcasting.

An effort to remedy the situation, i. e., control of broadcasting, has been made by the introduction of the White Bill in the present session of Congress. The White Bill has made a successful trip through the House and is now waiting in the Senate, where it is feared that indifference or the lack of understanding may cause its defeat.

The second phase (i. e., the control of the material needed by broadcasting stations) has to do with the long fight between the broadcasters and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. This organization controls 90% of the music in the so-called "popular" class and a great deal of music in the "classical" group. It is such music as this that makes possible the existence of broadcasting stations. The A. S. C. A. P., it was disclosed in the hearings, is an organization controlled by a self-perpetuating Board of Directors of whom twelve are publishers, six are authors and six are composers. This Board of Directors has vested most of its powers and functions upon a triumvirate headed by E. C. Mills, General Manager of the A. S. C. A. P.

The organization does not compensate composers in accordance with the use to which their selections are put. Their payments are based on a classification of membership in the Association, the preferential classes being paid more than the others, regardless of the extent to which their music is used. For example, there are composers in Class A who have not written any popular compositions within the last five years. Yet, these men may receive a compensation through their membership in the organization greatly in excess of the compensation given to a composer of an exceedingly popular song, in a lower class. Your Radio Committee is interested in the situation because of the iron grip which the A. S. C. A. P. has, not only upon its membership but also upon broadcasting stations, and because of the policy of increasing fees from year to year, to the broadcasting stations, and also because of the fact that obtaining a license from the A. S. C. A. P. does not constitute full protection to the broadcasters, because there is no protection for copyright infringement on numbers which are not under the control of the A. S. C. A. P.

For violation of the copyright by a broadcaster of a number not controlled by the A. S. C. A. P., the broadcaster is liable to a damage of $250 for each infringement. To provide full protection for broadcasters and to secure for the individual composers an adequate compensation, two bills were introduced, one in the Senate by Senator Dill of Washington and the other in the House by Congressman Vestal of Indiana, both of which are the same. These bills provide that the owner of a copyright shall have the right to prohibit his selection from being put on the air, but that in the event of permitting one station to broadcast a selection, other stations shall have the privilege of using the composition, providing a fee is paid for each broadcasting of the composition.

In offering the bill, the broadcasters did not fix the rate, stating their willingness to let any tribunal place maximum sums for stations of varying powers. The position of the broadcasters is so equitable that your Radio Committee, after studying the matter, came to the conclusion that in the interests of the 132 newspapers of the nation who are engaged in broadcasting in one form or another, this bill should be supported.

Accordingly, a representative of the Radio Committee appeared before the Joint Congressional Committee on Patents, presided over by Senator William M. Butler of Massachusetts, and read a report which was incorporated in the records of the proceedings. The statement which was presented was an extract of a preliminary report of your Radio Committee and is as follows:

"One of the most important matters pertaining to radio which affects the interests of publishers is the proposal to revise the copyright law to bring reproduction of musical compositions by radio within the scope of the 'mechanical reproduction' clause and to fix a stated maximum fee for the use of musical compositions by radio broadcasting stations.

"The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers is actively fighting this proposal, which is contained in a bill introduced in the Senate by Senator Dill of Washington. The A. S. C. A. P. apparently realizes that when and if the proposal becomes operative it will lose the support of the individual composers inasmuch as payment would be made directly to the copyright proprietor for the use of the composition. The logic of those supporting the measure is sound and their position is so apparently fair that the A. S. C. A. P. is trying every means possible to block the bill. I understand that the A. S. C. A. P. have by subtle means conveyed the impression that a revision of the Copyright Act would endanger the interests of newspaper publishers, because it would establish a precedent for the fixing of maximum fees which one may receive for the use of his copyright works. Denial of this is made by the broadcasters and in reply the music interests threaten to tear the whole subject wide open and to compel a revision of the entire law, making its provisions more in their favor than at present by marshalling their strength to knock out the 'mechanical reproduction' clause, which in turn would disturb the entire music industry.

"Altogether it is a difficult problem, but one which should be courageously faced by the publishers. The situation is rapidly growing worse. Station WLS was levied a fee of $2,500 for the current year for the privilege of using A. S. C. A. P. music under rather drastic conditions. Your Committee is told that WQJ is to be assessed a similar sum and WEBH, because of newspaper connections, was let out of $1,600. WJJD is fighting the assessment, which is said to be $2,000. That station claims to be an educational institution broadcaster, because of its Mooseheart ownership, but the A. S. C. A. P. demands a review of advertising contracts. The fees charged this year may be boosted next year. At WEBH's rate they are paying about 35 cents a number. WMAQ, which broadcasts very little popular music, is paying at the rate of 20 cents per number. WLS will be paying about 50 cents a number.

"In view of the aggressive and inconsistent attitude taken by the American Society, I recommend that the publishers in the A. N. P. A. endorse the proposed

Why Melt Your Metal Twice to Use it Once?

Extracts from Letters to Their Friends

THE OMAHA (NEBR.) DAILY NEWS—Have been using the Monomelt System for about 18 months and find it very satisfactory. We are able to maintain an even temperature in our metal, thus eliminating the chance of burning out the tin. We receive very little dross.

THE COLDWATER (MICH.) DAILY REPORTER—Since Monomelts have been in operation we have increased the efficiency of the composing department, get better slugs and metal does not depreciate as fast. We can heartily recommend them.

THE OLEAN (N. Y.) TIMES—The process of remelting and pigging destroys the finer qualities in the metal. Before installing Monomelt we had to replace the tin in our metal several times a year. Since using the Monomelt System metal has not needed any toning whatever.

THE MACON (GA.) DAILY TELEGRAPH—Monomelts are most satisfactory. Save one melting of metal, a lot of time of the operator and keeps the metal in excellent shape. I am very glad you insisted that we make complete installation.

THE MINNEAPOLIS (MINN.) TRIBUNE—All our 30 Linotypes are equipped with Monomelts. Operators have increased their production considerably and slugs are better. We would not think of going back to the old way.

EVANSVILLE (IND.) PRESS—The type face in our printed pages is now more uniform and we have not had a single claim for any readjustment for dim print in an advertisement due to a low line since the Monomelts were put on. Reduced amount of dross and elimination of labor cost in pigging metal alone would justify installation.

THE GARY (IND.) POST-TRIBUNE—Glad to say that both foreman and machinist are very enthusiastic about Monomelts. Previously they were both opposed to the installation. This is about as good a recommendation as the Monomelt could have.

THE CHAT, BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Monomelts are unqualified success. We have eight of them in use for over two years and would not think of installing another Linotype without a Monomelt. Get better slugs and practically 90% of our remelting troubles are eliminated.

The Monomelt Single Melting System Saves Time, Labor, Metal and Money

COMMITTEE ON RADIO REPORT

revision of the Copyright Act."

In regard to the White Bill, the question now is not so much whether the Department of Commerce shall be given control, but whether the Federal Government shall have any control of radio. The authority of the Secretary of Commerce has been challenged by the Zenith Radio Corporation which, without authority from the Department, began broadcasting on a wave length of 329 meters which had been reserved for a Canadian station. This so-called "piracy" will be passed upon in the Federal Courts within a few days, it is expected. According to a spokesman of the Department of Commerce, the Department would rather lose the case and get remedial legislation than win the case and not get legislation passed in the form of the White Bill.

While there is some criticism of the White Bill, on the grounds that it vests great power in a Cabinet Officer, many experts regard the enactment of a radio control bill as the first step toward the eventual establishment of a "Communications Commission" which will have jurisdiction over all forms of communication, including Telephones, Telegraph, Wireless Telephony and Radio Telephony.

A bill which would place radio control under a National Commission composed of three persons appointed by the President was introduced in the Senate on April 14 by Senator Borah of Idaho.

Though these legislative matters appear of primary importance at this time, a thorough analysis of the radio situation shows that broadcasting in 1925 has had a tendency toward standardization along very definite lines. With the recent ruling of the Department that hereafter no increase in the number of licenses will be permitted in the areas where the Department has ruled there are already too many difficulties of divided time and interference, the problems of the newspaper broadcasters become largely local ones. In this local competition, there seems to be a recognition of the fact that the talent used must be improved. In the early days, it was sufficient merely to have something to listen for, but now the radio audience is demanding a higher type of program.

In mid-summer, Atwater Kent, a manufacturer of radio apparatus, added stimulus to the thought of high grade programs by providing for the weekly broadcasting of a series of concerts in which only the highest type of artists would take part. To date these programs have included such artists as Schumann-Heink, Anna Case, Reinald Werrenrath, Frieda Hempel, Jeritza and other celebrities.

Inasmuch as these artists are available in only a few cities of the country, chain broadcasting has been developed to a great extent, but, more important from the standpoint of publishers who are interested in radio, is the fact that radio programs without compensation to the artists will come to be regarded as distinctly amateurish and below the grade required by the public. Since there has been no practical way suggested by which the radio public may pay for its entertainment and also in view of the fact that there is no scarcity of advertisers who are willing to hire skilled artists for the sake of building good-will for a trade-mark or product, it is apparent there will be no attempt made to collect directly from the public.

Therefore, newspapers interested in broadcasting are placed in direct competition with commercial stations selling time to advertisers who are able to provide the highest type of entertainment. Unless newspaper broadcasters meet that competition they will not be heard because the radio audience will be listening to the musical entertainment rendered by famous artists.

This brings about a rather unique situation since in effect it sets up a new medium of competition for the newspaper unless advertisers are educated to the danger of unbalanced advertising schedules in the use of the radio media. Broadcasting by advertisers is generally charged to advertising appropriations. It might be argued that such deductions from advertising appropriations would cut down the amount of newspaper advertising.

However, advertisers should be shown the necessity of maintaining their present published advertisements to back up their radio broadcasting to derive full benefit from their participations in radio. A demonstration of this may be seen from the fact that Chicago listeners have no idea as to the identity of the "Happiness Boys" because they do not associate the word "Happiness" with candy as is done in New York because there is no "Happiness Candy" advertising in Chicago.

There is an increasing number of newspaper stations broadcasting advertising matter and receiving remuneration for it. This subject should be discussed at the Convention. There is good evidence on both sides of this question. Competition may force newspaper broadcasters to follow suit to protect their interest in radio if not their advertising columns.

Another important aspect of radio is the policy of retrenchment on the part of the Department of Commerce in respect to the number of broadcasting stations. There are approximately one hundred stations broadcasting now on what are known as Class B wave lengths. For the most part these stations share time and hence there is no confusion for the radio listeners.

Below the Class B wave band, from 200 to 280 meters, there are approximately 350 broadcasting stations, on one wave length alone there are 26 stations, which has made that wave band a place of squeals and howls.

The policy of the Department of Commerce is that stations on these lower wave lengths must regard themselves as local stations. The Department also has taken the stand that it has no more wave lengths to give out and there have been no new applications granted for several months. Applications continue to pour in with the result that there are now about 325 applications pending.

If this position is maintained by the Department of Commerce, those stations in the B wave lengths have an appreciated value unless the failure of Legislative control and the loss of the suit against the Department destroy the value of wave lengths entirely. Incidentally, most of the stations owned and operated by newspapers are class B stations.

A new invention which was reported recently I mention here because, if it proves a success, it is likely to have a very serious effect upon the commercial value of broadcasting stations. The inventor claims this device permits the separation of two or more stations on the same wave length. It sounds incredible, but demonstration has apparently proved it possible. Science has been familiar with the characteristics of harmonics and amplitude but the inventor claims the discovery of a "3rd dimension" of radio. The invention, which depends upon the mechanical precision with which apparatus may be constructed, makes possible house to house telephony but more immediately it would make possible the operation of thousands of radio stations, within the existing radio channels. The addition of more stations would depreciate the value of existing stations because there are that many more stations to be listened to and hence there are fewer members of each station's radio audience. If nothing comes of this new principle immediately it is safe to say that the further development of the science will have an increasing effect upon the status of radio broadcasters. Radio has by no means reached its full scientific development and we are dealing with situations today which may be entirely changed tomorrow.

Since the report of last year to the A. N. P. A. there have been few outstanding events in radio broadcasting. However, the three most important developments have been the successful use of short wave transmission, the increase in power with the inauguration of two 50 kilowatt stations, WGY and WJZ, and the general tendency on the part of all broadcasters to increase power.

In 1925 there were 195 broadcasters with power of 500 watts or more, which represents an increase of 64 stations over those using 500 watts or more in 1924.

A further report on the activities in the radio industry as it affects newspaper broadcasters would have to include a technical discussion of many subjects with which it is assumed those having a vital interest are already familiar.

The Radio Conference at Washington in 1925 did not require the joint action of your Radio Committee in any formal way. The conference was attended by many newspaper broadcasters and it was found practicable to join with the best of the commercial stations in meeting the problems presented there.

Respectfully submitted,

W. A. Strong, Chairman; Amon G. Carter, E. B. Piper, Louis Hannoch, Elzey Roberts, J. R. Knowland, H. S. Scott, W. H. Pettibone, I. L. Stewart, Rowe Stewart.

THE ADVENTURES OF VIVIAN VANITY
No. 1—"Introducing Vivian Vanity"

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Copyright 1926. Wheeler-Nicholson, Inc.

Vivian Vanity of unknown parentage and hard childhood of poverty possessed a rare charm and manner.

She was adored by Carl Brink, multi-millionaire and humanitarian, and by Norman Dix, who had loved her for years. With a gift for designing, she had become a style authority and owned an exclusive gown salon.

She longed for romance and dreamed of moonlit castle walls and strange, beautiful scenes of some other life.

THE ADVENTURES OF VIVIAN VANITY
No. 3—"The Strangers Again"

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Copyright 1926. Wheeler-Nicholson, Inc.

Vivian enjoyed the opera that night. She went with Carl Brink and friends and was pointed out by many in the audience as the beautiful gown designer whom rumor had it would one day be the multi-millionaire's wife. Unconscious of the interest her appearance created, she let the music enchant her as it always did.

In another box sat the two strangers of the afternoon. They were more interested in Vivian than in the opera.

PERILS OF INQUISITION THREATENED FIRST LATIN AMERICAN EDITORS

Press in Early Days An Organ of Church and State, and in Fear of Both When It Began to Break Shackles of Authority

By VIRGILIO RODRIGUEZ BETETA

Executive Member, Press Congress of the World, and Delegate for Guatemala to First Pan American Congress of Journalists

THE first printing press in Spanish America, and in the Western Hemisphere, was in Mexico, the second one in Peru, the third one in Guatemala. The first newspaper was printed in Mexico, the second one in Guatemala, the third one in Peru.

When our first newspapers appeared, the journalism of the world was still in an embryonic state. Only in England The Spectator, The Review, The Champion, The True Patriot and other smaller political publications had showed a way of innovation and character. But generally, the journalism was far from being what it came to be at the time of the French Revolution. To synthesize the situation, let us repeat the words of Mr. DePratt at the Congress of Carlsbad: the newspapers were in the hands of very poorly informed compilers with relation to public interests in Europe, and also of correspondents as poor as the newspapers, and always fearful of the authorities.

The first newspaper printed in the Spanish colonies was La Gazeta de Mexico, and near after La Gazeta de Guatemala, between the years 1694 and 1729. At that time the only cities of North America with a newspaper were Boston, Philadelphia, and New York. Towards the middle of the 18th century there appeared the first gazette in Peru and successively in Cuba, Colombia and Ecuador. Towards the beginning of the next century, El Telegrafo Mercantil in Argentina, La Gaceta del Cabo in Hayti, La Estrella del Sur in Uruguay and La Gaceta de Caracas in Venezuela also appeared. These were the only colonial newspapers. The others printed after had altogether a political and revolutionary character, in the struggle for independence. The newspapers in the Spanish colonies contrary to those in the English colonies obeyed an official initiative as a general rule. In the English colonies, the printer used to print news he thought of public interest, but in our colonies the authorities gathered the news to be printed. This line of conduct was, of course, exerted only on the first Gazettes, and not so on those which flourished at the end of the 18th century, in which we find a notable progress as they followed the example of the Peruvian newspaper, El Mercurio. Being then newspapers with an individual initiative and marking the transition between the anodyne journalism, with which the colonies began, and the revolutionary, which contributed to the winning of their independence. In the first Gazettes the Editor and Redactor was the printer himself, under the direction of the authorities. The style was monotonous and its content like a litany. Homages to the two authorities, the civil and the ecclesiastical, filled all the space; news of interests seldom appeared. But those who can read between the lines can comprehend the pulsation of the hours, and the chronicles are invaluable to reconstruct history. Slowly, and without the newspaper man noticing it, he began to gain his liberty from the authorities, and wrote by his own accord until the end of the 18th century.

The Gazettes then were not satisfied with publication of loose notices and rumors. They began to confront the national problems, of course taking care not to interfere with the ways of the Church, nor to discuss the majesty of the authorities, but their writings tended more and more to waken public interest.

In order to attain to independent journalistic life the printers and the newspaper men had to become heroes. They appear to any one who dissects history, as patient Hercules holding in their sinewy hands the intellectual life of the colonies. As the 18th century dawned all of the Spanish colonies had their own press. But this was because the initiative of the highest authorities, sometimes the civil and sometimes the ecclestiastical. This was the main reason why they were compelled to discuss mainly all the happenings of Church or Government. Law was very strict; nobody could sell, buy, import, and much less write without a license. Practically not a word could be written on any matter not strictly religious.

In Guatemala a clergyman wrote a volume of history, and notwithstanding the fact that ecclesiastical affairs were the main subject, it took him almost four years to obtain a license to publish the book. This situation was not exclusive to the Spanish colonies. The illustrious Catholic monarchs, King Fernando and Queen Isabel of Spain, had decreed the most liberal law governing the press at that time through Europe. But slowly and in accordance with the general spirit of the hour that liberty became narrow. In England a revolution was necessary to abolish the Star Camera, whose main object was to carry on a destructive and obstinate war against writers. The French Parliament had to fight stubbornly to restrict the effects of the Francis the First edict, in which the gallows was the penalty asked for the printers.

For the exertion of penalties and their exaggeration the authorities, and mainly the Inquisition, were responsible. The writers of the Guatemalan Gazette were judged twice by the Inquisition on account of certain articles on freedom of commerce. It must be stated, nevertheless, that in many instances, the same authorities took on their side the protection of the press and the newspapers.

In the United States there were some wealthy printers; ours were always extremely poor. Paper, ink and printing types used to constitute always to them their everlasting nightmare. In the United States, notwithstanding the fact that paper was imported from Europe, it was possible to manufacture it at home. Newspaper men occasionally need to have an interest in paper manufacture. Among us, paper had to be bought directly from Spain, and the maritime connections were not frequent, especially in times of war. And so the editor of the Guatemalan Gazette told his readers that a very fine press consigned to him was detained at Havana for two years then, but that, unless the pirates seized it, he was to have it soon. Struggling against all these obstacles our men were never dismayed. A monk, in Central American provinces, found out his way to manufacture a press with his own hands, also ink and wooden types; another printer, towards the middle of the 18th century in Guatemala, succeeded in the most satisfactory manner in the manufacture of his own type, which permitted him to save the expenses on importing it. In all the Spanish colonies the efforts were greater than the difficulties; the majority of the works produced by the first prints of Hispanic America, compare favorably with the best produced in Europe. In Mexico, Guatemala and Peru a large number of photogravures developed. Some works were published, consisting of two or more volumes of 300 pages in folio, each book filled with photogravures, fancy covers and colored ornamentations.

The struggle for independence gave a new direction to Spanish American journalism. The revolutionary verb set on fire those wonderful pages. Among the most noteworthy periodicals of that epoch, was El Amigo de la Patria, published in Guatemala by Jose Cecilio del Valle, called "el sabio," meaning not only the scientist, but the real wise man. None of the newspapers in the Western Hemisphere, as far as we know, analyzed so well the evils and wrongs that afflicted the colonial system in America. And the more remarkable, contrary to the journalists of the age, El Amigo de la Patria paid very much attention to the errors of the economic order. Nobody stated better the economical problems of the New World. Even the federation of nations he proposed, had its foundations in essentially economical factors.

The journalism of the century of the independence was principally a political and a doctrinarian one. Economics and finances were unfortunately neglected. A journalist was generally first of all a homilist or a dogmatizer for his ideas, a supporter of the past or of a great revolutionist.

Latin America has newspapers that are already institutions. The oldest ones are as follows, two in Brazil, Journal do Pernambuco and Journal do Commerso, have attained more than 100 years. El Mercurio, of Santiago, Chile, will celebrate its centennial next year. La Prensa, of Buenos Aires, Argentine, established in 1869 and La Nacion, in the same capital, two years later, crown gloriously the Latin American Press. Among other famous papers in Latin America are at present, Excelsior and El Universal, of Mexico, the Diario de la Marina, one of the oldest and more important daily papers in Latin America, El Heraldo, also of Cuba and El Comercio of Peru. The oldest paper in Central America, is El Diario de Centro-America, which will attain its half centennial in 1930.

Following is a brief resumé of Latin American journalism in the 19th century.

Among Miranda's pioneers were two type composers who printed La Gaceta de Caracas, Oct. 24, 1806. This is the first of the many periodicals that have since offered their welcoming pages to the Venezuelan writers.

In Chile, Eusebio Lillo, became interested in politics, supporting the ideas of Francisco Bilbao, and edited El Amigo del Pueblo (note how the title El Amigo is so often in the first pages of Latin American journalism as taken from the French revolutionist's name L'Ami du Peuple), helping the liberal insurrection in 1851. The brothers Domingo and Justo Arteaga were constantly associated in journalism. They contributed to the literary activity in 1859 by establishing La Semana. Several years later they brought out El Charivari and La Interna del Diablo, comical and satirical periodicals. This marked a new vein in Chilean journalism.

In 1829, the Conservatives returned to power in Chile, under the presidency of Joaquin Prieto and his prime minister Diego Portales. They invited Andres Bello, secretary of the Venezuelan Legation in London and a close friend of Chilean minister in London Irisarri, a Guatemalan, to Chile and entrusted to him the editorship of the government organ El Araucano, a position Bello held for 20 years. Bello is considered as the father of literature in Latin America and he was the author of the Civil Code of Chile, the first of its kind existing in Latin America.

Though born in Chile, Camilo Enriquez, another famous editor, was educated in Peru. His militant "sermon" on the anniversary of North American Independence, July 4, 1811, was such an able argument in favor of the revolution that even in Buenos Aires (now the capital of Argentine) it was ordered printed for distribution. The mental attitude of a large portion of the better elements of the people, especially the clergy, was so opposed to the revolution that Enriquez determined stand in favor possessed great importance. As the intellectual champion of his party he was made the editor of La Aurora de Chile, founded as its organ. The first issue appeared Feb. 13, 1812. On July 4 Enriquez uttered from its columns the first cry for independence.

Above we mentioned the name of Irisarri. He was a Guatemalan who worked for the journalism of all Latin America. No more famous name can be quoted when speaking of Pan-American Journalism. In 1820 Irisarri started with Andres Bello the publication in London of El Censor Americano. From there Andres Bello took the idea of his Biblioteca Americana, which soon was suspended. Money to pay for such a publication even though well received in South America, was slow and difficult to obtain.

How not to remember Irisarri when speaking of Andres Bello? And how not to remember him when speaking of Latin American journalism in the early days?

In Argentine the monthly La Biblioteca was edited during two years by Paul Groussauc, librarian of the Argentine Library in Buenos Aires. He contributed the discussion of knowledge concerning early Argentine literature.

After the fall of Rosas, and the establishment of General Urquiza, Ascásubi, the Aniceto el Gallo, printed the unitary

HUSBANDS GIVE CREDIT TO NEWSPAPER WIVES

Betty Brainerd, Conductor of "We Women" Column Gets News and Feature Writers to Confess How the "Mrs." Has Helped Them—She Dusted My Typewriter, Laughs Lardner

DESERVED publicity and credit has at last been given to the modest tribe of "newspaper wives." Betty Brainerd, conductor of "We Women," a syndicate feature, who recently presented newspaper men and syndicate writers with the opportunity of confessing in her daily column how much their wives had helped them, this week gave as her conclusion that if any woman under the sun was more deserving of praise than an editor's or writer's wife, she had not yet met or shaken her hand.

"Late to dinner—late to lunch—pockets full of papers—frenzied by the rush of news—always broke—it must take a saint to love a newspaper man," said Miss Brainerd. "But who doesn't love 'em," she added.

Among newspaper men and syndicate writers offered space in Miss Brainerd's column to talk about their wives were H. I. Phillips, New York Sun, whose column "The Sun Dial" is widely distributed under the title, "The Once-Over"; Capt. William Rule, Knoxville Journal & Tribune; Ring Lardner, the slang artist; W. A. Johnson, suggestion editor, New York World; J. P. Alley, cartoonist, Memphis Commercial-Appeal; Irvin Cobb, humorist; James M. Kirkham, assistant manager, Salt Lake City Deseret News; Norman E. Mack, publisher, Buffalo Evening Times; Herbert Corey, writer of a New York letter called "Manhattan Days and Nights," Keats Speed, managing editor, New York Sun, and Will Irwin, novelist and writer of special newspaper articles.

Inez Haynes Irwin, Will Irwin's wife, who is also a writer for newspapers, was allowed to write on how her husband had helped her. She dedicated her piece to "Willy Irwin, Prince of Punctuation —He sits knee deep in dashes."

"Dear Betty Brainerd," H. I. Phillips wrote, "Since you ask it, I am rather fond of my wife. Generally speaking. And she generally is.

"The feeling, I think, is reciprocated. At any rate we have been married over nine years now and she has never been to see her lawyer, the same being true of me.

"Reno is just a place we read about in the newspapers and you can get some idea of our mutual regard by the fact that we spent two weeks in Paris last summer where the divorce courts are holding special sales of separation decrees daily and Sunday and never even let the judges quote us prices. The other day she remarked casually that two weeks in Paris are not sufficient to do everything you plan, but I don't think this had any significance.

"Of course any man who would come out in a newspaper like this and say his wife meant very little to him or even that he didn't care to be quoted would be very goofy and extra courageous, and readers of an article like this should take that into consideration. I mean in all cases except mine.

"What success I have had dates almost from the day I said 'I do' to all the pastor's questions (even when he asked my name). Mrs. Phillips is the kind of woman who, er, er, she is the type of wife who—oh gosh, it sounds so foolish in print. Well, anyhow, I never knew I could feel so many ambitions and work so hard to realize them.

"If she were the least bit more of an inspiration and a help I think I could be president. And after that, with Mrs. Phillips' aid, it would be only a matter of a few months before I would be promoted to king. That's my wife all over.

"Only the other day I was telling her what a wonderful help she has been to me. And her reply was, 'Yes, and you've been a wonderful warning to me.'

"Wishing you the same, I am
"Very domestically yours,
"H. I. PHILLIPS."

"My wife is a most unusual woman," said Mr. Kirkham. "We have been married for 30 years and she has never lost her temper. That doesn't mean that she hasn't had a chance to do so. She has an even temper and never loses her head. She has red hair, but in her case the characteristics usually attribute to a red-headed person do not fit.

"No man can make any great success without a good helpmate who backs her husband up in his work and encourages him. And that is what my wife has done.

"She says that I've learned by the mistakes I've made and she has been most helpful in warning me against making mistakes.

"Mrs. Kirkham is the mother of nine children. She raised the family while I made the living."

"I was never one to keep a diary," says Ring Lardner, "and so must depend on an unsteady, Volsteady memory for the things my wife has done for me. In 1914 or 1915, I think it was July, she cleaned my white shoes. In 1918 she told the man at the draft board that she and three kiddies were dependent on me for support. In 1921 and again in 1923, she brought in some ice, White Rock and glasses.

"She dusted my typewriter in 1922. Late one night in 1924, we got home from somewhere and I said I was hungry and she gave me a verbal picture of the location of the pantry.

"Once a man named Morris called me up and she told him I was out of town.

"Once I bid a no-trump and she took me out in spades and we were set three tricks.

"Once we were in the car and got stalled and she suggested that the car must be out of gas. Another time I quit cigarettes and she felt sorry for me. When I was away from home attending high school, she did all the ploughing and fed the shoat. Once we went on a trip and it was going to take us all night to get there and we had a section on the sleeping car and just as I was nearly crazy trying to guess whether I should take the lower or upper berth, she solved the problem by crawling into the lower berth. Once a waiter was going to put two lumps of sugar in my coffee and my wife stopped him. She didn't touch him or call him a name, but she just said: 'Only one lump!' And he did not put the other lump in. He was panicky. And back in 1910 I asked her to marry me right away, but she wouldn't do it till 1911."

For the past 25 years William A. Johnson has been one of the editors of the New York World. He is the author of several detective and mystery stories and during the past two or three years he has written numerous magazine articles in which women have not always appeared in a favorable light. The casual reader of these attacks on us would naturally think that Mr. Johnson had suffered an early disappointment in love or undergone an unhappy marital experience. The contrary, however, is true.

Mr. Johnston makes the proper admission herewith:

"Every husband has a complex against women. When, as in my case, he has a wife he cannot justly find fault with, he has to relieve his complex by saying things about the other fellows' wives, as I did in 'These Women.'

Miss Betty Brainerd

"For a man endeavoring to do creative work like writing, the right kind of a wife is an essential. Most of the successful writers I know owe a large debt to their wives. The ways in which my wife aids me in my work are almost innumerable, and when a year or two ago I dedicated one of my books 'to Hattie Belle who helps' it was written from my heart in all sincerity.

"The greatest joy in accomplishment is in having someone to share it with, someone who is as much interested in what you have done as you are yourself, someone who will rejoice with you over a triumph and condole with you over a failure.

"Most successful work is teamwork. When you find a man getting somewhere, you'll practically always find at his side the right kind of a wife, doing her bit, alas, all too often anonymously."

"Mrs. Lewis and I have known each other since we were school kids," said Judd Mortimer Lewis. "I was of a very serious disposition. I never saw the bright side of anything. My parents were poor and I could not get an education—the one thing I wanted more than anything else in the world. I thought in those days that a self-made man was about the noblest work of God. I have since formed the opinion that the man who has succeeded in self-making himself from surroundings of poverty can be stingy as the dickens and mean as thunder.

"I worked as a stereotyper in Cleveland from 2 a. m. until 8 p. m. The company sent me to Chicago, either to get rid of me or give me a better opportunity. When I had been there three years I was shipped to Houston—nothing but machinery!

"In Houston I received $22 a week as a stereotyper so, of course, I could afford to get married. I was lonely. I hiked back to Cleveland and brought 'Molly' back with me. Now you must understand all these years I was just about crazy. I had no education and could never arrive anywhere. I worked all day and read all night. From being a stereotyper I became manager.

"My wife told me in effect, 'For the love of Mike, stop reading the writing of others and write something for other people to read.' I did it. Since then I have never had the blues and my wife is my 'pal and severest critic.' I found while I was grieving about not having an education I was getting a good one.

"Our 30 years of married life have been just one big joke with us all the time. Occasionally if she thinks I have done a rotten piece of work she tells me. When she says nothing I know my work is good. She tides me over the times when I think the thought tank is empty and won't replenish itself.

"She is one of the best cooks in the world and has the sunniest disposition. All of her ambitions are for me and the children.

"The reason I have been so fortunate as to hold her interest is because I always keep a surprise in store for her. She never knows what I am going to say next and I still have her laughing until the tears roll down her cheeks.

"What has made this world a very happy world for me is the singing heart she always has with her. She has helped me by her absolute faith that I can do better work than any other man on earth. I don't believe that and know I'm not doing it but I've got her fooled and my ambition in life is to keep her fooled."

Irvin S. Cobb is one of the best known and most popular writers of short stories in America. Laura Cobb, though she has a host of devoted personal friends, has been unknown to the general public up to the present writing.

"No one knows whether I ever helped Irvin or not," she said.

"What?" interrupted an old friend. "Who made him quit his little job on a country newspaper in Paducah, Ken-

PERILS OF INQUISITION IN LATIN-AMERICAN HISTORY

doctrines to the federalistic adherents of Urquiza.

During Mitre's Administration there was much literary activity in Buenos Aires. Three literary journals, La Revista Argentina, El Correo del Domingo and La Revista de Buenos Aires flourished. The last directed by Vicente G. Quezada and Miguel Navarro Viola was the official organ of an influential literary society, the Circulo Literario, among whose members were numbered nearly everybody of prominence in the city. The study of Argentine history absorbed more than a half of the pages of the review. The great President Bartolomé Mitre was also the founder of La Nacion about 1871. And, as stated, two years before Ezequiel Paz, a great organizer, had started the publication of La Prensa.

And what about Mexico? I told how the first printing press was introduced there in 1536, the early date of the introduction of the printing press in America, and I also said that Mexico had the first newspaper printed in Latin America.

When you see now the daily papers of Mexico City such as Excelsior, El Universal and El Democrato you have to remember that bright journalist named Reyes Spindola, founder of El Imparcial, the paper which introduced modern methods in Mexican journalism.

Carlos R. Menendez and Juan Malpica Silva, owners of modern Diario de Yucatan and El Dictamen de Vera Cruz, the strongest journalists in the Mexican States, make us remember also those strong founders of journalism in the middle of last century, Guillermo Prieto, Ignacio Altamirano and Ignacio Ramirez, (El Nigromante). They founded El Correo de Mexico whose doctrines were directed against the landholdings of the clergy and inclined to extreme liberalism.

Cuba has also an advance journalism. Since the winning of political emancipation, material prosperity has grown by leaps and bounds. There can be no doubt that in the future Cuba will maintain a literary fame. At present the periodicals published in the islands equal if not surpass in literary qualities those of any other nation. Take for example the beautifully illustrated Figaro, Cuba and America whose purpose is the regeneration of Cuban culture.

The famous organ of the ancient society Los Amigos del Pais, entitled La Revista Bisemestre Cubana, had been revived. And by the way, when we speak of that wonderful institution called Los Amigos del Pais, we must recall that these societies were established in the Latin American colonies for the benefit of culture and progress. And in order to show how solidarity has been a principle in Latin America, I want to mention the fact that a Guatemalan, name Simon Bergano Fillegas (a colonial journalist who was twice trailed by the Inquisition) was a staunch supporter of Cuban journalism at the beginning of the 19th century.

And finally let us have a word about Central America. I told that there was the third printing press in Latin America, and even more, that the second newspaper in Latin America was established, La Gaceta de Guatemala, of which I saw a copy in the Latin American newspaper exhibit at the Congressional Library in Washington.

The first daily paper in Central America was established in 1880 and still exists, Diario de Centro-America, started by an Englishman. A great achievement of the Central American press was the Congress of Central American journalists held in 1911 to the end of advancing the cause of rebuilding the ancient Central American Federation, a dream to reconstruct in one of the five republics.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Josephus Daniels

"I'M going back home to spend the rest of my life criticizing public officials," Josephus Daniels told Washington newspaper correspondents on the eve of his retirement from the cabinet of Woodrow Wilson, after eight years of official service during part of which time he was under the sharpest sort of editorial fire.

Literally, he did not mean that. What he did mean was that he expected to jump from the cabinet back to a desk in the office of his daily paper in Raleigh, N. C., the News and Observer, taking up his job where he had left off. He has spent some of his time, it is true, in the intervening years criticising public officials. That, according to Josephus Daniels' conception is one of the functions of a newspaper, a duty to be assumed without fear and to be carried out without favor, but it is just one function.

Back home, the idea that "Joe" Daniels would ever take on the old life of editing a small town paper was not generally accepted. "He's had a taste of it and he'll never let go," some of his neighbors prophesied.

But he has let go. A visit to the "front office" of the News and Observer almost any day from ten or eleven in the morning until after six in the evening, and frequently after the supper hour, will show anybody one of the few survivors of that old school of newspaper publishers who believe the soul of the paper is in the editorial page, and who believe that the publisher ought to voice the character of his paper.

Once Josephus Daniels had an offer to sell the paper, and to sell it for a price considerably beyond what he himself felt it to be worth in money value.

"Sell this paper?" he queried. "Sell the News and Observer? Why I'd as soon think of selling one of my boys. The News and Observer isn't property, it's an institution; more, it's flesh and blood."

It may or may not be significant that since the days when the News and Observer became large enough to house itself in more than one office, Josephus Daniels' quarters have been on the editorial side of the house. On the opposite side of the hall are the business offices. And while it is too much to say that he is not concerned with what goes on there his most intimate relations, the staff will tell you, are with the editorial department.

There's nothing unique about the quarters of this country editor who became Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Navy who reverted to a country editorship. Except for a collection of naval and war-time pictures on the walls it might be any average newspaper office. It would be hard to recognize any kinship between the man who humps over a wide flat topped desk, scribbling with a pencil, or else leaning back more leisurely and thoughtfully wielding a pair of shears and the man who directed a navy at war. Pencils, shears and paste pot. This is the editorial equipment of ye old time editor. Josephus Daniels has found them sufficient. No typewriter for him. No dictating of editorials to stenographers or into the mysterious mechanism of dictaphones. Give him a pencil and enough paper, and he'll keep a good linotype operator humping.

Of course, he has a characteristic that is part of the fame of more than one old time editor. Sometimes his scribbling will mean one thing to himself and an entirely different thing to the operator and the proof reader. On such occasions, editorial explanations have sometimes been in order.

But the fact that he persists in being old fashioned does not mean that he does not observe the tendencies of the day in newspaper publishing. He observes, studies and weighs these tendencies. Weighing them, he has cast the verdict in favor of the old time journal of opinion. In spite of cross currents high seas and adverse tides, he means to keep the ship pointed in the same general direction. He has a way of being hard headed about the things he believes.

"When I was a boy, it was not difficult to establish or rather start a newspaper," he declared. "One hundred dollars would buy a used Washington hand press and a handkerchief full of type would complete the investment. Naturally, such an investment only appealed to those with an urge to write or those with an axe to grind.

"Today, even in small communities, success comes only with modern mechanical equipment, advertising usually brings good returns, and the newspaper as a good business venture has arrived.

"Then the editorial utterances gave character and influence, or the opposite, to the paper. Today, live news and illustrations in a well printed paper will sell if it has neither editor nor policy. In fact, some papers have discarded the editorial altogether. As a rule, however, the page is still there, it is well filled with interesting matter, and in the most influential journals the soul of the editor is seen in the convictions that burn on the editorial page. But how many editorial pages show the marrow of conviction? In how many is editorial responsibility felt?

"The papers are better and larger in a general way than ever. Their utterances are rarely controlled by advertisers. There are fewer back-doors. But is it not true there has been a loss of power and a loss of faith and preaching doctrine? In not a few papers, the owners wish the editorial policy to be clean, dignified, entertaining, instructive, but without any real sense of duty to battle for righteousness and uphold doctrines which are a part of the very being of the writers. The last word sometimes comes from the business office.

"I recall 25 years ago the distinct shock I had when a friend, who had been writing tariff reduction articles on his own motion because he was opposed to the high protective system, accepted a position as editorial writer on a high tariff newspaper. He saw nothing wrong in accepting employment to write what his employer wished written so long as he did not sign his name and so long as he had no personal responsibility. It seemed to me then—and I have not changed, being, as you see, very old fashioned—that there was something wanting in a man who could write with equal facility on both sides of a question, which, to my mind, has a moral as well as economic aspect. I have observed that man who can write equally well for high tariff or low, or in defense of monopoly or in opposition, believes nothing very deeply. His sentences are of time. If he ever had any, virtue goes out of him. His sentences are well turned, his illustrations may be happy. But nobody is ever convinced by anything he writes.

"The newspaper of today with a large circulation, thanks to the larger use of advertising space, has become a money maker. In a big city, it is a gold mine. In a small city, it usually pays good salaries and good dividends. This salutary condition is giving better papers. But it is a temptation to the owners to think more about the business side rather than the teaching and preaching side. Indeed, there has arisen a type of owner who regards the expenditure for the trained writers who say something that doesn't please everybody, as of doubtful utility.

"Papers are too mutual. By that, I mean too many of them are agreeable to all grades of opinion. They are often too friendly with the powers that be—political, business or what not. In exceptional instances, their owners desire to get in on the ground floor of public improvements and public utilities with consequent inability to render needed service to the whole public.

"There was plenty to criticize in the old time political organ. They were often violent and intolerant. Sometimes vicious. But as a rule, they had convictions and lived up to them and were not influenced by making money and they rarely made any. But there was a sense of personal service to the cause that lifted them above any journal which regards dividends above preaching the truth, letting the chips fall by the way.

"Naturally, the modern journalist cannot do many things, but must work in one channel. In my early days I wrote locals, editorials and advertisements with the same ease, or lack of ease, and collected subscriptions. The work is so big now it has to be subdivided, but water-tight compartment is the death of the best rounded newspapers. Departments are necessary, of course, but the line of demarcation is sometimes so great that the editorial and business staffs are as remote as if they were not engaged in making the same paper.

"The pendulum which has swung so far away from personal touch and personal responsibility in recent years, and has paramounted the business above editorial, must swing in the opposite direction. Indeed, it has already swung in some quarters where owners of papers find their highest duty is to make the paper a public institution rather than a money making investment.

"This makes for newspaper education and personal responsibility as the part of every man connected with the paper."

Adds "Pink" Sports Section

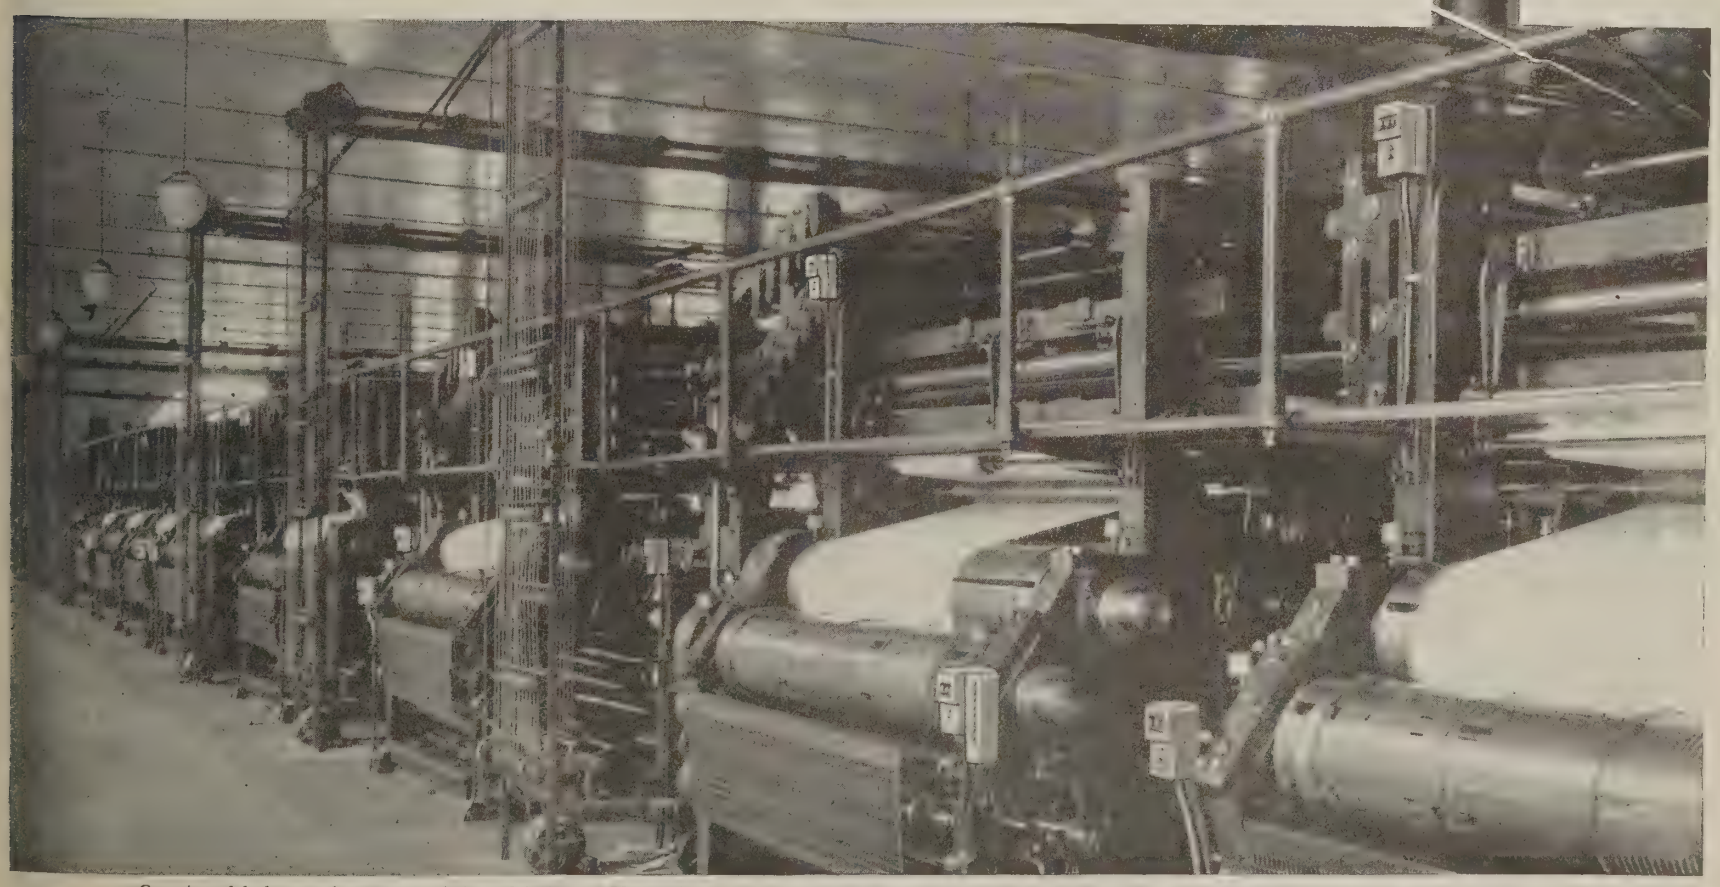
Control!

that increases press output

Editorial deadlines set as late as possible to scoop the latest news! Production time at the mechanical end reduced to an absolute minimum! If ever reliable equipment was vitally important most certainly it is in the newspaper pressroom.

The publisher whose presses are equipped with Cutler-Hammer Control, "The safest system in the world," never worries.

For C-H Control speeds press output! Certainty—safety—speed—instantaneous braking—these are the essentials which it brings to press and auxiliary equipment.



C-H Control typifies the speed and efficiency of the modern plant. Large and small, the finest papers in the land have chosen it. They enjoy the satisfaction which will be yours when your presses are C-H equipped.

"Keeping Pace in the Newspaper Plant" is our latest descriptive book on this highly developed equipment. You will find it interesting and profitable reading. Send for a copy.

tucky, and sent him to New York to try for a newspaper job there? Who scrimped and saved and stayed with her family in Georgia for several months until Irvin got a foothold in the big city? Who, when he had climbed up the newspaper ladder as far as a reporter and then as a re-write man could go, persuaded him to take up short story writing for the magazines?"

"I never told you that!" exclaimed Mrs. Cobb.

"No," replied the old friend, "but that's the story and I know it's true. No wife of a writing man ever helped her husband more than you have helped Irvin by making him go ahead where he belonged.

"Except for you Irvin would not be where he is today. He had the story-telling gift but you had the energy and ambition and the willingness to sacrifice everything which was necessary to capitalize his ability.

"Irvin knows it and would be the first to acknowledge it if you would let him. I know it and your other old friends know it—and it's time the public knew it."

H. Addington Bruce, a writer on practical psychology, granted me the following interview:

"To tell you how my wife has helped me is really something I cannot undertake to do with any completeness. For Mrs. Bruce has helped me in so many ways that even to list them would, I know, pass the limits of the space at your disposal.

"You will appreciate this better when I add that Mrs. Bruce's helping of me began many, many years ago, when I was an undergraduate in college. It was then that she and I met, and from the outset I started to gain from her a clearer understanding of life's beauty, meaning, and possibilities than all the philosophy I have ever read could have given me.

"Looking back, I can see plainly that but for the infinite good fortune that brought my wife and me together I should hardly today be in a position where you would be asking me for this statement.

"In those days I was more energetic than purposeful, more impetuous than thoughtful, I designed to write, but with no particualr end in view. My wife—to whom, fortunately for me, I was married while we were still very young—helped me to sense the importance of determining an end, and has ever since been helping me in my effort to attain it.

"She has helped me by suggestion, by specific criticism, and, above all, by her own uncompromising devotion to the ideal voiced by her favorite poet Browning:—

"'Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for?'

"I have a long way to travel before I shall arrive anywhere near the goal my wife's faith has set for me. And I know that my chance of reaching it depends mainly on my wife's help to come.

"Do you wonder that I pray that twilight is still remote for her and for me?"

Will Rogers wrote to Miss Brainerd:

"My wife never tells me what to do, but she watches and tells me what not to do. Lots of times she picks out the jars and stings I always want to avoid. When I have to hurt a man's feelings to get a laugh, I'll quit.

"As for business, I don't know whether I've got a nickel or a million dollars. I haven't written a check personally in years. She does the whole thing with no secretary or any help.

"When Ziegfeld was negotiating for me to come to New York I sent him this telegram: 'Will accept for so much weekly and transportation from Los Angeles to New York for 10 ponies, 4 dogs, 2 automobiles, chauffeur, cook, 3 children and 1 wife.' He answered, 'Terms accepted, why only 1 wife?' to which I replied 'I'm afraid to get rid of this one 'cause I'll never get another to stand for my jokes.'

"I make the public impression. She makes the private. Ours is a 50-50 combination. People come to our home remembering me and go away remembering her."

J. P. Alley, political cartoonist for the Memphis Commercial Appeal said:

"Every morning my colored man gets the paper and puts it at my place on the table. When I've 'bout finished my coffee my wife comes down and looks at the cartoon I have drawn. She does not know it, but I look at her and study the expression on her face. Casually I ask her, 'What do you think of that cartoon?' My mother would probably, if I asked her the same question, spare my feelings. If it was a political cartoon she would say she didn't understand political matters. But my wife reads and understands political matters.

"If she unhesitatingly says the cartoon is fine I know very probably I've done pretty well. Other times she tells me I've done better than that before and then she will tell me why.

"Mrs. Alley is heartless with me. Could anything be better for a man than to have some one right close to him criticize him? She doesn't damn me with faint praise. I know she has understanding and intelligence and it helps me.

"Did you ever see a little boy fly a kite? Sometimes it turns somersaults because it hasn't enough tail to it. My wife is the tail of my kite. If I have any inclination to think I'm getting good she stops that, for she knows she has the same viewpoint."

Norman E. Mack paid this tribute to his wife:

"Mrs. Mack did me the honor of marrying me 34 years ago. I didn't have a chance to escape even if I had wanted to.

"My wife was an extremely attractive girl and is a remarkably handsome woman. She dresses well and has always been a wonderful credit to me. She is a brilliant conversationalist, very entertaining and a good all around fellow. She is very popular not only with men but with women. She is alert—always ready to go with me no matter where I go."

"My dear Betty Brainerd," wrote Herbert Corey, "in asking me to tell you 'How My Wife Has Helped Me' you have given me a large order. If I had a column I might make a beginning, but—

"I had always thought a dollar was a thing you carried from one cashier to another. She taught me it has staying power.

"She didn't eradicate my laziness. No one could. But she partly neutralized it.

"She detests slighted work. This is very hard, but it is good for me.

"The Psalmist says all men are liars. But one cannot live with a transparently truthful person without at least learning to be ashamed of lying.

"She enjoys life. That lessens the overhead of gloom.

"She is a fine detector of counterfeits. That helps a congenial come-on. She is never so happy as when she is helping some one. I am still selfish, but I have at least reached the point of approving her generosity.

"She is tender and compassionate. Cynicism and indifference break down before her.

"She sees the best in people. How can I constantly look only for the worst with her example before me?

"She is the soul of loyalty. She could not be dishonest in a penny or a thought. It would be hard to live up to her standard, except—

"She is the best companion in the world."

C. G. MARSHALL JOINS UNITED STATES DAILY

General News Editor of Consolidated Press to Supervise News Gathering—Succeeded in N. Y. by C. R. Wood

C. G. Marshall has resigned as general news editor of the Consolidated Press Association to become chief of staff in charge of the news side of the United States Daily, published by David Lawrence, president of the Consolidated Press. C. R. Wood, formerly division news editor, has been appointed general news editor and Bertram G. Zilmer has been made division news editor in the New York office.

C. G. Marshall

Clarence Marshall has been associated with the Consolidated Press since the early days of its development. He has been assistant in the New York office, office manager in Chicago and temporarily in charge at San Francisco. As general news editor he had direct charge of the entire production of the daily and Sunday services.

Rowland Wood succeeds to his position, after several years as division news editor in the New York office, before which time he was associated with newspapers in Cleveland and later in New York.

Bertram G. Zilmer was graduated from the University of Wisconsin, where he studied journalism. Later he worked on various Wisconsin papers, finally becoming copy reader and night news editor of the Milwaukee Journal. Later he was connected with the United Press, and until recently with the New York Evening Post.

REPORTER SUMMARILY "FIRED" WINS $1000

Texas Supreme Court Upholds News Man's Right to Gentle, Private "Firing" in Dismsising Houston Post Appeal

AUSTIN, Tex., April 15.—Privilege of a newspaper reporter to be fired gently and privately was upheld by supreme court Wednesday when its action made final the judgment for $1,000 awarded to A. F. Jones, reporter, against the Houston Post. Supreme court dismissed, for want of jurisdiction, the defendant's appeal.

The damage suit was filed by Jones as a result of the posting on the newspaper bulletin board of a notice by L. A. Hoskins, managing editor, in 1921, ordering Jones dismissed because of the misspelling of a name in a funeral notice.

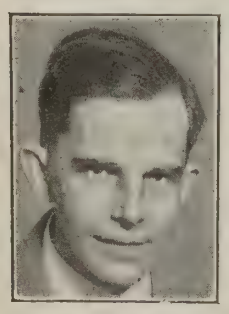
The memorandum addressed to the city editor, said:

"The most worthless thing on a newspaper staff is an inaccurate reporter.

"This is aptly illustrated in Monday morning's issue of the Post, in connection with the death of Lee C. Ayars. The misspelling of Mr. Ayar's name not only made the Post look foolish, but offended the family and friends of the deceased.

"As an example and a warning, I want the man who handled the story, Mr. Jones, dismissed. I want every man of your staff to know that he was dismissed and that other dismissals will follow for similar cause."

Jones asked no exemplary damages in his suit but alleged publication by posting on the bulletin board of Managing Editor Hoskins' letter "was made for the purpose of injuring, humiliating, and offending" Jones and was done maliciously and that its publication tended to injure Jones' reputation and expose him to public hatred, contempt and ridicule and to financial damage in the sum of $25,000.



The printing company alleged the communication was "qualifiedly privileged" as issued by the managing editor in the course of his duties and sent to the city editor of the paper, and that the burden of proof lay upon the reporter to prove malice and injury.

The case was submitted to the jury on special issues, the jury holding the communication was in defamatory language, actuated by malice, and that the entire content of the writing was not substantially true and that it injured Jones to the sum of $1,000.

ELIZABETH TIMES APPOINTS

J. W. B. Mitchell Named City Editor of Brisbane's Paper

J. W. B. Mitchell, assistant city editor of the New York Daily News, has resigned that position to become city editor of the Elizabeth (N. J.) Times, evening paper owned by Arthur Brisbane and M. Annenberg.

J. W. B. MITCHELL

Mr. Mitchell has been with the News about a year, three months of the time on the copy desk. For 10 years he was on the staff of the Union City (N. J.) Hudson Dispatch. Prior to that he worked on the Perth Amboy Evening News and the Staten Island Transcript, a weekly.

He started newspaper work, soon after graduation from high school, on the Bedford (Va.) Bulletin, a weekly.

M. E. Stone Applauded

M. E. Stone, "grand old man" of the Associated Press, was applauded when he entered the A. P. luncheon. The veteran secretary was unable to attend the annual meeting.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Frederick E. Murphy

MOST publishers feel that a campaign for a municipal auditorium, a bridge, or a park, is sufficiently ambitious for any newspaper.

But Frederick E. Murphy, publisher of the Minneapolis Tribune, is neck deep in a 10-year campaign to change the agricultural map of the Northwest.

This campaign, for which an annual appropriation of $50,000 has been made, is now in its third year and has as its goal the diversification of the great one crop areas of the Dakotas and, in a lesser measure, Minnesota.

Given a three-year "sentence" to a farm by Dr. Will Mayo, Mr. Murphy tried wheat farming on his 3,700 acre farm in the Red River Valley. He recovered his health, but it took him quite a while to recover from the wheat farming deficit after he came back to the Tribune. He had considerable time to think up there on that big wheat farm. One moment everything looked rosy—and then hot winds, rust, or hail crushed his fondest hopes.

Mr. Murphy came back to his paper with the idea that there wouldn't be so much grief in the Northwest if farmers had dairy cows, hogs, beef cattle, sheep, poultry, corn and alfalfa.

Since he came to this conclusion he has gone out and got himself the best agricultural editor he could find and has published hundreds of full page articles on the prosperity that follows balanced farming. He has a man on the road all of the time preaching diversification, and co-operation between business men and farmers.

He now has Herbert Kauffman writing full page editorials on the agricultural and industrial possibilities of the Northwest. He has organized a half dozen tours over the Northwest in which, accompanied by Frank O. Lowden and Edwin T. Meredith, he has preached his gospel in all corners of the territory.

He is the most persistent dinner giver in Minneapolis. Let any organization with any influence in the Northwest come to town and Mr. Murphy gives all hands a dinner and insists that the guests go back home and help the farmer to help himself.

This campaign is accomplishing results that are astonishing the Northwest.

"This is the only way the farmer can be helped," Mr. Murphy says. "We can help him to help himself by teaching him intelligent, up-to-date business farming, and in no other way are we ever going to get anywhere."

Daily Adds to Its Service

The Milwaukee Journal has opened to the public a new meeting room with a capacity of 75 persons. The Journal now has four meeting rooms in its new building which are open to the public for civic and community gatherings, without charge, in addition to a number of conference rooms which are used for overflow meetings. These rooms, which range in seating capacity from a dozen to 300 persons, are assigned through the Public Service Bureau.

NEWSPAPER INSTITUTE IS PLANNED

To Combine Instruction in Printing and Publishing—Ask $250,000 Fund

The American Newspaper Institute is the name proposed for a school which will combine the Empire State School of Printing and the Empire State School of Engraving at Ithaca, N. Y., and provide training of a more complete nature for the printing and publishing industry. Plans for the new school were explained to members of the A. N. P. A. by Victor Ridder, chairman of the Committee on Printing Trade Schools, in connection with his annual report.

Plans for the new training center have been prepared by Ross W. Kellogg, director of the Empire State Schools, in consultation with Mr. Ridder, Adolph S. Ochs of the New York Times, Frank E. Gannett, president of the New York State Publishers Association, and John W. Baker, chairman of the committee on education of the upstate association, which has directed the Empire State School of Printing for the last four years. Tentative plans call for a fund of $250,000, of which $150,000 will be used for a site and building and $100,000 for equipment.

The objects of the proposed school are given by Director Kellogg, as follows:

1. To train workmen in the printing trades and recruit the supply depleted by the rapid decline of apprenticeship since the war.

2. To furnish special instruction to journeymen and fit them for executive positions.

3. To give a complete fundamental knowledge of the production branches of publishing to sons of newspaper publishers and printers who will form the next generation of publishers and employing printers.

4. To furnish laboratory facilities for a course in Newspaper Engineering if such a course is established at Cornell University.

5. To supervise, as far as possible, through an extension department, the training of apprentices in newspaper and commercial printing plants.

6. To give attention to instruction in printing in the public schools to the end that such instruction may bring a desirable type of young man into the trade.

7. If demand arises, to furnish instruction in news writing, copy reading, advertising salesmanship and circulation department methods.

8. To devote some effort to research work.

The Empire State School of Printing has taken an option on a highly desirable site, adjacent to Cornell University, and has prepared plans for a building which will provide more than 20,000 squre feet of floor space. The site is sufficiently large to allow for a second building of the same size.

Victor F. Ridder explained that there is no conflict between the idea for establishing a newspaper trade school at Ithaca and the colleges of journalism. "There is a growing demand for a training center or university devoted to preparing men for newspaper careers, providing them with training in the fundamentals of newspaper work, not only the news and editorial departments but in the mechanical, circulation, advertising and business management ends of the publishing business," said Mr. Ridder. "Doctors, lawyers and other professional men have colleges and universities to which they can send their sons, and where young men can go for training in the professions, but there is no such school for the newspaper profession."

REPORTER ATTACKED BY DEPUTY SHERIFF

Wichita Falls, Tex., News Writer Beaten by Officials Seeking to Retaliate for Paper's Investigation

WICHITA FALLS, Tex., April 20.—Two charges of assault and battery have been filed against Dennis White, deputy sheriff of Wichita County, for two alleged unprovoked attacks upon A. D. Hallman, court reporter of the Wichita Falls Record-News. White pleaded guilty to the attacks, April 16 and 17. Sentence has not yet been passed.

The first attack on the reporter came when Hallman asked the officer for any report by the grand jury, which was at that time investigating city and county peace officers. White, without a word, struck the reporter, knocked him down and then is alleged to have stamped upon him. The paper filed charges on behalf of its employe. White pleaded guilty, then waited until the reporter came out of court and attacked him again, beating Hallman severely. Three deputies stood by laughing while White jumped repeatedly on the prostrate form of his opponent. The Record-News has been active in the campaign to clean up the city and county peace force. Publicity given the matter resulted two weeks ago in insurance men warning the city council that all burglary insurance would be cancelled unless the city police department was immediately cleaned up. Despite warnings by White and other deputies that more beatings would follow any stories given the two fights, the Record-News appeared Sunday morning with an eight-column line, appealing to the people to take action.

The South's natural resources

Have created a new empire of commerce!

Business men are amazed at the tremendous advancement in commerce and industry of the South.

But, this was inevitable. The natural resources attract industry. Factories are springing up everywhere throughout the South. There is coal in abundance. Water power is available and living conditions attract good solid workers who are anxious to raise their families in real American cities.

There is an increased demand for all commodities and some of the luxuries. The South is of great importance now as a territory for your products. The daily papers will help you sell the South. Tell these people what you have to offer. They are ready to buy.

PRESS AGENT PROBE URGED BY A. N. P. A.

papers. It is interesting to note in connection with new accounts constantly appearing, records showing solicitations by representatives of the Bureau extending often over a period of years.

Some newspapers that profit by the Bureau's work as shown clearly by the national advertising appearing in their columns, are not yet contributing to its support. Your Committee again emphasizes its belief that some method should be found to induce all members of the American Newspaper Publishers Association to participate in the support of the Bureau as they unquestionably participate in its benefits.

It is the opinion of your Committee that the Bureau of Advertising represents a valuable investment which should be conserved and encouraged by all newspapers and particularly the membership of the A. N. P. A.

Your Committee submits that the willingness of many newspapers to give their space to free publicity seekers is still an obstacle to the further development of advertising.

In support of this belief, your Committee is in position to refer to specific instances which came to its notice during the year where projects to spend money for advertising in the newspapers were hampered or abandoned because of the belief that the advertiser could obtain at little or no cost "news stories" and "special articles" in the newspapers.

Your Committee observes that virtually every proposed campaign of advertising considered by trade associations includes at least consideration of the services of a paid press agent. Committees having in charge associational campaigns are constantly urged to spend the bulk of their appropriations in mediums that compete with newspapers and to use what is left to pay the salary and expenses of a publicity agent. Cases may be cited where press agents have been willing to "guarantee" a certain amount of free newspaper space in exchange for a stipulated fee.

In a recent associational drive to collect advertising funds to promote travel to a certain section, the assertion was made to prospective contributors that the association had obtained the free publication last year of "1,000,000 inches of its news stories." The advertising fund was raised and it is now being spent in a list of magazines. It is obvious that this advertiser reached the conclusion that there is no need for paid advertising in a medium that is so generous in its use of press agent propaganda. In fact this conclusion is emphasized in a further statement from the association that certain newspapers constantly "wire for the preparation of special articles by us, paying for them at their usual rates."

The following excerpt from a report of a Bureau representative concerning the convention of an industry where advertising was being considered is quoted in this connection:

"* * * The sentiment had been pretty well set for a money raising campaign that would get together $150,000 to $200,000 when a gentleman representing one of the free publicity activities was given the floor—saying that he could get $300,000 worth of free publicity for $30,000."

Our representative added that this proposal "practically killed the whole question of paid advertising for the time being."

The president of another association, whose interest in newspaper advertising the Bureau has cultivated, writes concerning the paid space he is using.

"I am wondering, however, whether we should continue this because it seems that a great deal of advertising can be gotten in the newspapers free of charge. I know one fellow who secures over $40,000 per year from some of the —— companies and gives them country-wide publicity which does not cost a cent. * * * Some of our people are tremendously influenced by such wonderful service."

Your Committee submits that the evils of the free publicity situation are too obvious to require emphasis. The remedy is in the hands of the publishers of newspapers who can stop this flood of destructive material by instructing their editors better to inform themselves about the character of free publicity which they consider "news" today but which has a disastrous effect upon newspaper advertising and, in our judgment, tends to lessen the confidence of readers in newspapers. The answer to a constantly uttered inquiry of newspapers receiving free publicity, "Why don't they pay for it?" is the very simple one, "Because they can get it for nothing." The editor rather than the press agent is responsible for this situation.

Your Committee suggests that the A. N. P. A. authorize the appointment of a committee to investigate the subject of free publicity and that this committee include in a report to be made at the Fall convention the results of a study of individual newspaper columns with a view of estimating the value of the space given to material which properly belongs in the advertising columns.

The Bureau continues to deal through its literature with a wide range of problems common to newspaper advertisers.

In "The Progress of Newspaper Advertising," special attention was directed toward the mechanics of newspaper copy with a view to encouraging better printing. Nearly 10,000 copies of this book have been distributed.

Recently many newspaper publishers and advertisers in Germany showed wide interest in the book and permission was granted by the Bureau for a German translation, which is now being made. A large number of requests have come from abroad for the English edition.

Among other publications, "Good Ground," "The Backbone of the Campaign," and "A Word About the Bureau of Advertising," found circulations of from 5,000 to 10,000 copies each.

The annual statistical book on rates and circulations, now in course of preparation, will include this year the result of studies made to show the buying power of the population in the United States and Canada. These studies should be helpful to newspaper advertisers. They demonstrate in practical fashion the growing importance of newspaper space as a market builder.

Your Committee, appointed by the President of the A.N.P.A. at the 1925 convention, was composed of the following:

William F. Rogers, The Boston Transcript; Harry Chandler, The Los Angeles Times; Howard Davis, The New York Herald Tribune; W. C. R. Harris, The Toronto Star; William J. Hofmann, The Portland Oregonian; Fleming Newbold, The Washington Star; David B. Plum, The Troy Record; Allison Stone, The Providence Journal; Louis Wiley, The New York Times; John B. Woodward, The Chicago Daily News; E. W. Parsons, The Chicago Tribune; Chas. D. Atkinson, The Atlanta Journal; John S. McCarrens, The Cleveland Plain Dealer.

This Committee organized on April 23, 1925 at the Waldorf-Astoria by electing William F. Rogers, chairman; Harry Chandler, vice-chairman and Howard Davis, treasurer. David D. Plum and Louis Wiley were re-appointed as Finance Committee.

Subsequently, in accordance with a decision to increase the membership of the Committee in Charge, President Thomason appointed D. E. Town of the Hearst Newspapers and Frank H. Burgess of the La Crosse Tribune.

Joseph F. Finley succeeded John Budd as advisory member of the Committee representing the Six Point League of New York, and John J. McConnell succeeded Robert H. Flaherty, as advisory member representing the Newspaper Representatives Association of Chicago

Your Committee held a meeting on Oct. 14 at the Chicago offices and has kept in close contact with the work of the Bureau through semi-monthly reports made by the Bureau's three offices. The Chairman and the Finance Chairman have been in frequent touch with the New York offices.

At the close of the fiscal year, there were 366 newspapers members of the Bureau as against 363 one year ago.

The Bureau's expenses have increased as its work has enlarged, but the expenditures still continue within its income.

Figures for the fiscal year show a total gross income of $94,528.12 and a total expense of $87,906.29.

The annual dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria on April 22 was the fourth held under the Bureau's auspices. Covers were laid for 940 persons and the program was an interesting one. The dinner was in charge of a committee of which John B. Woodward was chairman. It was called to order by William F. Rogers, Chairman of the Committee in Charge, and Arthur G. Staples, editor of the Lewiston (Me.) Journal, acted as toastmaster. The speakers included ex-Governor Lowden of Illinois, Rube Goldberg, the cartoonist, and Mrs. Izetta Jewel Brown of Kingwood, W. Va.

Your Committee has enjoyed the cordial co-operation of the officers and staff of the A. N. P. A. for which it expresses thanks. It similarly acknowledges the courtesies of the Six Point League of New York and the Newspaper Representatives Association of Chicago and the trade press.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

AUGUSTUS CAESAR certainly knew the value of publicity. He knew how to secure the insertion of the right sort of news in The Acta Diurna, as the daily news medium of the Romans was called. The chief of his publicity staff, in one sense of the term, was Publius Vergilius Maro. To him, Augustus gave the following task:

> Augustus wished also to convince the world that his marvellous success was due to the direct favor of heaven, that the principate which he had established was the preordained event to which Rome and the Romans had been slowly moving during the long centuries of their history, and that the blessing of the gods rested upon him and his work. Thus would Augustus tighten his own hold on the Empire.

The matter just quoted is from "Vergil as a Propagandist" by Mabel Gant Murphy of the Western High School of Washington, D. C. and is printed in The Classical Weekly for April 12. In this article Miss Murphy goes on to say that "The Aeneid" was undoubtedly the largest and most important work of propaganda undertaken by Vergil.

In writing this classic, Vergil sought to achieve the following purposes for Augustus Caesar:

> (1) To increase the faith of the people in the old religion, and through a revival of the ancient customs and morals to lend stability to the Empire.
> (2) To blazen forth the greatness of Rome.
> (3) To trace the divine origin of Augustus, and, by providing a divine sanction for his rule, to overcome opposition to that rule, and so to strengthen Augustus's position.

Miss Murphy then discusses in detail these three sets of purposes. In doing so she asserts that the best propoganda passage of this Latin classic is in Book I where Vergil sang the praises of Rome and outlined the course predestined for that city by the Fates.

Members of the working press will not usually find The Classical Weekly of special interest. But the issue for April 12 should not be overlooked by any one interested in the story of how public opinion has been molded by professional publicity men.

WILLIAM E.—"PUSSYFOOT"—JOHNSON tells the story of his work in the dry interests in the May issue of the International-Cosmopolitan Magazine. I have no desire to become involved in any discussion of prohibition; but his description of his work as press agent for the cause has a direct relation to newspaper making.

His ethics at times may be questioned but at the same time he raises the following questions about newspaper ethics:

> The liquor interests were purchasing by wholesale space in the West Virginia newspapers, telling of the horrors of prohibition wherever tried. This stuff was all printed as straight news or editorial matter without advertising marks of any sort. I did not have sufficient money at hand to compete in any such game, a game that was distasteful to me anyhow. So I went to Washington and got some letterheads printed as "literary agent" at "35 B Street, N.W.," using the name of my brother-in-law, C. L. Trevitt, for that purpose. Under this mask, I entered into correspondence with every newspaper in West Virginia, asking their rates for "pure news matter" and also for "editorials" against prohibition to be written by myself.
> A large part of the newspapers snapped at the bait, swallowing it with the hook and sinker, and with a piece of the line hanging out of their mouths. A vast amount of incriminating correspondence was soon in hand. This I published widely throughout the state.
> A magazine which was then doing considerable "muck-raking," published facsimiles of many of these letters in consecutive issues. The effect was tremendous. Several newspapers were forced out of business by wrathful public opinion. I was savagely denounced by the victims and even sharply upbraided by some good friends who called it "forgery" and other disagreeable names.
> But ethics be hanged. I more than accomplished what I was driving at, for from that time every wet newspaper article or wet editorial was classified in the public mind as "bought and paid for" even though it might have been entirely honest in its purpose.

THE future of tabloid newspapers in general and the present success of one picture paper in particular is discussed by William H. Field, general manager of the New York Daily News, in Liberty for April 24. In spite of the fact that Mr. Field says that his article is not a history of tabloid newspapers he does give many pivotal points in the evolution of those sheets which started in London in 1903 when Lord Northcliffe printed his daily for women, not on standard size but on small size sheets.

Mr. Field then jumps to the story of the News and devotes several paragraphs to circulation figures which tell their own story. Fifteen months elapsed before the Daily News carried its balance on the right side of the ledger. At the present time, to quote Mr. Field, "the News is one of the most profitable papers in the United States."

One of the reasons given by Mr. Field for the success of his tabloid sheet is the need for elbow room in the crowded subways or elevated trains—when reading a newspaper. But a more important reason for the success is the method of presenting the news by touching only the high spots. Stress is laid upon the fact that the tabloid newspapers specialize in amusements and entertainment. The comic strips are cited by way of illustration.

Space forbids detailed description of prize contests, but they are dealt with at length in the article. Yet some of these contests are not without their educational value. To quote from the article:

> Several of these contests, notably the Patriotic Game of Presidents and the Patriotic Game of States, have stimulated a real acquaintance with history and geography and in addition to the amusement afforded by them have undoubtedly reawakened a knowledge long dormant among many people.

Justification for the extensive use of pictures is found, not in the fact that people are unable to read, but, in the fact that the comedy, drama, and tragedy that lie in everyday news can often be expressed more vividly in pictures than in text. Hence the tabloid sheet has nearly as many photographers as reporters. How these photographers work is told with considerable fullness. By way of conclusion Mr. Field mentions this economic reason for the future growth of tabloids:

> Last but not least, the supply of pulp wood from which newspaper is made is decreasing. The tabloid newspaper, in just as many separate pages, uses about one-half the amount of paper necessary for the production of the large-sized paper. This is an economic condition that cannot be overlooked.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Edgar E. Bartlett

"MY game is not golf or baseball," said Edgar E. Bartlett, general manager of the Rockford (Ill.) Register-Gazette. "My business and my hobby have always been and are the same thing—publishing a newspaper. That's my big game."

But a story is told of Mr. Bartlett and his initiation into the game of golf. He played it once—just once.

It was on the links of Rockford Country Club of which he has long been a member. He lost or battered beyond redemption nine balls in a round of nine holes. It is intimated that he was nine hours doing it, but that may be a canard. It is a fact that ever since that memorable day the Register-Gazette's publisher has been content to be a porch golfer.

"After 47 years in the newspaper business I find it has lost none of its fascination," Mr. Bartlett said. "Thirty-five of those years I have passed in Rockford. During the others I was in the Kalamazoo, Mich., field."

The Register-Gazette is celebrating the 35 anniversary of the consolidation of the Rockford Register and Rockford Gazette, which were effected by Mr. Bartlett, by rebuilding its offices, having recently acquired a 99-year lease of the property embracing four stores and the Palm Theatre. The news room and linotype department will be transferred to the third floor, the business offices occupying all of the main floor. Seven new linotype machines are being installed.

The rebuilding has gone on while the editors, reporters, telegrapher, clerks and bookkeepers have stuck to their posts.

Mr. Bartlett is a charter member of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, was organizer and first president of the Illinois Daily Newspaper Association, and is an officer of the Inland Daily Press. He and Mrs. Bartlett made a tour this year of the Holy Land, Egypt, France and England.

NEARLY every country club stages a "Beginners' Flight" or something like that for new golfers some time in the spring. Find out when this occurs at your local country clubs. Then get all the concerns in your city dealing in golf supplies, golf apparel, etc., to run ads in your paper about a week ahead of the flight for the purpose of getting the business of these new golfers.—Frank H. Williams.

an extra word here and there in a telegram or press message counts up materially in the course of a year. One newspaper has effected a substantial savings by having every message, regardless of what department in which it originated, checked by an experienced clerk for the elimination of excess words or complete rewriting if necessary to cut the length and retain the thought of the message. —B. A. T., Springfield, Ohio.

An attractive page sold by the New London (Conn.) Day to local women who conduct their own business establishments.

Now is the time to plan a special "Vacation Guide" section for your paper. Local dealers and managers of camps or resorts will come in and a little effort in sending a form letter to resorts in all sections of the country will bring additional revenue.—Davis O. Vandivier.

What day in May is straw hat day in your city? In Seattle, Wash., the straw hat dealers have just designated May 13. Other cities may choose other opening dates. Why not arrange for a page of straw hat ads from the hat and clothing stores of your city a few days before the big spring event for men?—C. M. L.

Get your local Ford dealer to advertise for wool from surrounding farms. The Ford Motor Company is now buying wool direct from the farmers through its dealers.—George B. Deery.

Telegraph bills are an item of expense that is not checked very closely on the average newspaper. Nevertheless,

The number of replies received daily to blind classified advertising in one newspaper are carefully tabulated and the total published in a box in the next day's issue to show the pulling power of the classified advertisements in one newspaper. If you want a new punch, try this one.—B. A. T.

In spring the public begins to get an interest in getting out of doors. Why not have one of your reporters take short trips around your district to points of interest within walking or easy transportation distance from the city and describe the beauty of spring, etc. The public will enjoy reading them and many are sure to take trips themselves. They will be sure to watch your paper for other interesting trips.—C. E. Pellissier, Boston.

Under the head "Who to Call, Where to Send—HOME SERVICE" a Northwest paper grouped a number of ads pertaining to such home services as laundering, coal, wiring and lighting, vacuum cleaners, etc.—C. M. L.

FOLLOWING publication of the story about John S. Stevenson, of Vineland, N. J., who died several weeks ago, and left a legacy of letters of advice to his son, Dick, the Los Angeles (Cal.) Herald devoted six columns on the first page of the second section on a tie-up story. Four leading judges were asked to prepare a set of letters of advice to boys. These were reproduced together with photos of the jurists and a photo of Dick Stevenson. The letters were to the boy: "At age of 10;" "At age of 16;" "At age of 21;" "When Married." The story was captioned: "Had he been my son?—Or yours?"—Harold J. Ashe, Long Beach, Cal.

"I think this would help Miami." Under this standing heading the Miami Herald has been running a daily short feature, on the subject suggested in the heading. The feature contains the opinion of any constructive citizen, whether a permanent or a temporary resident, so long as the statement made suggests some factor that would help the city and give a possible means of carrying out the suggestion.—Ruel McDaniel.

How do the people of your town want automobile speeders to be treated when caught—should they simply be fined or should they be sent to jail? Let the readers vote on this proposition. To do so would create a great deal of interest.—Frank H. Williams.

Paris has decreed the shorter skirt and the longer hose for this coming season. How do buyers at your department and specialty stores view this style factor? Their angles will give you the local style story on a good feature topic.—R. M. Campbell, Framingham, Mass.

Are the consuls, vice-consuls and other foreign representatives stationed in your city really "at home." You'll say they are, if you give them a chance to talk about all the hospitality they enjoy, the social functions and kindnesses shown them. They are by no means neglected. This will make a good half-column for each foreigner interviewed, with photo, and a series can be run consecutively, or at intervals.—C. M. L., Seattle, Wash.

Under the heading of "Even Judges Have To Smile at Freak Court Cases" one of the Boston papers printed a very interesting and amusing feature story. The collapse of a folding bed caused a $10,000 suit for damages, a man forcibly kissed by a chorus girl in front of his wife started another suit, barber sued when he cuts off a pet moustache are some of the cases related. Look up some in your own courts you'll find them equally amusing.—C. E. Pellissier.

The amateur gardener may be the butt of many jokes, but he takes his hobby seriously despite the fact. A series of articles on some of the famous local flower gardens, giving a description of the layout and containing a few experience remarks by the owner, have proven very popular in Elgin, Ill., where the Daily News has tried the stunt. The writer of the articles received numerous suggestions from readers.—H. J. B.

There are few readers of the newspaper who will not take pride in a daily or weekly column devoted to the mention and praise of philanthropic work. If John Doe has presented the Y. M. C. A. with a building for its work it may be given a little special mention in this way. Scouting will bring many such deeds to light for such a column.—C. J., Topeka.

Who has the oldest subscription receipt for your paper? The Missoula (Mont.) Missoulan published a facsimile of such a receipt issued to a subscriber 50 years ago.—T. E. R., Chicago.

more directly than in any other way, there is an opportunity for you to show the manufacturers of this country the opportunity that lies before them to the South.

"We welcome you here today, and we welcome the opportunity of being of service to you in making this opportunity a reality."

"You who are guests from the other twenty republics of the Western hemisphere, as editors and publishers, represent all three essentials of the modern newspaper," Mr. O'Shaughnessy said in his address.

"This gathering, therefore, has every character that makes it an assemblage of vital importance to the progress and happiness of the Western world. Newspapers as the great channel of international communication form a medium of first importance in the making of international understanding. Through the two-way flow of news, knowledge of each other is developed, upon which understanding may be based. The more we know of one another, the better we understand and the easier becomes the task of developing the material side.

"Our responsibilities are in the material side but to discharge them we must harmonize our efforts with the intellectual and the ethical. Realizing the scope of these responsibilities, we have gone into literature and art, and we have brought the best of both into the service we deliver.

"With that re-enforcement we were able to phrase the ethics of advertising and give to it that spiritual height, without which the promotion of great business through advertising, as we see it today, would not be possible. The number of pages of advertising are as numerous today as those of the editorial.

"With the spiritual urge in our efforts, we are pleased to ask the world which half of the newspaper is best in its literature, best in its art, and kindliest and most helpful in its message,—the editorial or the advertising.

"We do not put advertising first although we do not minimize the value of its service, and we know that without the editorial, which means the proper handling of news, that advertising could not exist.

"With such a marvelous medium as the modern newspaper, advertising is inspired to high ambitions. As the dissemination of news between nations expands, the volume of international advertising will enlarge. The American Association of Advertising Agencies will be ready for that day.

"We have already assembled at our headquarters the most complete and dependable files of rates and data of the newspapers of the world that has ever been brought together. In this connection we have the co-operation of the Department of Commerce and the Department of State.

"I can say to every publisher in this room that his publication is represented in those files. If every publisher of an established newspaper or magazines in the entire world were here, I would say truthfully the same thing to him.

"Advertising in all countries, however, is not attended with as many marks of certainty as we desire. Senor Mitre, of La Nacion, has well told you how important it is that all advertising data should be certain and stable. That, however, is a detail that can easily follow in the wake of such a gathering as this.

"With your co-operation we will perfect our rate and data files on all Latin-American publications, and a further extension of our export advertising will follow as a natural consequence. Advertising means trade, because it develops trade, it impels trade, it enlarges trade, and it forces desirable and mutually profitable trade.

"With news-built understanding and mutually profitable trade of proper volume, international treaties become superfluous. Treaties without trade are as husks without grain.

"This gathering has all the meaning of a trade convention, into which the peoples concerned have breathed life and activity. Since we contribute in our nationally organized expression to the material side of journalism, when we meet as we do in this room today, we round out the figure of understanding and the mutual interchange of commerce, upon which happy peace and prosperity builds its permanent home.

"You gentlemen of Latin-American journalism have written the most beautiful page in the new history of the Western hemisphere by participating in the assemblage here this morning. You have widened our vision, strengthened our high purposes, and you have given us great and enduring honor.

BUREAU'S SUGGESTIONS READ TO DELEGATES

No Immediate Action on Big Free Publicity Probe, But Expected to Get Under Way Shortly

No immediate action was taken, as far as EDITOR & PUBLISHER could learn, in regard to the striking recommendation of the bureau of Advertising of the A. N. P. A. that a special committee be appointed to probe press agent activities, check up on the amount of space given away free of charge by the newspapers, find out who was responsible for this serious leakage and report their findings at the next fall meeting.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER representatives questioned all leaders authorized to give out news of the executive sessions and they could not recall that any discussion followed reading of the bureau's report. It is understood a committee will be appointed, however, and will shortly start an investigation as recommended.

This year's convention differed from recent years in that a programme had been drawn up and printed. The schedule of topics as laid out by William B. Bryant, Paterson (N. J.) Press-Guardian and chairman of the topics committee, was adhered to in the majority of cases.

Thus rules of procedure had been adopted, which provided that "no resolution or vote involving the policy of the association or the expenditure of money shall be voted by the convention unless presented at a prior meeting and posted on the bulletin board.

Another rule had it that all who addressed the convention would be limited to five minutes, and a third rule prohibited members discussing the same topic more than once so long as any other member desired the privilege of the floor.

Thursday's session opened with a discussion of traffic problems by Mr. Antrim. He told of notable recent instances when the Tribune had saved expense by quick action in this field, and expressed the opinion that a traffic department should be made available to all association members.

Standardization of press room equipment, long a hobby of Charles F. Hart, mechanical superintendent, New York Times, was next on the program.

Mr. Hart, who has been investigating possibilities of such action, reported results he had obtained. He said it was the opinion of press equipment manufacturers that by closer co-operation both among the publishers themselves and then between the publishers and the shops, would bring about substantial benefits to all concerned.

After the bureau's report was read, general discussion took place on general advertising topics, with Mr. Bryant presiding.

Establishment and operation by competitors or the merchants themselves of retail advertising publications, generally called Shopping News was a subject of interested discussion. Notes were compared, and in the end it was generally agreed that there need be no fear of this form of media as far as the newspapers were concerned.

Other advertising topics discussed included:

Is so-called "scheme" advertising as profitable to the advertiser as independent use of space? Should "schemes" be sold to contract advertisers at other than contract rates?

How can church advertising best be developed?

Who should pay cost of cuts and mats used in illustrating advertising copy, the publisher or the advertiser? If the publisher, upon what basis?

What is the experience of publishers in creating rate cards? Is the formula of 3c per inch per thousand circulation sufficiently equitable? What increase in circulation should accrue to justify an advance in rates?

Should newspapers in a highly competitive field exchange mats of ads? If so, should it be without fee or with a charge?

Have schools of journalism done anything for the betterment of the science of advertising—improving copy standards—producing a more efficient personnel?

How can national advertising best be developed for the small town newspaper?

Is it customary to charge more for double truck than for two full pages? If so, at what rate is extra charge made?

Do any members allow agency commission on local advertising when a full corps of solicitors is employed?

Standard measurement of advertisements. Do newspapers comply with the recommendation made by the Board of Directors of the A. N. P. A. in 1923 to the effect that all advertisements, whether national or local, office set matter or electro shall be measured from cut off rule to cut off rule, regardless of shoulders on electros?

How far should publishers go in complying with requests for information and replying to questionnaires from advertising agencies, etc? Is it the practice to favor national advertisers with costly merchandising co-operation?

Some agencies insist on having tear sheets with invoices for checking national advertising. Is there an additional cost of sending tear sheets which would be a burden and necessitate employing additional help?

Is there a close enough co-operation between publishers and their advertising managers, especially in the various phases of merchandising co-operation, advertising rates, etc.

CENTRAL CIRCULATORS ELECT GALLOWAY

Rockford Man Named President at Chicago Meeting—Vending Machines, Serials Bus Delivery Discussed

G. S. Galloway, circulation manager of the Rockford (Ill.) Register-Gazette, was elected president of the Central States Circulation Managers Association at the spring meeting held Tuesday in the Hotel LaSalle, Chicago. Mr. Galloway has been secretary-treasurer of the group since it was organized in 1917.

J. Paul Kienzle of the Springfield (Ill.) State Journal was named vice-president, while W. C. Hoots of the Quincy (Ill.) Journal was chosen secretary-treasurer. Directors are: J. J. Morrisey, Joliet Herald-News; C. W. Bevinger, Terre Haute (Ind.) Post; E. C. Hewes, Danville (Ill.) Commercial-News.

H. W. Stodghill, Louisville Courier-Journal and Times, retiring president, opened the meeting. C. D. O'Rourke, St. Louis Times, originator of the street car box vending system, spoke on this circulation method, declaring it effective only for morning papers and only then for such morning papers as would consider it a special department and so handle it.

Walter E. Hoots, Quincy (Ill.) Whig-Journal, spoke on "The Lodge and Church Plan Clubbing Subscriptions, Using Chinaware as a Premium." He said his newspaper had experienced success by having such organizations for clubs of 20 or more to subscribe, for either mail or carrier delivery for a six-month period, with chinaware or silver to be used for club dinners as a premium. Initialing the club's name or insignia on wares, proved an added inducement, he said.

Walter J. Parker, Chicago Evening American, spoke on "The Influence of Sex Stories on Circulation." He declared he believed no newspaper reader wanted an immoral story, but that the reader of the "jazz age" did want a realistic, passionate, emotional and intimate story of human life. His plan is to run two serials at the same time, starting one about ten days before the other ends, hoping to intrigue readers.

Building Sunday circulation was discussed by Stanley Swan, Evansville, and C. W. Krum, Lexington Leader; "New Developments in Bus and Truck Transportation," by Paul Kienzle, Springfield State Journal, and H. M. Van Dusen, Chicago Post; "Co-operation by Competitive Circulation Managers," by J. R. Frost, Bloomington (Ill.) Bulletin, and M. M. Began, Decatur (Ill.) Review. George Schmidt, Indianapolis News, discussed "Sub-stations."

"ASSOCIATED PRESS THE LOSER—NOT I" SAYS GANNETT AFTER VOTE

President of Gannett Newspapers, Inc., Places Future Membership Application of Rochester Times-Union in Directors' Hands—Charges Confusion When Vote Was Taken

"THE Associated Press is the loser—not I," Frank E. Gannett, president of Gannett Newspapers, Inc., told EDITOR & PUBLISHER immediately after returns were announced, showing defeat of his application for A. P. membership for the Rochester (N. Y.) Times-Union over the protest of the Rochester Journal and Post-Express, owned by William Randolph Hearst. "The result does not affect me personally," he said.

Whether or not he will again apply for the Rochester membership must be determined by the A. P. directorate, Mr. Gannett asserted in his statement. He also charged confusion when the vote was taken on April 20.

His statement follows in full:

"I feel highly complimented that my application received 747 out of a total of 996 votes cast. This indicates that the membership stood three to one in my favor.

"I am particularly pleased at the showing, because I made no campaign, but left the matter entirely in the hands of the board and my friends.

"It is evident there was a great deal of misunderstanding of the situation on the part of members. If there had been full appreciation of the facts the vote would have been different.

"It is unfortunate that the matter was dragged out until late afternoon, after much confusion and a desire on the part of the members to get away from the meeting. There were a large number of proxies that couldn't be voted because members to whom they had been issued had left the room.

"The result does not affect me personally to any considerable extent, but it does effect the Associated Press. The Associated Press is the loser—not I.

"My interest in the contest lay in the fact that I have six memberships in the Associated Press, and I am positive the Associated Press would be strengthened by having the Rochester Times-Union, the leader of our group, a member.

"The Times-Union is supreme in its field and has news gathering facilities of untold value to the members of the A. P. It seems a pity that one-fifth of those voting could prevent the other members from getting what the Times-Union is able to give them.

"It is significant that the publishers of New York State outside of the Hearst newspapers were practically unanimous in favoring my application. These publishers realize the importance of having the Times-Union in the organization.

"The opposition received votes largely from the extreme west and the extreme south, where the publishers are evidently not concerned about the character of the news they receive from Rochester.

"I want through EDITOR & PUBLISHER to thank the members of the A. P. who supported my application and express my keen appreciation of the faithful and loyal efforts of my friends to win this fight.

"I am not sure about the future. It is for the board of directors of the Associated Press to determine what they want to do in a case where its news sources are in the hands of an owner of a competing news service.

"I will abide by the decision of the board as to my future action. Naturally I should be glad to be elected a member from Rochester."

REGIONAL AND STATE GROUP LEADERS HOLD ANNUAL NEW YORK CONFERENCE

John Stewart, Washington (Pa.) Observer & Reporter Elected President—General Matters to Be Cleared Through Interlocking Committees

CLOSER co-operation between regional and state associations of publishers and the A. N. P. A. is the aim of the conference of regional publishers association which held its annual meeting following a luncheon in the Waldorf Apartments, April 21. In the absence of George D. Lindsey, president, Inland Daily Press Association, who is chairman of the conference; Albert W. Fell, manager of the Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers Association presided.

W. C. Johnson, president of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association reported on the results of a meeting of committees of the S. N. P. A. and the A. N. P. A. for the purpose of working out a plan for co-operative effort. Mr. Williams said that in a number of cases during the last year there has been a duplication of effort and unnecessary expense due to lack of knowledge of the efforts being made for the benefit of publishers by the A. N. P. A. and regional associations. Mr. Johnson said that the A. N. P. A. officers welcome a better understanding and that all matters of general interest will be cleared through interlocking committees to avoid duplication of effort.

Chairman Fell said that there is a danger that in strengthening state and regional publishers associations some members may conclude that their interests will be sufficiently cared for and will withdraw support from the A. N. P. A. He said that the A. N. P. A. is needed and should receive the support of a larger number of publishers so that it will be in a position to better handle problems of national scope.

Clifford Yewdall reported on the cost finding work of the Inland Daily Press Association. He said that page costs range from $4.50 to $50 in a recent survey and that contrary to the laws of production costs mount as volume increases. This subject was discussed by many publishers. The statement was made that page costs are best kept at a minimum by undermanning composing rooms, working overtime when necessary.

Officers for 1926 will be elected by mail with the exception of the president. The conference elected John L. Stewart of Washington (Pa.) Observer and Reporter, as president of the association. Mr. Stewart is president of the Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers Association. Wil V. Tufford was elected secretary.

Syndicates Flash Volcano Views in 12 Hours to New York

Pictures of Mauna in eruption taken in Hawaii were flashed by wireless to San Francisco and from there sent by telegraph to New York in record time by NEA Service, Inc., and P. & A. Photos, Inc.

Twelve hours after the pictures had been sent from Honolulu they were in New York. It requires 12 days to make the same distance by train and boat.

Pictures obtained in this way by the two syndicates were printed in New York shortly after their arrival and on the following day were posted on exhibition at the Waldorf-Astoria.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Albert L. Miller

SIXTEEN years ago Albert L. Miller familiarly known to all his friends as "Bert," pulled stakes from the soil of Kansas, where he had been born and reared, and where he had already made for himself something of a name as a newspaper editor and writer, and landed in his quiet manner in Battle Creek, Mich.

He had sold out his interests in the Ottawa Herald, a paying daily, that he might take over the management and direction of the Morning Enquirer at Battle Creek.

To say that it was a venture, is putting it rather mildly, for the paper he was to assume the direction of, and with the fortunes of which he was to cast his lot, lacked about everything that a newspaper should have, including circulation, facilities for publication and public confidence. In addition to these shortcomings it was also reported to have chalked up its monthly reckonings in red ink; totals which are reported at times to have run well into the four figures.

Added to all this, the newly arrived editor and manager found himself confronted with two evening papers; papers which were old in years and held their circulation through generations of families.

The year following his arrival in Battle Creek, this quiet man who had come out of the west into a strange community, and who had worked continuously 18 hours a day in rebuilding what those about him were wont to speak of as a "wrecked plant," startled that community with the announcement that he would commence the publication of an evening edition.

"It can't be done," said his friends. "With two old and established papers here now, you can never get a foothold."

Five years later the evening paper which he had launched on an uncertain sea in May, 1911, had attained a large circulation and had witnessed the consolidation of its two rivals, following the retirement of the oldest from the field.

Keith Murdoch: Strong copydesk is backbone of the paper.

WHY not split up the bulky American Sunday newspaper and sell the various sections as separate weekly publications?

The question was asked this week by Keith Murdoch, editor-in-chief and general manager of the Melbourne (Australia) Herald and Sun, who left New York April 14, after a month's visit in this country. Mr. Murdoch, visiting newspaper publishers in the leading cities from the Pacific to the Atlantic coasts, found that the increasing size of the Sunday papers was a common problem. Admitting he was unacquainted with the wishes of either the American public or the American advertiser, he ventured the opinion in an interview before he sailed, that at least a split-up of the paper would result in the saving of considerable present waste effort and material.

Publication of Sunday newspapers is prohibited in Melbourne. But in separate publications issued semi-weekly or weekly, the publishing company Mr. Murdoch heads produces every week a total of specialized reading matter equal, if not more, than the amount contained in an American Sunday newspaper.

There is the Listner In, a weekly wireless paper, similar to the radio section in the U. S.; the Weekly Times, which reviews the news of each week for the outlying farmer readers; the Sporting Globe, published mid-weekly and Saturday Night; Table Talk, published weekly to cover society and dramatic news; and Pals, a boys' weekly.

"It is like selling the supplements of an American Sunday paper separately," Mr. Murdoch pointed out. "And it certainly is a cheaper and less wasteful method than the bulk publication.

"Take, for instance, the real estate section of a Sunday newspaper. It must be circulated among many readers not in the least interested,—60 per cent of the total circulation, perhaps. The same is true of radio, the woman's page, the comics.

Publishing them separately is not half the strain on the newspaper's mechanical equipment, and the entire field is just as well covered, but in a less wasteful manner. We have found the practice pays well."

The parent publications of the brood of smaller weeklies which come from the same plant in Melbourne are the Herald, morning, and the Sun, an evening picture tabloid.

Mr. Murdoch said he was extremely interested in the success of tabloid newspapers in this country. His own tabloid, started three years ago, has been well received by the Australian public, quite without resort to over-play of crime and scandal news, he said.

"We attribute the success of the Sun," he explained, "to the facts that the news is brightly and briefly told on a paper of convenient size; that the news is told in pictures as well as the printed word; and that a minimum of scandal news is published.

"I believe that in Australia the newspapers pay more attention to condensation than they do in this country. We consider a strong copy desk is the backbone of a newspaper. We do one big thing in a big way each day, and hold all the rest of the news to small space.

"Everywhere there seems to be a wide public that does not care for detailed news. The tabloid has been an answer to this demand."

Three years ago, the Melbourne Herald completed a new six-story plant devoted exclusively to publishing, but already this building has been outgrown because of increased circulation and work has started on a new extension.

A recent Melbourne newspaper development, Mr. Murdoch said, is the increased use of automobiles for distribution. His company has a fleet of automobile trucks, serving territory within a radius of 15 miles, with one or two routes extending 50 miles from the city.

"We have found that automobile distribution costs us 11 pence a mile or 22 cents in American money, allowing for initial cost and depreciation," Mr. Murdoch said. "That is probably twice what it costs here, because you have cheaper automobiles, cheaper gasoline, and better roads."

Mr. Murdock was educated in Melbourne schools and then went to England to the School of Economics and Political Science. He started newspaper work about 20 years ago on the Melbourne Age, a morning newspaper, leaving its service just before the war to establish a federal news bureau. He was a war correspondent later, on the French, British, Belgian and Italian fronts. After the war he became London correspondent for a string of Australian newspapers, returnnig to Melbourne four and one-half years ago to take his present position.

Newspaper conditions in Australia have improved vastly in the last 20 years, and an important factor in the improvement has been the Australian Journalists Association, which Mr. Murdoch described as "a union, which isn't a union."

It came into being about 18 years ago, when an act of Parliament established a labor arbitration court system. This provided that any employes forming an association might have the protection of the arbitration court in settling disputes regarding wages or working conditions.

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

George Matthew Adams Hits Press Agents—Bell Starts New Comic Strip—Eastern Newspaper Service Reorganized—Kinnaird's Career

SEEKING to get free advertising into the newspapers, the Walter M. Lowney Company, Boston, is sending handouts to editors trading on the popularity of Edgar A. Guest, newspaper poet, whose verse is distributed by the George Matthew Adams Service. A "Guest" box of chocolates is the tie-up.

The stunt was called to the attention of Mr. Adams, and he emphatically disclaimed responsibility.

"In the 20 years I have done business with the newspapers," he said, "I have strenuously opposed every possible scheme that might tend to commercialize the work of the writer or artist, or in any way divert the value of this writer or artist as a newspaper feature. I am strenuously opposed to all free publicity in newspapers of this nature.

"I feel sure that if Mr. Guest understood how the Walter M. Lowney people are trying to use the newspapers to sell their candy hiding behind his popularity, and using it to get free publicity for their candy, that he would not be for it. Certainly this firm is opposed to any such scheme."

Clark Kinnaird, newly appointed managing editor of the Editors' Feature Service, got his early training for a newspaper career as part owner, editor, publisher, job shop foreman, advertising solicitor and circulation manager of the Hazard (Ky.) Herald, which still flourishes in the "mining, moonshine, mud and murder" district of the Kentucky mountains. Before that he had had experience as a reporter for the Lexington (Ky.) Herald. After Hazard and brief experience in Chicago, came a desk position on Henry Watterson's Louisville Courier-Journal. Then Kinnaird was graduated to the Detroit Journal. When that paper was sold to the Detroit News he was feature editor, and went over to the News in that capacity. He was there for two years before going to the Central Press Association as managing editor, which post he quits for his new duties with Editors' Feature Service.

Kinnaird will be located at the Cleveland headquarters of the Editors' Feature Service.

Working in co-operation with the New York Evening World, the Bell Syndicate, Inc., New York, has originated a new 6-day 6-column comic strip under the title "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." Miss Anita Loos, who wrote the popular book of the same name, is writing the balloons for the strip.

Reorganization of the Eastern Newspaper Service, Boston, was announced this week by James Dempsey, president. The syndicate's personnel has been increased and new features added, he said. Miss E. Lee Lamar has been appointed secretary of the service. Miss Lamar formerly worked for the Buffalo (N. Y.) Courier, Newark (N. J.) Ledger and Birmingham (Ala.) News. Francis E. Monahan, Charles Donelan, cartoonist, formerly of the Boston (Mass.) Traveler and Theodore E. Hedlund, aviation editor, Boston Post, have joined the reorganized staff.

Knute Rockne, Notre Dame's football and track coach, is covering the Penn Relay games at Philadelphia this week for clients of the Christy Walsh Syndicate, N. Y.

The Ledger Syndicate, Inc., Philadelphia, has issued a new catalogue, which was distributed to delegates to the A. P. and A. N. P. A. conventions.

Entertainment was furnished free to editors attending the A. P. and A. N. P. A. conventions by Editors' Feature Service, Inc., and Johnson Features, Inc., at a private theater on East Fortieth street, New York. Broadway talent was employed. Performances were given in the afternoons of April 21 and 22.

Lumber Men to Spend $1,000,000 in Advertising—Radio Firms in Bankruptcy Proceedings—Wrigley Proves Value of Newspaper Advertising

TO combat "erroneous ideas" about the scarcity of wood the National-American Wholesale Lumber Association will spend $1,000,000 annually in advertising it was decided at a convention which closed at Atlantic City April 16.

The matter was presented to the convention by Wilson Compton, Washington, secretary of the National Lumber Manufacturers Association.

"The public believes wood is almost all gone and that they must use substitutes. Careful and widespread advertising must be done to overcome this impression."

The Thermiodyne Radio Corporation has filed a petition in bankruptcy.

The company specialized in single-control radio sets, graduated in wave lengths. Last year it entered into a contract with the Music Master Corporation for the delivery of 63,000 sets in 1925. Numerous optimistic reports concerning the outlook were issued last year, and the company said it had outlined its program for 1926 and that no manufacture outside of its own organization was contemplated. The slashing of prices for radio sets is understood to have been responsible for the company's difficulties.

William Wrigley Jr. Company, Chicago, this week issued its periodical proof of the outstanding value of newspaper advertising. This company always refuses to discuss advertising theories. It talks quarterly increases in profits instead. For the quarter ended, March 31, 1926, the company reports a net profit of $2,406,091 after depreciation, federal taxes, etc. This compares with a net profit of $1,587,929 in the preceding quarter and $2,400,133 in the first quarter of 1925.

P. H. Gray, formerly with the Colorado Springs Telegraph-Gazette, is the new advertising manager of the Broadmoor Hotel, Colorado Springs. At present its copy is being placed chiefly in the magazines. The account is handled by Albert Frank & Co.

"The Nassau," Long Beach, L. I., hotel is spending $10,000 in newspaper advertising. The account is being placed through Benjamin Landsman of Long Beach and New York. His New York address is 1440 Broadway. S. M. Schultz is the hotel's advertising manager.

Astrom on Olean Times

Merle C. Ostrom, formerly of the Olean Herald and a part owner of the paper, which was recently sold to S. T. Viele of Bridgeport, Conn., has been made advertising manager of the Olean Evening Times. He succeeds H. A. McCaul, who will go south to live.

EARNIST RESIGNS FROM UNITED PRESS ENDING 16 YEARS ASSOCIATION

Hugh Baillie and Robert Bender Promoted to Fill Vacancies Caused by Retirement of Business Vice-President and Ferguson, Now with NEA Service

L. C. EARNIST, vice-president in charge of business, has resigned from the United Press Associations, ending nearly 16 years association with that news distributing agency. Ill-health was announced as the cause of the resignation, and Mr. Earnist told EDITOR & PUBLISHER he intended to retire from business temporarily at least. He will spend the next six months vacationing in California.

Co-incident with Mr. Earnist's retirement, announcement was made of the appointment of Hugh Baillie as general business manager of the United Press, and the elevation of Robert J. Bender as general news manager.

The formal announcements of Mr. Earnist's resignation made by Karl A. Bickel, president, follows:

"I regret very much to announce the retirement of L. C. Earnist from active duty in the organization. During the past year and a half his health has been such as to prevent him from devoting himself to his work as he desired, and on the advice of his physicians, he has determined to take a complete rest from business of at least six months. Following that he may return to the organization, or purchase a newspaper and go into publishing on his own account. Meanwhile, he will keep in touch with us, and we will continue to have the benefit of his advice and counsel."

Earnist was obliged to leave business for three months in 1924, which time he spent under the care of a specialist in gastric disorders. He now expects to spend part of his time at his home at Port Chester, N. Y., and part traveling on the Pacific Coast.

Earnist has been with the United Press for 16 years, taking his first position in the San Francisco bureau. In successive steps he became coast business manager, Chicago division manager, and then general news manager and business manager, being the business head of the concern during a period of its greatest growth He was elected vice-president of the United Press in 1920.

Mr. Bender's promotion follows the resignation of Fred Ferguson to become president of N. E. A. Service, Inc.

IOWA COLLEGE EDITORS HOLD ANNUAL MEET

Edward Price Bell Urges Newspaper League Against War—Shannon Tells Pleasures of Small City Publishing

Eighty-three representatives of 16 Iowa college and university newspapers attended the 10th annual convention of the Iowa College Press Association which closed its sessions in Iowa City, April 17.

The Coe College Cosmos was awarded first prize as winner in the first page make-up competition with the Cornellian of Cornell college, second. The Iowa Wesleyan was awarded third honors; the Scarlet and Black of Grinnell fourth with the Ellsworth Student and Drake Delphic fifth and sixth.

Edward Price Bell, war correspondent of the Chicago Daily News, addressing the convention, declared that the press power should be used for the furtherance of world peace and declared "if the press was not in a position to prevent the World war, it should have been." He urged a generous, honest and fearless presentation of the news. "We cannot build a great democracy on movies, jazz, and comic strips," he said.

Ralph E. Shannon, publisher of the Washington (Ia.) Evening Journal, extolled the life of a small town publisher, telling the collegians that no occupation requires greater versatility, harder effort or more exacting detail than "newspapering" in a small town. Frequently he said the rewards are disappointing but the fascination and the unconscious influence that the small town editor wields makes up for any other disappointment.

"The college graduate from a school of journalism who goes to the larger metropolitan field must hide his identity in a highly-organized, carefully departmentalized institution," Mr. Shannon said, "But the man who identifies himself with a small town newspaper becomes at once the moving spirit back of the enterprise and an extremely important community asset, even more important than the cashier of the bank or the leader of the Village choir. Men respect the small town editor; ladies admire him and babies cry for him. Somewhere back in the dim and distant past, small town editors used to have brains and the tradition still lingers in the minds of many. The editor in the small town learns to love his work with a fervor that forever holds him to his daily grind. Unconsciously he wields an influence that is almost startling when one stops to think of it."

He advocated an aggressive editorial policy but if carried too far, the editor warned, invites bitterness and hatred—a community constantly divided against itself. A certain element always applauds a scathing editorial but the safest policy is to pursue a conservative one, he said.

"One of the greatest services the small town newspaper can perform," he concluded, "is in educating the merchant in advertising, for the latter has not kept pace with the advances made in the last few years in this line of business. The newspaper serves the small town purpose of an advertising agency. It is a fine thing to sell advertising but it is a finer thing to sell results.

Prof. C. H. Weller, director of the Iowa University school of journalism, welcomed the visitors; Prof. Frederick J. Lazell, of the faculty and former editor of the Cedar Rapids Republican, spoke of the relation of the student newspaper to college administration and expressed the opinion that the students should be given the entire control of the paper, but held responsible for what is printed. Harold Norling Swanson, editor of College Humor; Prof. F. W. Beckman, Iowa State College; Loren D. Upton of the University and Prof. L. W. Smith of Drake University spoke the opening day. Harvey Ingham, editor, Des Moines Register; Prof. John Towner, Frederick, editor of the Midland, Iowa University, and Prof. T. R. McConnell of Cornell college were speakers at the concluding session.

ADVERTISING AGENCY AFFAIRS

Young & Rubicam Honored with New Award—Dudley Siddall, Succeeds Morrison as Manager of Phelps Inc.—A. A. A. A. Gives Breakfast to Latin-Americans

YOUNG & RUBICAM, New York and Philadelphia advertising agents who recently won the Harvard Award for the best advertising campaign in 1926, have again won a first prize, this time for a color illustration exhibited at the Art Directors' Club in Philadelphia.

The illustration, called "Must Woman Turn Miser?" was painted by Walter Biggs, a New York artist. It depicted a garden scene, brilliant in color, in which was a woman reclining languidly under an arbor with a man standing pensively before her. It illustrates an advertisement for the Postum Cereal Company.

This is the third time within a year that Young & Rubicam has been honored. Beside the Harvard Award, it received the gold medal in 1924 at the Fourth Annual Commercial Art Exhibit in New York for the "best planned and most artistic advertisement" appearing that year.

The agency was founded in May 1924 by John Orr Young and Raymond E. Rubicam, who had been associated together in another Philadelphia agency. They recently opened offices in New York City.

E. Horter and N. C. Wyeth, artists, were judges of the Philadelphia exhibition, which is being held at the John Wanamaker galleries. Second and third prize were won by N. W. Ayer & Son, second being a painting by Roy Spreeter called, "When the Second Act Was Ended," and third a painting by Pruett Carter entitled, "Who Owns the Telephone?"

Other awards were:

Color, for publication—First, Harvey Dunn, "King Pin," Ladies' Home Journal; second, James Preston, "Court House," Saturday Evening Post; honorable mention, W. J. Aylward, "West Wind," Ladies' Home Journal.

Black and white, for advertising—First, Walter Frank, "The Races," the Eugene McGuckin Company; second, Robert Foster, "Franklin Head with Lettering," University of Pennsylvania; honorable mention, Samuel Otis, "Stabilators," McLain-Simpers Organization.

Black and white, for publication—First, Frank Hoffman, "Bringing in the Outlaws," Ladies' Home Journal; second, Thomas Fogarty, "Cape Cod," Ladies' Home Journal; honorable mention, Paul Gill, "Snowy Public Square," Ladies' Home Journal.

Photography, for advertising—First, R. T. Dooner, "Milk," Richard A. Foley Agency; second, W. H. Hoedt, "The Watch," Tracy-Parry Company; honorable mention, William Shewell Ellis, "Silver Worker," Barrows & Richardson & Alley.

The American Association of Advertising Agencies entertained the visiting Latin-American journalists at breakfast at the Hotel Commodore, April 22.

Dudley Siddall, advertising manager of Loring R. Hoover & Co., Inc., has been appointed to succeed the late Woodman Morrison as manager of the eastern office of George Harrison Phelps, Inc., Detroit advertising agency with a branch office at 60 Broadway. In this capacity, Mr. Siddall will continue to handle the Hoover & Co. account.

Prior to entering advertising work in the New York financial district, where during 1924 and 1925 he was the advertising manager of the North American Company, Mr. Siddall spent 14 years in newspaper work. He started in his "teens" as a reporter on the Kalamazoo Gazette and served on a number of middle western papers including the Cleveland Plain Dealer, Grand Rapids Press and Lansing State Journal. In 1919 he came to New York where for two years he was on the New York Sun. From this paper Mr. Siddall went to NEA Service as a reporter and then became business manager of the United Feature Syndicate.

AS HIS HOME TOWN SEES HIM

Charles L. Knight

CHARLES L. KNIGHT, publisher of the Akron (O.) Beacon Journal, is 20 years behind the time in one phase of his administration of a working organization.

He still believes that the family spirit in any organization is worth cultivating. Long after all the rest of the big employers of his city quit giving Christmas presents and holding annual picnics, the Beacon Journal has continued it.

The result is an unusual feeling of amity among the various departments and between them and their chief. The prevalent argument between the editorial department and the advertising department as to which is the more important and the customary bickering between the local room and the composing room are entirely absent at the Beacon Journal.

The Beacon Journal is one of the very few newspapers in the United States which gives its mechanical departments a week's vacation with full pay.

This was Mr. Knight's Christmas present to the composing room last year.

That the feeling of kindliness is reciprocated by the typographical workers is evidence in the fact that they presented Mr. Knight with a large loving cup on the occasion of last summer's Beacon Journal picnic, which was attended by a large percentage of the personnel.

The result of this feeling between Mr. Knight and his workers is that the Beacon Journal has never in the history of its present management had any difficulty whatever with the union.

The sincerity of Mr. Knight in these matters is well known to his employes. They are conscious of the fact that his attitude is not a studied one, adopted for policy's sake, but springs from a genuine preference for that sort of relation between himself and his personnel.

The entire Beacon Journal outfit was enthusiastic in its support of Mr. Knight which resulted in his election to Congress.

One Paper in Each City Leads

SELDOM in their history have the newspapers of the country been able to render a service to their readers comparable to the achievement of The Consolidated Press members during the recent period of wild speculation in Wall Street.

When, following the weeks of speculative trading, the heavy buying in high-grade securities began, the readers of these newspapers, thanks to the C. P. A. Wall Street Bureau, were fully informed. Only a direct, special leased wire could bring the hour-by-hour developments up to the very close of the New York market.

Throughout all the heavy trading their direct leased wires carried, exclusively in their cities, not only accurate, rapid and complete tabular matter, but comment, explanation and interpretation from a staff of authoritative financial writers.

Stuart P. West, who for twenty years has watched the financial crises of the country, told his readers exactly what the fluctuations meant, analyzed their causes and accurately gauged the course of the market.

George T. Hughes, the bond expert who has never gone wrong in his analyses, explained the effect of the rise and fall of stocks upon the security market.

William F. Heffernan traced the parallel activities of the curb stocks.

The financial pages of the Consolidated Press group supply more than complete and accurate figures. They give a reader-service—the interpretive comment of a staff of expert financial writers whose authority is unquestioned. The Consolidated Press group is represented by only one paper in each city.

Gentlemen:

It may interest you to know that the new Scott "Straight-Unit" Octuple Press which you recently installed for us is geared to run at a maximum speed of 350 cylinder revolutions per minute, and that we have successfully made "collect" runs at this high speed.

We haven't found a single flaw or error in adjustment since the day that your erectors left.

The second day that this press was on edition, its production equalled our other octuple, which has been in operation more than a year, --- and this in spite of a new crew not used to your press.

You can take this letter as our assurance that our third octuple, which we expect to install in the spring of 1927, will be another Scott.

Yours very truly,

THE COURIER-POST COMPANY

Philadelphia spends $8,300 a minute over the counters of its retail stores

Philadelphia's industries cover a range of 300 lines of employment. Her prosperity does not therefore depend upon 2 or 3 lines as in most great manufacturing centres.

These purchases are influenced largely by the Bulletin with its more than 500,000 circulation.

The reader confidence enjoyed by The Evening Bulletin is attested by the fact that The Bulletin's circulation is the largest in Philadelphia and one of the largest in the United States.

The Bulletin goes into practically every home in and around the great city of Philadelphia and makes it possible to reach this huge market of nearly three million people—third largest in America—through one newspaper at one cost.

With a circulation of over half a million copies daily The Bulletin dominates Philadelphia.

[nside Story of Geneva Press Gallery's Jolting of Old-World Diplomacy

Correspondents Refused to Be Hoodwinked by Briand-Chamberlain-Skryznski Into Placing Blame for "Reconciliation" Failure Upon Germans—"Packing" of League Council Foiled—Blow to Old-Time Methods

By A. E. JOHNSON

(Geneva Correspondent, EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LAYING with public opinion and attempting to hoodwink the press is ging to be about as popular as handling namite among certain European statesen when they meet again in Geneva ring the summer and next fall to reganize the Council of the League of lations.

Never in recent years have government icials received such jolts from the publ they are supposed to serve and from te "subservient" press, which they as-red to use, as during the recent disarous special Assembly of the League, uen Germany was kept warming the neva doorstep and the Covenant mbled in the balance while diplomats rned the expensive lesson that the rase "open covenants openly arrived a' was not composed of hollow words.

Diplomacy has still a long, long, way t go before it becomes the ideal vehicle o international understanding that postvr statesmen hope, but the hectic expiences of Chamberlain, Briand, Benes, ther, Stresemann and Skrynzski, when ty tried to mix Locarno spirit with neva atmosphere on the shores of pcid Lake Leman, have proved beyond th slightest doubt that secret deals can n longer be forced down the throats of agullible public—nor can nationalistic ppaganda be successfully dished out tan unprotesting press.

The inside story of what happened at neva has, to a great extent, been told. Tat is, the intrigues and machinations o a group of statesmen who wished to cture and hog-tie the League before it ained its maturity. But the part the pss of the world played in messing up th Machiavellian program—thanks to th modesty of newspaper correspondents ad editors—is still minimized.

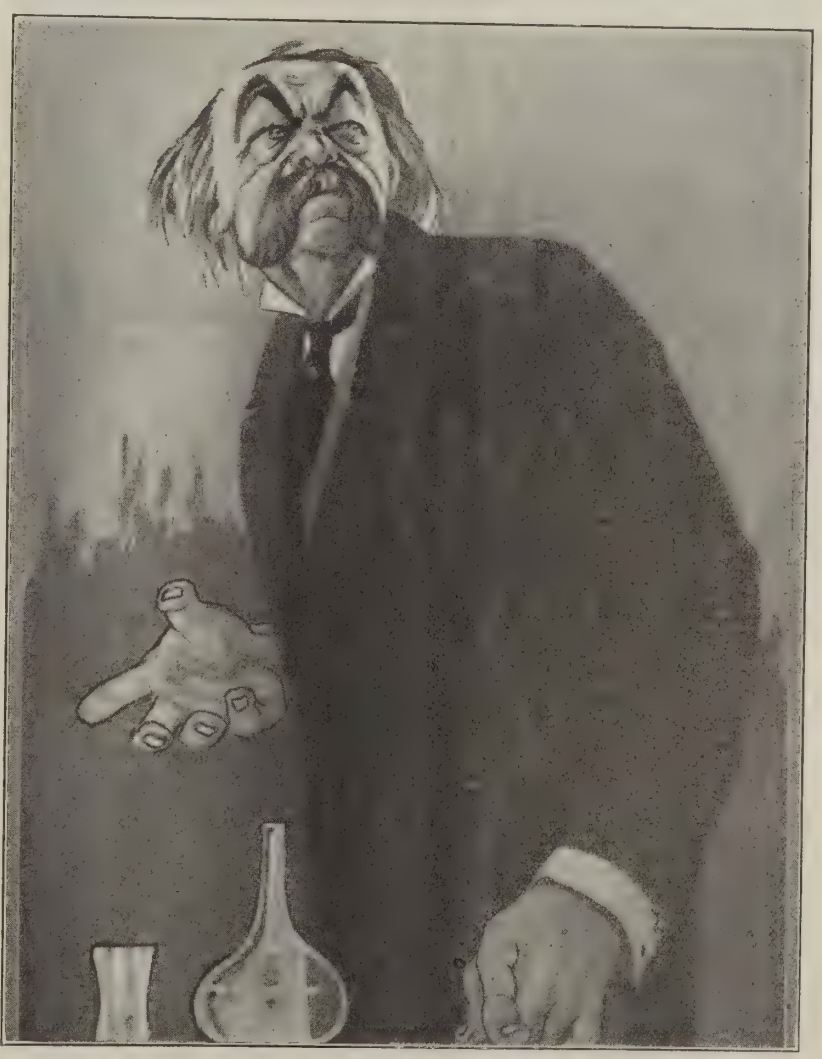
The genesis of what happened at Gene occurred at Locarno. At the famous cference beneath the peace-inducing dows of the beautiful Madonna del Sizo, which hangs on the mountainsi above Lago Maggiore, Chamberlain, Band, Luther, Benes and Skryznski sght to build up a permanent European pce on the unstable foundations of Versales. Almost miraculous things happ-ed—Briand holding rendezvous with th phlegmatic Luther in romantic lakeid roadhouses; private boat rides over pl-id waters in the "Orange Blossom"—t eamer appropriately named inasmuch st was to herald the inception of the 'Child of Peace" which the wise men of h press were to announce to the world. nd then there was the clever piece f stagecraft whereby Sir Austen mberlain assumed the responsibility o the Locarno Treaties—admitted the parnity of a child which carried only nco-German earmarks, because neih its father nor its mother would acknwledge ownership otherwise.

t Locarno, as at all conferences, there va the usual "suspicious" array of corepondents. Pessimism is the chief ingredient in the foreign correspondent's make-up. He looks for a "nigger" in every woodpile, and isn't convinced even if he doesn't find one, that the bogeyman doesn't exist. A trait born from years of experience with pre-war diplomacy—when words were used to conceal thoughts rather than to express them.

That the correspondents did not see most of what happened behind the scenes at Locarno does not follow from the fact that with very few exceptions they "boosted" the achievements of the negotiators. Nearly everyone knew that Briand was pulling the strings. Nearly all knew that Chamberlain was a "puppet" and played the hero-role with undoubted sincerity. They "fell" for the "good-will" propaganda because they wanted to help along the obvious purpose of the pourparlers—the assurance of some sort of a peace in Europe. There were many times when the truth, if told, might have seriously jeopardized the entire proceedings. And on these occasions, Sir Austen confided in the British press, Briand gave orders to the French press and Stresemann and Luther placed the Germans on their honor. And the Americans, as constructive as any and all the rest, refrained from destructive criticism.

But what the negotiators did not let the press in on at Locarno was the Franco-Polish-Italian deal regarding the reorganization of the Council of the League. That was the probable cause of its undoing at Geneva.

With the exception of the dispatches of a few American correspondents, Locarno, at its conclusion, was heralded as the end of a perfect day—until Geneva.



At the seat of the League, Chamberlain, Briand and the Italians—this time in the big parade rather than skirting the edges,—again sought to use the press as they had at Locarno. Chamberlain from the beginning assumed the role of "peace maker" and wanted to "guide" the tenor of dispatches sent by British correspondents. But Chamberlain had not counted the odds. Almost without exception the English correspondents were suspicious of their foreign secretary. And soon Chamberlain became suspicious of them.

With the exception of a few "official" French papers and the Italian press, which was amenable to the Fascist censorship at all times, there was not a newspaperman at Geneva who was not looking for trouble. And there was not an opportunity overlooked to expose existing and planned "deals." The so-called pro-Germanness of the Scandinavian and neutral press was in reality pro-Leagueness. The "observers" saw Chamberlain indulging in "peace-talk" on one hand and seeking to use a "mailed fist" on the other—against Sweden, against Germany, and in the end against Brazil.

Had the Allied statesmen played the game with the newspapermen at Geneva as they did in the earlier stages of Locarno, or in fact all the way through the negotiations there, it is doubtful if the correspondents would have gone to the lengths they did in "exposing" every misstep, many of which were unintentional. But the "deal" had put them on their guard.

Then there was what has been repeatedly characterized as the most brazen attempt ever made to use the press in circulating a bald lie in an effort to bully the German delegation into yielding on a matter of principle. When Luther and Stresemann steadfastly—and logically—refused to make any pledges as to what their attitude would be on re-organization of the Council, "until Germany had become a member and had ample time to study the Council's workings and needs," the clever Briand, by the simple policy of making repeated "offers" to the Germans put them in the position of having occupied an impregnable stronghold too

TRADE BOARD AD CASE HEARINGS START WITH AGENTS ON STAND

Practices of American Association of Advertising Agencies Introduced As Evidence—Old Reports on "Direct" Business Read

INDICATIONS are that the hearing of the A.A.A.A., the A.N.P.A., the S.N.P.A., the A.P.A., and others involved in the charge of the Federal Trade Commission that they are operating in restraint of trade in the matter of agency commissions, will be a bitterly contested series of skirmishes if not battles. Directly, the attempt of the Commission is to prove that the A.A.A.A. is coercing the newspapers into refusing t ogive direct advertisers the discount from card rates on advertising they now allow to advertising agencies:

The hearing opened on April 29 at 45 Broadway, New York. Present for the commission were John W. Addison, Examiner; John R. Dowlan and Eugene W. Burr, chief counsel. Clark McKercher, of McKercher & Link, represented the A. A. A. A.; Charles A. Bodek, of Bodek & Raphael, the A.P.A.; J. T. Finley, of Finley & Campbell, the S.N.P.A.; and G. B. Plante, of Morris Plante & Saxe, the A.N.P.A. James F. Hoge was present to represent the applicants.

C. A. Hope, assistant to the executive secretary of the A.A.A.A., was the first witness. Through him Mr. Burr, for the Commission, endeavored to introduce, as exhibits, printed matter defining the qualifications for membership in the A.A.A.A., and extracts from reports of annual meetings of that body, as well as the code of ethics established and a published list of agencies published. Strenuous objections from all the attorneys representing the respondents prevented them, especially because Mr. Burr would not concede the right of the respondents to do likewise without first placing in evidence complete copies of documents from which they might wish to quote.

Returning to the battle in the afternoon Mr. Burr found a way. Reading from excerpts taken from the records of the A.A.A.A. he got from Mr. Hope admission that what he read actually appeared in them. Over the objections offered, the Examiner admitted the first question and answer, noting exceptions taken by opposing counsel. Under an agreement thereafter all the reports of the A.A.A.A. of its annual meetings, together with excerpts from them made by Mr. Burr, were admitted without further argument.

One of the exhibits thus admitted was a list compiled by the A.A.A.A. showing the newspapers and their record on the advertising of Baker-Robinson, Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., and Vick Chemical Co. This was referred to by Mr. Burr as "the blacklist," though he withdrew the term on Mr. Plante's objection. The list, including practically all the newspapers in the United States, showed the standing of each in respect of these concerns, as to accepting their advertising, giving so-called "net" rates, refusing to do so, declining the business or charging so-called "gross" rates.

Among the excerpts were a number taken from the reports of the late Collin Armstrong, then chairman of the A.A. A.A. newspaper committee. The commission contends that parts of his reports indicate co-ordinating operation in restraint of trade. One of the excerpts, of which there were many, was taken as typical of the tone of the others. It says:

"Your executive officers and the committee agreed that the first important step to be taken was to endeavor to establish the one-price principle for national advertising. We were fortunate last fall, soon after our appointment, in having brought to our attention by specials and publishers of the advent into the Northern and Middle West territory of a direct advertiser who for years had bought space on his own terms, i.e., agency net rates, from Southern newspapers, and who endeavored to pursue the same policy here. We called attention to this fact, together with such arguments as we could advance, against the practice of allowing agency net rates to concerns that neither create nor develop advertising, whose only excuse for claiming such rates is that they maintain an advertising department of their own, ignoring the fact that practically every national advertiser of importance employing agency service does the same thing.

"We have ample evidence that the interest we evinced in this matter in behalf of the Association deterred many publishers and specials from accepting these rate-cutting contracts. We were encouraged by our success in this case to take up the matter of agency net rates to direct advertisers in its entirety and generally. A preliminary announcement of that purpose was made to publishers by the American Newspaper Publishers Association and in the American Press, last December, and was followed by a direct message to publishers last March."

The report of which this is an excerpt is of the annual convention held in Chicago in October, 1920.

The hearings continued Friday and Saturday.

N. Y. CITY PROSECUTOR PRAISES DAILIES

Banton Says Aid Given Him by Newspapers Was Equal to 2,000 Additional Policemen and 10 Judges in Curbing Crime

Support given him by New York newspapers in his drive against crime was equal to 2,000 additional policemen and 10 additional judges, District Attorney Banton, of New York, declared in an address in Washington this week.

"When I became District Attorney of New York County on April 17, 1922, there were 2,700 indictments awaiting trial," said Mr. Banton. "It was three months before I could indict any person and two years after the indictment before I could try one on bail. The Legislature gave me additional courts and additional machinery with which to work on all crimes of violence.

"The result of these efforts for the last four years is that there are now only 288 indictments awaiting trial in New York, and I can try any one within three weeks after a plea of not guilty.

"When I began this drive against crime I laid before the newspapers my plan and asked for support in placing before the public with the same degree of fullness that they gave to the crime itself and the person committing it the results of my activity to combat the crime situation. They gladly gave me their support and featured this as a news item both in enlarged type and in headlines.

"The result of this publicity was equal to 2,000 additional policemen and ten additional judges. Criminals then became panic stricken. Since the first of this year, 2,098 cases have been disposed of."

Murdock and Son Going Abroad

M. M. Murdock, publisher the Wichita (Kans.) Eagle, has been in New York for two weeks attending the Associated Press and A. N. P. A. meetings. Mr. Murdock will sail May 29 for a European tour accompanied by his son Marsh, who will be graduated early in May from the School of Journalism of Columbia University.

A. N. P. A. AD BUREAU RE-ELECTS OFFICERS

Two New Members of Committee in Charge—Plans Discussed for Extending Service—Chicago Office Moves—Three Dailies Join

Plans for extending the service of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association were discussed at a meeting held late last week, when William F. Rogers, Boston Transcript, was re-elected chairman, Harry Chandler, Los Angeles Times, vice-chairman, and Howard Davis, New York Herald Tribune, treasurer. Mr. Rogers has been chairman of the bureau since 1919.

Just what service extensions were in the making were not divulged. The promised improvements, it was said, were made possible by increased revenue.

Three newspapers have recently become members of the Bureau, the New York Evening Journal, the New York American, and the Kansas City (Mo.) Journal-Post.

The Bureau's Chicago office has moved from the Marquette Building to new and larger headquarters at 59 East Madison street.

Two new members were appointed to the committee in charge by John Stewart Bryan, Richmond News-Leader, newly elected president of A. N. P. A. They are F. I. Ker, Hamilton (Ont.) Spectator, succeeding W. C. R. Harris, Toronto Star; and Walter A. Strong, Chicago Daily News, succeeding John B. Woodward.

The remainder of the committee was reappointed as follows:

William J. Hofmann, Portland Oregonian; Fleming Newbold, Washington Star; David B. Plumb, Troy Record; Allison Stone, Providence Journal; Lou Wiley, New York Times; E. W. Pattersons, Chicago Tribune; Charles D. Atkinson, Atlanta Journal; John S. McCarrens, Cleveland Plain Dealer; Frank I. Burgess, La Crosse (Wis.) Tribune, and David E. Town, Hearst Newspaper.

PULITZER WINNERS TO BE NAMED MAY 3

FIVE PROPOSALS OF AID REACH VANDERBILT

Young Publisher Claims $1,000,000 Offered for One of his Three Tabloids—Advertises Need of $300,000—Father Discontinues Loans After Advancing Million.

FIVE proposals of financial assistance, including an offer to purchase one of the Vanderbilt tabloids for $1,000,000, were offered Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., president of the Vanderbilt Newspapers, Inc., and his attorney Dudley Field Malone in New York on April 29, according to an announcement made by them to reporters Thursday afternoon.

The proposals followed a sensational plea for $300,000 to keep the three Vanderbilt tabloids running for a period of six months, when Vanderbilt, Jr., said they would be on a paying basis and he would be able to meet stock obligations. The three papers are the Los Angeles News, the San Francisco Herald, and the Miami Tab.

Vanderbilt Jr., and his attorneys, on April 28 announced the need of $300,000, declaring that on last Friday Brig. Gen. Cornelius Vanderbilt had ceased loaning his son money to keep his papers going. The father had already loaned his son $1,080,000 in demand notes, and balked when asked for the final $300,000, Vanderbilt Jr., declared. Vanderbilt Jr., said he was willing to pledge his $1,500,000 patrimony to raise the sum.

The "cry for help" went out first in the form of an advertisement written by Mr. Malone in letter form and sent for publication at space rates in the New York Times and the New York American. The American published the advertisement. The Times refused to run it stating it conflicted with advertising rules of its censorship department. In its news columns The Times printed Mr. Malone's advertisement calling attention to the fact it had been refused as advertising.

Neither Mr. Vanderbilt Jr., nor Mr. Malone, interviewed by EDITOR & PUBLISHER at Mayfair House, a Park avenue apartment, would go into detail regarding the proposals for financial assistance. Other than saying that the $1,000,000 offer apparently came from a reliable and substantial source, that it would be investigated and would be accepted if it proved all right, they would not discuss the proposal to purchase one of the tabloids. They would not even say which tabloid it was.

Vanderbilt Jr., said a call had been issued for a meeting of the board of directors of Vanderbilt Newspapers, Inc. This meeting would be held in Los Angeles in 30 days. It was to be held to elect a new board which would have the "legal power" to sell any of the tabloids or continue them as they saw fit.

The suggested $300,000 figure declared adequate to carry the properties was arrived at following investigations carried out by Harvey L. Johnson, a Chicago efficiency expert.

It is not my figure," Vanderbilt Jr., said.

He said the gross revenue of his three tabloids was now $200,000 a month. Sixteen months ago they were losing $80,000 a month, now he claimed the monthly loss amounted to $25,000.

When asked if any of his tabloids had ever previously been on the sale market, Vanderbilt Jr., denied it emphatically.

Philip A. Payne, managing editor of the New York Mirror," he declared, "suggested to me at one time that he would purchase the Miami Tab. But his offer did not extend beyond the suggestion stage."

The young millionaire became twisted when trying to explain the stock situation of his corporation. Finally he got it straightened out in his own mind as follows:
